Ike's $2,000,000 Radio-TV Spot Splurge to Wind Up Campaign

What is probably the most intensive saturation spot campaign in the annals of American broadcasting will wind up the Dwight D. Eisenhower-for-President election campaign in the final three-week stretch.

With a war chest of $2,000,000 (now being raised in an all-out drive being masterminded by John Hay (Jock) Whitney), the Eisenhower forces are now in the process of buying up all the station break availabilities on all television and radio stations in all the strategic areas throughout the nation. These will be spotted over a 21-day period leading right up to Election Day, all carrying a personal "get behind me" message from the GOP Presidential aspirant.

A number of the nation's major advertisers have agreed to relinquish their contracted time on radio and television to pave the way for the Ike spots. CBS over the weekend finalized that web's hefty chunk of spot biz, arranging for preemptions, etc.

The saturation campaign will be confined to limited areas, where the need for additional Eisenhower support is felt to be the strongest.

While regular national advertisers in the past have pacted for $2,000,000 worth of spots, it's the first time that such coin has ever been poured into a three-week saturation campaign. Multiplied in

Coast Trust-Buster Aims to Force Oldies To Be Sold to Tele

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Release of backlogs of old films to television is the ultimate aim of the U.S. Department of Justice in its 16m antitrust action against the major studios. That was the statement of William C. Dixon, chief of the antitrust division on the Coast, at a meeting of the National Society of Television Producers in Hollywood.

Dixon will be chief prosecutor when the case comes up for trial. Admitting that it would be an economic hardship on the film industry to force the release of new pictures, he said the real object in the suit is the backlogs.

He added that the Justice Department feels that a conspiracy exists among the majors to prevent TV from using its product. Questioned about the effect on exhibitors he said: "It's a question of law enforcement, not to be guided by the interests of any special groups."

O'Connor to Get Scale For Nitery One-Shot

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Donald O'Connor will do a nitery stint New Year's Eve—at straight AGVA scale.

O'Connor, who is prepping a nitery routine with Gwen Carter and Sidney Miller, agreed to do a one-nighter for Martin Prell, owner of the new Sahara Hotel, Las Vegas, which opens its doors in a fortnight. Prell is an old friend of the O'Connor family, dating back to vaude days.

New Year's Eve was the only night O'Connor had open—so he will be the holiday attraction at the spot and give his new nitery act a break-in while repaying old favors.

Series Coverage Down to Fine TV Point; No Changes

World Series, which opens again today (Wed.) to the biggest baseball audience in history because of television's rapidly-expanding set circulation, will have no radical changes in TV coverage technique. Indicating that the art of picking up a baseball game on video is now an exact science, camera directors who will call the shots from both Brooklyn's Ebbets Field and Yankee Stadium, N.Y., told VARIETY this week their systems of cover-

RADIO-TV ACTS SHYING FROM ADLAI STUMPING?

There have been recurring reports that radio-television personalities have been given the high sign to stay in the background and remain non-committal on their political allegiance in the election campaign.

As result, the Stevenson-for-President forces entrusted with the task of lining up show biz support on fund-raising benefits, confessed this week that they were practically ready to throw up their hands in despair over their inability to recruit name performers.

The Stevenson committee in N.Y. admits it is completely con-

EDISON SPARKED MAMMOTH BIZ

By JIM WALSH

Directly or indirectly, the record industry has poured millions of dollars into the pockets of show biz. Recording artists, music publishers, songwriters, arrangers and others all have shared, and still share, in the take. But if Thomas Alva Edison hadn't shouted "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into a crude cylinder contrivance 75 years ago and if Eldridge Johnson hadn't founded his Victor Talking Machine Co. at the turn of the century and unrelentingly plugged the home entertainment aspects of the new machine, the platter bonanza might never have materialized.

Because the phonograph is now observing its diamond anniversary this seems good time to pay tribute to Edison's favorite invention and Johnson's founding of the modern industry from the showman's standpoint and trace briefly its development from days when Edward M. Favor became the first professional to make a record to the present-day era of echo chambers, self-accomp disking and kindred electronic gimmicks.

In a nutshell, Edison was responsible for conceiving the instrument and developing the working model. Johnson, combination of artist, businessman and inventor, contributed not only many technical advances, but most important, elevated the machine to the status of a musical instrument and vigorous-

Next Rocky-Joe Go on Home TV?

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Present indications point to the return championship match between Joe Walcott and Rocky Marciano being shown on home television under the banner of the Pabst Brewing Co., sponsors of the regular Wednesday night International Boxing Club's bouts on CBS radio and TV. Dickering is currently under way between the suds firm and the IBC and it's understood Pabst will go as high as $125,000 for the title fight.

The second go-around between Jersey Joe and Rocky has been tentatively set for early next year with the Chi Stadium as the likely site. The first tiff last week was grabbed off by Theatre Network Television and was fed to 50 theatres across the country with home

Disclick Fastest Route to Boffo B.O. And Stardom; From $75 to $7,500 Wkly.

By ABEL GREEN

The manner in which the record today is "king" of Tin Pan Alley has been under discussion and reappraisal within the music biz generally for some time. The manner in which a hit record can project a personality into household fame and pyramid the newcomer's earnings to fabulous proportions is an ever refreshing phenomenon of show biz.

A record today means more for an artist than a hit film, a hit radio program or a hit TV show. There are more people trying to get onto records nowadays than into Hollywood. It is the quickest and most surefire way for national and international acclaim as witness only the latterday clicks of such diverse personalities as Johnnie Ray, Frankie Laine, Guy Mitchell, Patti Page, Rosemary Clooney and the Four Aces.

From nowhere they have climbed into potent boxoffice forces and fabulous earning power that makes a Hollywood star's income look like a tip to a bellhop.

These disk-made personalities are all illustrative of that new show biz theorem: the shortest route to the $7,500-$10,000 a week class is around a platter groove. Ray came out of Cleveland and Detroit taverns, at $75 a week, into the big time via his Columbia and Okeh etchings.

The same rag-to-riches saga holds for such other newcomers as Guy Mitchell, Don Cornell, Tony Bennett, the Four Aces, all of

'Running Out of Yokels,' Tex. Fair Cleans Midway

Dallas, Sept. 30.

R. L. Thornton, prez of the State Fair of Texas, says there will be no off-color shows on the midway this year. Further, there will be no bingo or similar games.

According to Thornton, "we're trying to build the cleanest midway in America." In addition to that, "America is running out of yokels," he pointed out in an address before a group of local ministers and laymen.

Last year the city manager blacked out the State Fair midway, closing 44 of the 45 game concessions on the ground that they were forms of gambling.

Glenn Ford Would Use Free Pix Tix As Vote Incentive

By MIKE KAPLAN

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

A nationwide all-industry campaign to spur the drive to get every registered voter to the polls on election day by offering them free admissions is suggested by actor Glenn Ford. Scheme, which he has labeled "Voter's Open (film) House," would encompass each and every situation in the 48 states and be tied directly to local campaigns to stimulate greater interest in the national elections.

COAST DISK JOCK USING PHONE TO NIX AGVA BAN

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Deejay George Jay probes what he thinks is a loophole tonight (Tues.) in American Guild of Variety Artists' edict that any member appearing on a disk jockey program emanating from a cafe or eatery must be paid. Jay is going to interview performers by telephone.

Currently working at The King's Restaurant, Jay came up with the scheme to circumvent the AGVA ban, which hit his four-hour nightly program hard since he leaned heavily on personalities to brighten

Wilmington Hotel OK On 'Climate' Negro Actors Under Revised Policy

Through the quiet efforts of several influential show business figures, Negro actors will now be admitted to the Hotel duPont, Wilmington. New policy will be effective next week when the new Moss Hart play, "Climate of Eden," plays a three-day tryout at the Playhouse, Wilmington. Hotel and theatre, both in the same building, are owned by the duPonts.

When the question of the hotel's racial policy arose with the booking of "Eden" into the Playhouse, several friends of the show's management sought to solve the situation quietly. Idea was that if the hotel were approached in an amicable spirit, without allowing public attention to create a controversy,

Chaplin Gets Bid to Command Vaude Show; British Rap McGranery Move

London, Sept. 23.

Bids are being made to Charles Chaplin to take part in the Royal Command variety show at the London Palladium Nov. 3. If Chaplin accepts, it would mean that, in company with other participating artists, he will be presented to the Queen, the Duke of Edinburgh and other members of the royal family.

Press coverage on Chaplin's return to London has been on an unprecedented scale, far outstripping the space normally given to visiting royalty and other distinguished celebrities. His visit was preceded by newspaper and mag biographical series, and the news while en route of U. S. Att. Gen. James P. McGranery's ban action got an almost unanimous press reaction. Newspapers of all political sides were critical of the action.

The People, in a lead article, said the decision was "really too much to stomach from the big brother of democracy. It's the most grave move that has so far been

CANTOR PROGRESSING IN HOSP AFTER ATTACK

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Eddie Cantor is reported making progress at the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital here following a heart attack at his home early Monday morning (29). Attack followed by a few hours his television show on Colgate Comedy Hour on NBC-TV, Sunday (29), which has been widely acclaimed as one of his best.

As a result of the attack, Cantor is forced to call off his tour on behalf of the Red Cross Blood Bank and Bonds for Israel. He was to have started the jaunt today (Tues.).

Prior to the show, Cantor complained of a chest pain. He was examined after the telecast by his medicos, but electro-cardiograph showed no alarming symptoms. He went to Temple for Yom Kippur services following the examination. Attending Cantor are Drs. Julius Kahn and Edward Shapiro. Dr. Eliot Corday was called in as consultant.

Jessel Dickers Gleason For 'Sweet 16' Biopic

For his second projected indie pic production since exiting 20th-Fox studios, George Jessel is dickering with Jackie Gleason to star in a biopic of oldtime songwriter-vaudevillian James Thornton. Latter is best known for "When You and I Were Sweet 16."

As his first venture, Jessel has plans for a Jimmy Durante starrer, "Rip Van Winkle."

Paris Lifts Ban on 'Zola'

Paris, Sept. 30.

"Life of Emile Zola" (WB), heretofore banned here because of the touchy French attitude towards the Dreyfus case handled in the film, has been given special licensing to appear here at Studio 28 during the 50th anni of the death of Zola. Pic was made in 1937.

Film has been shown privately during the last few years but this will be the first public showing. Studio 28 is a small-seater art house.

HUTTON ROCKS 'EM AT PALLADIUM BOW

London, Sept. 30.

Betty Hutton proved to be the liveliest headliner of the season at her Palladium opening yesterday (Mon.). Supported by the Skylarks, Miss Hutton received a vociferous ovation for a boisterous show lasting an hour.

Stint was highlighted by her recreation of the Blossom Seeley role in "Somebody Loves Me" (Par) and climaxed with an expert trapeze act.

Truman Plugs for Wash. Music Hall, Opera House; Aids Symph Orch Drive

Washington, Sept. 30.

Washington needs an auditorium seating 40,000, plus a music hall and opera house, President Truman said here last Friday (26). Speaking at the opening luncheon of the National Symphony's subscription drive, he said the capital should be developed into the greatest music centre in the world.

The President, who took time out from a crowded schedule to hypo interest in the orch's drive by his appearance at the luncheon, took a sock at Congress for its failure to vote bills to give the city a large opera house and entertainment centre. He pointed out that he had fought for this during his Senate days and still urged such an appropriation.

The President was rewarded for his patronage of the town's symphony group and his keen interest in music by being tabbed "the most musical President in history." A scroll bearing this testimonial, and expressing appreciation to him for lending "the prestige and dignity of his high office to the cause of good music," was presented to Mr. Truman by Gordon S. Reid, prexy of the National Symphony Orchestra Assn. Mrs. Truman witnessed the award.

With a slogan of "music for the entire family," current drive is accenting a number of musical innovations, including a concert for the under-six moppet set. Spurred on by its record-breaking sale last season, during which it led all longhair orchs in the country for percentage of gain in subscriptions and b.o., group aims for a season sellout this year. Last year's gain was 25% over the previous season.

Hypoing interest in the drive is the announcement that Dr. Howard Mitchell, the orch's maestro, has been named winner of this year's Henry Hadley Award for having played more works of American composers last season than any other conductor. Mitchell has just returned from Austria, where he was sole U. S. judge at the Meistersinger Music Festival.

Rooney to Korea

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Mickey Rooney and five other entertainers planed west from Travis Air Base for a 21-day tour of military posts in Korea, Japan and Hawaii.

Others in the troupe are Alice Tyrell, Denah Prince, Red Barry, Dick Winslow and Ukie Sherin.

Deke Aylesworth, Ex-NBC, RKO Prez, Dies in N.Y. at 66

Merlin Hall (Deke) Aylesworth, 66, first president of NBC and later chief exec of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and its various affiliated groups, died at St. Luke's Hospital, N. Y., yesterday (Tues.). He had suffered from a liver ailment and had been in St. Luke's since last April, weakening steadily because of a disinclination to eat.

A native of Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aylesworth was probably the only triple-threat showman, serving as an exec in radio, motion pictures and the newspaper publishing industry, as well as vaudeville. Besides being prez and board chairman of RKO Pictures and the Keith-Albee Corp., he was also on the exec board of the Scripps-Howard newspaper chain for a year and, from 1938-40, was publisher for Roy Howard of the N. Y. World-Telegram.

Aylesworth spent his youth in Colorado, receiving a law degree from the U. of Denver. He entered local politics soon after his graduation and served for a time as Republican chairman of Larimer County, Col. In 1914, he became

Col Backs Judy On Her 'Stupidity'

Columbia prexy Harry Cohn and other company execs were reported this week in agreement with Judy Holliday's self-analysis on her "stupidity" in supporting Communist-front organizations. Col is in support of the comedy star to the extent that the employment deal with her will be kept in force.

Miss Holliday characterized herself as "stupid" in testimony before the Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee, which was released in Washington last week.

Col is convinced that Miss Holliday has no Communist sympathies, and consequently is continuing with plans to star her in future pix. She has a one-film-a-year deal with the studio.

No immediate property is lined up for the comedienne because she won't be available for some time. Miss Holliday is to become a mother in November.

London, Sept. 30.

Fred Russell, O. B. E., preceptor of the Grand Order of Water Rats, a fraternal organization of British performers, will be feted Sunday (5) on his 90th birthday at the Park Lane Hotel here. Government reps, press, entertainment, industry and sports figures will attend the function.

Wee Georgie Wood, yet performer, is in charge of the event.

Juve Hysteria for U. S. Stars Worries Glasgow

Glasgow, Sept. 30.

Moppet hysteria over U. S. stars arriving for dates here is engaging attention of police here. Crowds of screeching kids jam railway stations, hotel entrances and airports when name singers or film stars arrive.

Stars themselves take fright at the howling mobs and are smuggled to their hotels to escape frenzy of these juvenile admirers. Danny Kaye, Dorothy Lamour, Larry Parks and Betty Garrett, Andrews Sisters, and Frankie Laine all have run the gauntlet.

Curiously, these receptions are confined to U. S. stars, and not given British artistes.

Hope-Crosby P.A.s Net 21½G for London Variety

London, Sept. 23.

In one day, the London tent of the Variety Club raised $21,500 for charity. This was last Sunday (21) when the tent organized an all-star golf tourney in the afternoon and a concert at night. The golf match, in which Bob Hope and Bing Crosby played Donald Peers and Ted Ray, attracted over 7,000 and netted $6,500. At least half the game had to be abandoned because of crowds surging over the green. All the proceeds were devoted to the Duke of Edinburgh's field fund.

The concert, at which Bob Hope and Bing Crosby appeared, raised about $15,000 for the Clubland Settlement and the Midwife Teachers' Training College.

FILMS' WAVE OF B. O. OPTIMISM

The 'New' RKO

Howard Hughes once observed that RKO, which represents 10% of his holdings, has consumed 70% of his time, and hence felt he should dispose of it. For show business that is a good move all around. It brings RKO back into show biz.

Hughes is a Texan with the Midas touch and probably inspired the crack that the Lone Star State produces only "poor millionaires" and "rich millionaires." It is inconceivable that he will ever be entirely out of the picture business.

To the industry RKO is an important component. It's one of the Big Eight of film firms, an old, established, time-honored entity which has gone through a number of transitions in management but has always remained an important link between the Hollywood assembly line and the ultimate consumer. In between RKO's distribution agency has been, perhaps, even more important as a service to the trade. Certainly in recent years, through showmanship and resourcefulness, the executive toppers have done yeomen effort to keep the sales agency well-greased, not only for outside producers like Sam Goldwyn, Walt Disney, et al., but also via independently acquired films from far corners of the globe. An instance of the latter is the Japanese-made "Rashomon," and there have been shrewd showmanship sallies via surprise reissues, notably Disney's "Snow White" and most recently the 19-year-old "King Kong," which may produce a "found" $3,000,000 fresh coin into the coffers.

The new management, with the exception of showman Sherrill C. Corwin, is of the same "investment" calibre as Hughes. They are Chicago "new millionaires" and Texas oilmen. But they apparently have an adventure and a zest for the business, which have already been manifest in Ralph Stolkin's fortunate investment with Corwin in one indie Martin & Lewis film. Corwin made it a strong point to VARIETY that the new RKO management would be dedicated pronto to "making pictures and servicing the theatres as soon as possible."

RKO's shortcoming has been dominantly at the fountainhead of production. On worldwide operation and administration, prexy Ned Depinet and Phil Reisman (foreign chief) have one of the best distribution setups extant. Their problem has been getting something to distribute. When the new management echelon assembles in New York this week this should be resolved. Patently it's the first order of business. For the picture business it's a big plus.

Propose Wald Get 5% Profits, 3-Year Pact as Chief of RKO Production

Proposal to name Jerry Wald head of RKO production, in a deal giving him 5% of film profits in perpetuity, will be taken up at a board meeting of the new syndicate in control of the company in New York tomorrow (Thurs.) Sherill Corwin, member of the new owner group headed by Ralph Stolkin, is slated to become v.p. in charge of operations. Stolkin and attorney Arnold Grant have been mentioned for the board chairmanship.

Wald discussed the projected top berth on the Coast Sunday and Monday with Corwin and Greg Bautzer, attorney active in negotiating the buyout of Howard Hughes.

Basis of the talks, in addition to the 5% cut, is a three-year employment deal for Wald and Milton Pickman, his exec aide. Corwin will present the proposed terms to the board session, with Wald remaining in Hollywood. It's under-

Goldwyn's 'Best Deal' For 'Andersen' Preems; First $200,000 to Him

Under what Samuel Goldwyn calls "the best deal I ever made," his day-date premieres of "Hans Christian Andersen," at the Criterion and the Paris, N. Y., give him the first $200,000 gross from the Broadway stand and the first eight weeks' receipts from the art theatre. Thereafter Charles Moss, operator of the Criterion, recoups his operating expenses for the time period it took for Goldwyn to garner the first 200G intake. The same is true for the Paris—it gets back its operating overhead for the initial eight weeks.

The theatres' profit comes from a 10% cut of the next money that comes in, after overhead, and thereafter both they and Goldwyn share 90-10 on the net profits.

"Andersen," Danny Kaye starrer, opens Thanksgiving Day at both houses.

Schary-Schenck Confab

Metro production chief Dore Schary, in New York from the Coast, is huddling with Loew's-Metro prez Nicholas M. Schenck on the upcoming year's program sked.

Studio topper also is working on film campaigns, and between business chores, aims to get "some relaxation." He returns to Culver City Oct. 26.

Industry Sees Depinet Staying As RKO Prexy

While official decisions have yet to be made, widespread trade belief is that Ned E. Depinet will continue as president of RKO Pictures. New board of directors repping the Ralph Stolkin syndicate now in control meets in New York this week and will formally vote on the chief exec and a new production head.

Depinet, it's understood, hasn't received any indication from the new controlling stockholders on his future status. However, vet industryites point up that he's the probable choice on a number of counts, one of which is that chief exec talent is hard to come by. It's further underscored that no one is better acquainted with the RKO operation.

Also strongly favoring Depinet, it's said, is his relationship with indie producers, who have been an important source of film supply for RKO distribution over the years, including Samuel Goldwyn and Walt Disney. It's recalled that only last week Goldwyn publicly complimented RKO's "fine management" and said he believed the new owners would "not be silly enough" to make personnel changes.

CHIEF EXECS HIGH ON BIZ FUTURE

Greatest wave of optimism since the peak prosperity of the postwar years is spreading across the film industry. And the upbeat talk is heard from hard-headed Wall Streeters in addition to industryites known in the past for their realistic appraisals of market conditions.

Within a recent period Paramount president Barney Balaban, indie producer Samuel Goldwyn and numerous key exhibitors at the Theatre Owners of America convention in Washington have expressed confidence in the trade's future welfare.

New quarterly release of Value Line & Investment Survey, size-up of securities on the New York Stock Exchange published by Arnold Bernhard & Co., favorably commented on the majority of film company issues. Further, the publication reported a bright outlook for the industry for at least the next three to five years.

Film company execs relate that there's still a number of pix to which the public is indifferent, and these collapse at the b.o. But the point they make is that there's a growing number of productions swinging into release which are clicking. Also, as Goldwyn put it, some films such as "Greatest Show

August Spurt

After a July slump, the total market value of amusement shares recovered smartly as of Aug. 31, according to figures released by the N. Y. Stock Exchange last week. Curiously, the rise of amusement stocks was not matched by industry bonds. These dipped from a July aggregate of $7,053,368 to $6,963,630 the end of August.

Stock total climbed from July's $1,196,914,972 to $1,226,577,032 on Aug. 31. Average per share also spurted, going from $19.61 to $19.96. Hike in film company stock quotations was attributed to general confidence in the industry's future. Upswing in radio and TV stocks was largely due to the FCC's TV station unfreeze, among other factors.

Slashed Budget, Rising Costs Hinder State Dept. Pix Barrage Abroad

U. S. State Department is making progress in its efforts to make friends and influence people abroad via the film medium, but the project is still woefully short of its final goal.

Menaced on one hand by Congressional cuts in funds and on the other by rising costs, the films division of the International Information Administration is struggling to keep within its budget and yet tailor its operations to the changing needs of individual countries where it aims to take the edge off the Russian propaganda barrage.

The worldwide audience for the State Dept. information pix is growing every year and in 1952-53 should substantially exceed the 350,000,000 to 400,000,000 who are estimated to have been exposed to ~~them the prior year. However,~~ despite its scope and the apparent effectiveness of the increasingly aggressive approach, the American story on film is told to only 10% or 20% of the potential audience every four or five months.

Estimate was given to VARIETY this week by Herbert Edwards, assistant administrator of the Information Administration and chief of the films division. Edwards, on a short routine jaunt to his New York headquarters from Washington, said he wasn't at all sure where

WB Plays No Favorites

Warner Bros. is playing no favorites in its religious-themed pix.

With the current "The Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" having a Catholic slant and the forthcoming "The Jazz Singer" a Jewish background, the studio has purchased a yarn about a Protestant minister, "The Gown of Glory," a best-selling novel by Agnes Sligh Turnball.

French, Japanese Situations Set For Prexies' Powwow

Next steps to be taken and policy to be followed in the resumption of talks with the French Government on a new film pact, as well as the Japanese situation, are on the agenda as the company presidents and foreign managers meet in New York tomorrow (Thurs.).

Meeting originally was to have taken in arbitration, but the topic was dropped as a subject of discussion earlier in the week.

Last week's MPEA approval of the French surprise offer to remit $1,200,000 from frozen American earnings, sans strings, at the official rate of exchange, is expected to hasten the departure of MPEA prexy Eric Johnston for Paris, where he will resume talks on the remittance of the $4,800,000 still to be unthawed.

French move was seen by foreign dept. execs as a good-will gesture but some feel the offer might have been motivated by increasing concern over the continuing deadlock which should exhaust the U.S. film supply in France by December, when exhibs will definitely feel the pinch.

Americans emphasize that acceptance of $1,200,000, which is nothing more than a repeat of a previous French offer, does not in any way

New TV Shows, Nixon Talk Hurt Biz; 'Ivanhoe' Champ, 'Quiet' 2d; 'For You,' 'Fatima' Next

Although first-run theatres had to combat such opposition as Nixon's TV speech, new tele shows, Indian summer and start of gridiron season, some new, strong product is going far currently to keep biz on an even keel. Many houses reported that the GOP Vice-Presidential candidate's aired talk last Tuesday (23) hurt. All these factors plus the loss of kid patronage because of schools being back in session cut into trade.

"Ivanhoe" (M-G), which previously had been out on only three test dates, went into the lead this session as it was launched in some eight keys. "The Quiet Man" (Rep), which continues to display marked stamina, is finishing a strong second according to reports from VARIETY correspondents in key cities. "Just For You" (Par) climbed from seventh to third spot.

"Miracle of Lady Fatima" (WB) also is roaring ahead from eighth to fourth position. "Crimson Pirate" (WB), just out this stanza, is showing enough to cop fifth money. "Merry Widow" (M-G), second last week, is sixth while "Monkey Business" (20th) is seventh.

"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) is finishing eighth, with "Sudden Fear" (RKO) ninth. "Assignment Paris" (Col), "Big Sky" (RKO) and "Carribbean" (Par) round out the Big 12 list in that order. "Son of Paleface" (Par), which opens at N.Y. Paramount today (Wed.), and "Full House" (20th) are runner-up films.

"Because You're Mine" (M-G) is getting a big $145,000 in first week at N.Y. Music Hall. "Somebody Loves Me" (Par) also is landing a big $90,000 in initial stanza at N.Y. Roxy. "My Wife's Best Friend" (20th), also new, is okay in Washington and nice in Cincy. "Yankee Buccaneer" (U) shapes bright in Chi but is mild in K.C.

"Carrie" (Par), which is uneven this session, managed a brisk week in Washington. "Fearless Fagan" (M-G) is proving a toughie to sell but is rated okay in Cincy. "Les Miserables" (20th) is mainly on mild side this round but fine in Denver and oke in Toronto.

"High Noon" (UA) continues great in N.Y. and smart in Cleveland. "Affair Trinidad" (Col) looms fine in N.Y. and lusty in Toronto.

"Island Rescue" (U) looks okay in Boston. "Jumping Jacks" (Par) still is big in Chi. "Duel at Silver Creek" (U), big in Montreal, looms stout in Chi.

"Dreamboat" (20th), fair in Denver, is good in Philly. "My Man and I" (M-G) is rated okay in Philly. "Don't Bother To Knock" (20th) is oke in Minneapolis and Montreal.

Exhibitors Splurge In Bids for RKO Pix Of Walcott-Marciano

The Joe Walcott-Rocky Marciano fight pix bookings already extend into November, and there's an unprecedented demand from theatres throughout the country. RKO, which holds the film rights, expects its print order to exceed the 1,350 made last year for the Ray Robinson-Randy Turpin bout. RKO execs also expect the take to exceed that of any previous fight pix handled by the company.

In issuing the pix, RKO had six New York theatres exhibiting the

Record No. of Spectators See Joe-Rocky on Theatre Video

Large-screen telecast of last week's Walcott-Marciano heavyweight championship fight established an all-time record for the number of spectators who paid to witness a fight, resulting in a reappraisal of the medium's potential by exhibs. With the actual bout in Philadelphia drawing about 50,000 and the tele-equipped theatres accounting for 120,000, the bout outdrew the 120,000 who paid to see the second Dempsey-Tunney fight at Soldiers Field, Chicago, previous record-holder for a fight.

With 49 theatres in 31 cities carrying the Walcott-Marciano battle, it's estimated that the overall theatre gross (including taxes) exceeded $400,000. Exact profit accruing to the theatres has not been determined yet. With most of the theatres signed for the bout being large-seaters with over 2,000 capacity, the cost per seat paid to Theatre Network Television, holders of the large-screen rights to the bout, was $1.35. Admission prices varied in different sections of the country and for different theatres, with the average being about $3.25. In addition to the guarantee to TNT, theatres were faced with extra expenses, including $500 for line charges, extra advertising, and in some cases special police to handle the large crowds.

All theatres carrying the bout reported near or complete sellouts. Only mechanical breakdown was at the Skouras Academy of Music, N. Y., where the house was forced to give refunds, meaning a big loss for the theatre since tickets sold at $4.80 and $3.60. House was

NEW PROPOSALS TO EXHIBS BY LOCAL 306

Following a series of skirmishes, Local 306, Projectionists Union, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, presented last week to N.Y. metropolitan area exhibs concrete proposals for a new pact to replace the one which expired Sept. 1.

Union is asking for a 15% package-deal hike, a 13% wage boost and 2% for the union's welfare fund. Although the theatre ops, consisting of Loew's, RKO and the Broadway houses, have not made a formal reply to the union's demands, there is some indication that the exhibs will attempt to resist any efforts resulting in an increase in operational costs at this time. Union will counter this argument with the fact that the boothmen haven't received a boost in four years although the cost-of-living index had increased. Exhibs, on the other hand, regard the 5% given the union's welfare fund two years ago as tantamount to a hike since it raised the cost of operation.

This year's negotiations are expected to follow the pattern of previous talks between the two groups. In the past, they have been exceedingly prolonged, often extending from six months to a year following the expiration of a pact. Deal set with Loew's, RKO and the Broadway houses often serves as an example for the Skouras, Century, Randforce and other New York City chains. Union holds separate talks with the Independent Theatre Owners Assn.

Boucher's Drive-In Also For Walk-In Film Fans

Washington, Sept. 30.

The D. C. area is slated to get another big drive-in which will also provide accommodations for walk-in customers. Frank Boucher, veteran exhibitor, has just signed the lease for an 8½ acre tract on the northwest rim of nearby Alexandria, Va., for a 600-car drive-in, plus playground, restaurant and 250 seats for walk-in patrons.

Boucher, who has been 32 years in the picture biz, was formerly with Warner Bros., and until his recent resignation was general manager of the Kogod-Burka chain in and around Washington. Associated with him in the drive-in project is Victor Orsinger, former general manager of the Lopert Theatres here. Boucher has also become v.p. of the Alvin Epstein ad agency in Washington.

New Fox Cos. on Xchange

Stock shares of the two new 20th-Fox companies to be formed upon divorcement have been admitted for dealings on the New York Stock Exchange, both on a regular basis.

National Theatres, Inc., and 20th-Fox Film Corp. both are listed at $1 par value.

Ozoners Wary Of Thea. TV Despite Joe-Rocky Click

Despite the financial success of the S-3 Drive-in, near Rutherford, N. J., with its large-screen television pickup of the Walcott-Marciano fight last week, other ozoner operators appear to be approaching possible use of the medium with caution. At least that's the attitude of two major Jersey outdoor theatre circuits.

James J. Thompson, head of the Eastern Drive-in Circuit, declared this week that his chain has no plans for theatre TV, while a spokesman for Walter Reade Theatres said no such step was under consideration for its ozoners at present. On the other hand, Phil Smith, whose Smith Management Co. operates the S-3, is highly enthusiastic about theatre TV in light of last Tuesday's (23) $14,000 gross.

S-3's take was culled from more than 10,000 fight fans who swarmed into the 1,300-car capacity arena both on wheels and foot. Tariff was $8.33 plus tax for car and all occupants. Some 7,200 folding chairs were also set up for "walk-ins." A number of prospective patrons unable to gain admittance through legal channels climbed the fence, and others were observed catching the "blow-by-blow" proceedings via binoculars at points of vantage up to two miles distant.

RCA, which provided the instantaneous theatre TV equipment for the fight pickup, claims that the event represented the first use of theatre TV in a drive-in. Moreover, RCA points out that the TV pictures shown on the S-3's screen were the largest ever projected (24'x36'), and the projection throw of more than 125 feet was the longest ever used in theatre TV.

SHERMAN DEATH NIPS SEIDELMAN PROD. TIE

Death of veteran producer Harry Sherman in Hollywood last week has collapsed Sam Seidelman's deal with Harry Sherman Productions, Inc.

Seidelman, who was to have been executive v.p. of the outfit, had been ready to fly to the Coast last Sunday (28) to sign the papers. The partners had planned to make 12 theatrical pix a year, with four in color.

Inability to make tieup with another name producer has forced Seidelman to abandon the whole project. Sherman had planned to go into production in late November or early December.

tele and radio bypassed. TNT had guaranteed the IBC $120,000 for the theatre coverage.

Even if the big screen tele outfit tops the Pabst offer somewhat, it's considered likely that the brewery firm will still get the nod for the return bout. Pabst has been sponsoring the club's Wednesday night cards for the past three years and reportedly has been promised "four or five" championship fights during the present indoor season.

IBC has earmarked the Oct. 15 lightweight go between Lauro Salos and Jimmy Carter for the Pabst CBS show.

Youngstein Traveling

Max Youngstein, United Artists v.p., returned to his New York office yesterday (Tues.) after a swing of exchange cities in the northwest and on the Coast. He has been winging out of Gotham on a series of field trips for the past several months in connection with the Bill Heineman sales drive.

Exec's next trek will be to London shortly to look in on preem arrangements for Charles Chaplin's "Limelight."

Peak Financial Status for COMPO

As a result of its recent collection drive, the Council of Motion Picture Organizations is in a stronger financial position than it has ever been. It's figured that by the end of the year 10,000 theatres will be paying dues to the film industry public relations outfit.

The feeling among exhibs and others in the trade is that the organization can now move ahead aggressively with its public relations program.

One of its prime projects will be a campaign for repeal of the 20% Federal admission tax. Setting up additional objectives and specific program plans will be announced, it has been indicated, following a meeting of the triumvirate now governing COMPO. Trio, consisting of Al Lichtman, 20th-Fox distrib chief; Sam Pinanski, Boston circuit op, and Trueman Rembush, Indiana chain owner, are set to meet shortly.

SEEKS TO RECOVER 33G FROM CUSICK ON LOAN

In an attempt to win priority over other creditors, Chesapeake Industries brought suit in N. Y. Federal Court Friday (26) against Cusick International Films. Action seeks to recover $32,820 from Cusick. This amount, according to the complaint, stems from a $32,000 loan which Eagle Lion Classics advanced to Cusick in 1951 on a promissory note.

Security for the loan, it's asserted, were liens on two Cusick pictures, "The Long Dark Hall" and "Pardon My French." As assignee of the defunct ELC, Chesapeake charges that subsequent to March, 1951, Cusick granted certain rights in the two films to Chemical Bank & Trust Co., N. Y., Sagitta Films, Neil F. Agnew and others. All have been named defendants in the suit.

After Cusick allegedly defaulted on the $32,820, Chesapeake notified the indie producing firm to give it priority on its claim and shortly thereafter filed suit. Plaintiff also asks that in event the two Cusick pictures are sold at a foreclosure sale, its coin should be deducted from the proceeds before other creditors get their cut.

Both "Hall" and "French" were recently distributed in the U. S. through United Artists. Former was made in Britain by Cusick and Five Oceans Films, with Rex Harrison and Lilli Palmer in top roles. "French" was lensed in France by Cusick in association with Andre Sarrut (Sagitta Films). Stars of this venture were Paul Henreid and Merle Oberon.

Helprin to London On Korda Pix-TV Deal

Morris Helprin, London Films (America) prez and Sir Alexander Korda's U. S. rep, left New York by plane Saturday (27) for London to wrap up a deal involving British pix production aimed at both theatres and TV. Eliot Hyman, active in the films-for-TV field, has a hand in the Korda venture.

Hyman and lawyer David Stillman left for London on the Queen Mary last week. Details of deal are being kept under wraps but Helprin indicated it involves production features and shorts. Groundwork for Korda plans, which cue increasing British TV film activity, was laid during Helprin's London visit last June.

The Korda deal originally included the National Broadcasting Co., but this tieup is now unlikely with the network having made an arrangement for TV film production with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in Britain.

Italians Bid for U.S. Writers Of Comedy to Hypo Native Films

Italian bid for wider acceptance in the American film market may result in a trek of U. S. comedy writers to Rome. Majority of successful Italo pix hitting these shores have had sombre themes and few have succeeded in obtaining circuit releases. Feeling of a group of Italo film-makers is that pix with comedy angles might be more appropriate for general distribution.

With a shortage of top comedy writers in Italy, Italian producers feel that American writers working in conjunction with native scripters could turn out the type of films which could conceivably click in both markets. Pix, it's felt, could be shot in both languages or, because of the close liaison between the American and Italian writers, be dubbed more expertly.

Acceptance of a group of films imported by Lew Ciannelli, son of actor Eduardo Ciannelli, may determine if the idea has any merit. First of six pix, all comedies, brought over by Ciannelli is currently being dubbed. Instead of hiring the usual Italian-to-English adapters, Ciannelli turned the job over to Hal Fimberg, film scripter and radio-TV comedy writer. Fimberg has completed the scripting chore on "O. K. Nero," pic featuring a pair of Italian Abbott & Costello-type characters, and it is now being dubbed on the Coast. According to Ciannelli, three filmeries—Metro, RKO and Republic—have shown interest in the film and talks are being held for a distrib deal.

If the Ciannelli-dubbed pix prove successful at the b.o., it's felt that many new jobs will be available for members of the Screen Writers Guild, either by working in Italy or writing the dubbed versions here. U. S., it's estimated, would be able to absorb about 40 or 50 of popular-type Italo pix.

Delay Buchman Trial

Washington, Sept. 30.

Trial of writer-producer Sidney Buchman for contempt of Congress in the House Red probe has been postponed until Feb. 9. It had been scheduled to start Oct. 1.

Delay is necessitated by the difficulty in getting certain witnesses at present.

3 Writers Added To Red Pix List At L.A. Hearings

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

Three new film names have been added to the House Un-American Activities Committee's list of Communists as Red probers launched a new Hollywood session with a half-day's testimony by screenwriter Roy Huggins.

On the stand for 75 minutes, Huggins described himself as a Marxist before he ever joined the party. He was a member briefly in 1939-40, while at UCLA. Rejoined in 1946 when he became a screenwriter, but again dropped out within a year. Hollywood Reds, he noted, "were interested only in Hollywood. Never, so far as I know, did they have a discussion on world politics."

New names listed were Elliott Grenard, Leslie Edgley and Val Burton, all writers.

Also listed were such familiar names as Albert Maltz, Harry Carlisle, Robert Lees, Philip Stevenson, Janet Stevenson, Ben Barzman, Norman Barzman, George Sklar, Guy Endore, Ann Morgan, Robert Richards, Wilma Shore and Lillith James. Latter's husband, Dan James, Huggins "knew only by hearsay." Huggins, an articulate witness, was a political philosophy major at UCLA, and he gave the committee intricate details of "Marxism's big flaw—the theory of the withering away of the state." It was far over the heads of the 75% capacity audience in the Federal Building hearing room. Even some of the committee members squirmed as he spoke.

Asked what should be done about the party, he warned the committee that "democracy has to fight for its life, but it would be a terrible thing to fight tyranny by becoming tyranny ourselves."

CUT 'LADY OF FATIMA' TO FIT MARQUEES

Title of Warners' "The Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" has been shortened, with "Our Lady" being dropped. In all current engagements, film will keep its original title, but in subsequent bookings it'll be known as "The Miracle of Fatima."

Change was attributed to difficulty in getting the full title on theatre marquees. As a result of the switch, Warners had to prepare new posters and revise its pressbook and advertising campaign.

Meanwhile, "Fatima," backed by solid Catholic church support, is clicking in all its first-run engagements. Based on its experience in New York, where it is tested a continuous run and a reserved-seat policy, company is adhering to the former method. Outside of New York,

Roy Disney, president of Walt Disney Productions, arrived in New York from the Coast yesterday (Tues.) to discuss a new distribution deal with RKO. Disney organizations is anxious to continue its long association with the distrib unless the new controlling group headed by Ralph Stolkin decides on some unexpectedly radical changes in the operation.

Disney product has been going through RKO the past 14 years. Last of a series of pacts expires with the handling of the new cartoon feature, "Peter Pan."

GOVT. AS ARBITRATION STYMIE?

B.O. Acceptance, TV Prospects Seen Paying Off on Dubbed Lingo Films

Favorable audience reaction in theatres and prospects for heavy cash from television may solve the foreign film distributors' dilemma of whether to dub or not to dub

Policy of adding English dialog to suitable imports has paid off handsomely in recent months and has distribs wondering whether they haven't hit on best solution yet to help their production break out of the confining art house straitjacket.

With television as an added incentive, dubbing costs are no longer considered a stumbling block, particularly since successful dubbed versions have been cleaning up, doubling and even tripling the lipsync outlay. Latest dubbed pic to get circuit booking is the French "Diable Au Corps" (Devil in the Flesh), which got off to a lively start last week in 11 Skouras and Brandt houses.

"Diable" did good biz when it opened here in its original version in 1949. Produced by Paul Graetz in conjunction with Universal Pictures and starring Micheline Presle and Gerard Philipe, pic had long run at the Paris Theatre, N. Y., and subsequently was good for 300 bookings across the country.

The English version was dubbed in France by Claude Autant Lara, who directed the pic originally. Miss Presle dubbed in her own voice for the soundtrack retake and an American took Philipe's part. The film ran into censorship troubles and still has not been shown in Pennsylvania or Ohio.

Graetz's latest, "Roma Ore II," due for release here by A.F.E. Films before Christmas, also will

Al Dow Negotiating For Warner on B'way For Pop-Priced Opera

Deal is about to be concluded for the lease of the Warner Theatre, WB's Broadway showcase, to Albert K. Dow, booker and theatre operator. Dow would install popular-priced opera in the 2,711-seat house which, except for a one-night opening for the telecast of the Walcott-Marciano fight, has been shuttered since early summer.

Dow, who operated pop-priced opera at the old Hippodrome, N.Y., 17 years ago, plans a 99c to $3 scale, with the opening skedded for Nov. 10. Although arrangements haven't been definitely set, it appears that members of the Chicago Opera Co. will make up the resident outfit.

Dow's deal with WB calls for a one-year lease plus a one-year renewal option. Film outfit has been trying to unload the house, which it operates under a long-term lease, for some time. Many previous talks for rental of the house to video nets and legit operators collapsed because of the high rental terms asked by Warners. Nature of the terms set with Dow were not disclosed, but there are indications that WB might have been forced to lower its asking price. It's known that other tenants of the building have been pressuring Warners to do something to relight the house, since biz at the stores adjoining the theatre took a dive since the house shuttered.

Theatre, originally called the Strand, was built in 1914 and was the first of the plush Broadway film palaces. It operated continuously as a filmery and was the principal outlet for Warner product. At various times it shifted between vaudfilm and straight films. Last year, for the first time, it dropped films completely for a two-week engagement of the Sadler Wells Theatre Ballet. Name of the theatre was changed to the Warner in 1951.

Dow, who owns a drive-in theatre at Daytona Beach, Fla., has also operated theatres in New Haven, Hartford, Detroit, Boston and Springfield, Mass.

Renoir, Alliata to Seek U.S. Release of 'Coach'

Jean Renoir, who recently directed "Golden Coach" in Italy, and Francesco Alliata, head of a French and Italian group sponsoring the film, are due in New York in mid-November.

They'll investigate distribution arrangements for "Coach" while in the U. S. Film is unusual in that it originated abroad, foreign interests provided the capital but is done entirely with English dialog. Harold Salemson is the N. Y. rep for the pic.

Rank Halts Blast Aimed at Exhibs

London, Sept. 30.

A retort drafted by the two producer organizations to an exhibitor pamphlet which was circulated in the House of Commons during the recent quota debates and which particularly criticized the lack of suitable product to fill the second feature quota, will never see the light of day mainly, it is believed, because of the counsel of J. Arthur Rank.

The reply had been prepared by Sir Henry L. French, director general of the British Film Producers Assn., on behalf of his own organization and also for the Assn. of Specialized Film Producers. It was considered by the BFPA executive earlier this month when it was decided not to pursue the matter further. The overriding view, it is reported, was that no useful purpose would be served and it might prove damaging to producer-exhibitor relations during the period of delicate negotiations on the continuance of the Eady fund.

The reply, which totaled nearly 2,000 words, was a forthright attack on the exhibition industry and asserted that the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. pamphlet had done

Siodmak May Embark On Austrian-Jugo Co. Prod.; U.S. Coin Aids Belgrade

Rome, Sept. 23.

Robert Siodmak, here from the Venice Film Festival, revealed that he has set up an Austrian-Jugoslav co-production which will be done entirely in Belgrade. Siodmak has gone to Belgrade to look over the studio facilities, and plans to have the pic ready for shooting next spring. Marshall Plan aid has helped the construction of the modern film studios in the Jugoslav capital as a come-on for foreign film production work.

Although the picture producers in the Siodmak deal are Austrian and Jugoslavian, the film will be done in English and German, with the American market definitely in mind for release. The untitled pic is supposed to relate events in 1914 when Archduke Franz Ferdinand was murdered by a Serbian patriot. Plot covers only one morning.

Siodmak claims to own the rights to "The Man Who Was Thursday," a 1905 novel. He would use it as a pic to be done in Italy next year. Italian film writer Piero Tellini is preparing the screenplay.

Up Pioneers' Costs

Motion Picture Pioneers has upped its membership initiation fee from $10 to $25 and the tariff for its Nov. 25 Jubilee Dinner at the Hotel Astor, N. Y., from $15 to $20.

Overhead expense and rising costs of hotel charges necessitated the hikes, according to prexy Jack Cohn. Dinner will honor Nate J. Blumberg, Universal's board chairman, as "Motion Picture Pioneer of 1952."

MAJORS, EXHIBS EYE PLAN WARILY

Fear that the projected industry arbitration system could result in further Government or court control over exhib-distrib operations was revealed this week as one of the key factors delaying agreement on the overall arbitration plan.

While arbitration must be endorsed by the Department of Justice and the New York Federal Court which heard the industry antitrust suit, film company presidents and exhib leaders are anxious to avoid giving either the tribunal or the D. of J. any active role in arbiter activity. That such was a possibility was seen by the prexies in the arbitration plan drafted by a specially appointed exhib-distrib committee. For this reason revisions in the program were voted by the chief execs.

However, the amended plan, also incorporating changes relating to clearances and damages which may be awarded to exhibs, were not accepted by some theatre organizations. Consequently, film company lawyers now are at work on further adjustments in phraseology.

Arbitration Still Desired

It's stressed on all sides that arbitration still is desirable, but there's disagreement on when it actually will be accomplished. Alfred Starr, new Theatre Owners of America president, told the outfit's recent Washington convention that the setup is immediately in view. Each TOA field unit's vote on the arbitration plan is now awaited,

ITALO 'SALUTE' GETS NIX ON U.S. TOUR

Italian Films Export has ruled out a proposal to send the entire "Salute to Italian Films Week" show on tour following its seven-day New York run at the Little Carnegie, Oct. 6-12.

Requests to have the festival go the key-city circuit have been reaching the IFE office from many parts of the country, particularly Chicago and Los Angeles. While they were nixed by IFE for this year, repeat performance may be sent on the road in 1953. Plans are now ripening to let the Italian stars and several members of the large delegation slated to attend the New York affair visit key centers during October. They will go sans pix, however.

Meanwhile, IFE has run into a storm trying to pick the final seven "Salute" selections. Total of 10 productions will be available for showing, and IFE officials are currently mulling the problem of choosing the seven without offending producers who find themselves left out in the cold. Current plans are to arrange special screenings at the Little Carnegie for the three left overs.

The large Rome delegation which is beginning to arrive includes not only the glamor contingent but also many of the guiding lights of the Italian industry at

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

Bert Friedlob, film producer, was sued for $175,000 in Superior Court by Howard S. Lichtenstein, a process server, who charges he was beaten and seriously injured while attempting to serve papers on the defendant at Motion Picture Centre.

Plaintiff asks general damages of $75,000 and punitive damages of $100,000.

McCarthy Names 3-Man Group To Probe Delays in Foreign Rentals

Motion Picture Export Assn. v.p. John G. McCarthy has appointed a three-man committee to look into the question of long-delayed exhibitor rental coin in foreign countries. Group will make a territory-by-territory study of the situation, which is latest of the distributor headaches.

Trio set to give the problem the once-over includes Bernard Zeeman, treasurer of Columbia International; William Piper (Par) and Felix Summer (U). They're expected to come up with a series of recommendations.

Touchy problem was discussed by foreign managers at a meeting in New York last week on the basis of a memorandum from Columbia, which pointed up over-extension of exhibitor credits as a "serious problem confronting our industry today." Memo, signed by Zeeman, called for "careful study and action in order to set up measures to protect our business."

Problem of outstanding rentals abroad has always been acute and has been subject of MPEA attention from time to time, but not recently. Company execs agree the job of getting exhibitors to pay up promptly is a vexing one, but MPEA meeting produced no unified reaction of sympathy with the Columbia plight, with Metro in particular declaring it's a company matter.

Crux of the matter is the companies' eagerness, and this holds true particularly for the smaller outfits, to get cash in a hurry, particularly from regions where earnings are convertible into dollars. One official explained that larger firms accrue large amounts which they are eager to remit to forestall possible sudden devaluation moves.

Columbia memo mentioned France, Italy and Germany as particularly touchy areas where company has found exibs tending to stretch credit period beyond delay set down by good business practice. At the same time, foreign department execs say the situation differs from country to country, with several naming Brazil as a particularly flagrant offender.

Col's Complaint

Columbia complaint is directed against chains and individual exhibitors who won't pay up for 90 and 120 days or more. Company considers this unreasonable, and in some instances unethical, but emphatically is not asking for concerted action on the part of all American distributors abroad. Feeling is that, even though the distribs could get together under the protective MPEA umbrella,

Oct. 30 Mpls. Hearing On Lebedoff Fee

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Federal Judge G. H. Nordbye has set Oct. 30 for hearing on the findings drawn up by plaintiff attorney Lee Loevenger and a motion by him for the amount of counsel fees in the antitrust clearance conspiracy suit of local neighborhood exhibitors S. G. and Martin Lebedoff, latter were awarded $125,077.53 damages against six major distributors and the United Paramount Theatres circuit here.

In his findings Loevenger calls for an increase in damages from $41,692.51 to $52,000 in triplicate, or a total of $156,000, instead of $125,077.53. The attorney goes along with the judge's method of computing the damage, but believes an error has been made in calculations. Loevenger asks for $29,305 attorney fees. Whatever amount that the court fixes must be paid by the defendants, in addition to the judgment.

TOA's Starr Urges One Big Exhib Org.

Alfred Starr, newly-elected prexy of Theatre Owners of America, declared yesterday (Tues.) in N. Y. that he would like to see all exhibs combined in one organization. If this is not feasible, he said at his first press confab, he hoped that it would be possible for all theatremen to get together at a single forum where they could swap information and ideas.

TOA topper also asserted that he was confident that arbitration would become a reality and that he did not think that some of the suggestions presented by distribs and exhibs at the recent TOA convention would serve as a "roadblock" to the plan. He termed them "inconsequential."

Non-Key City Meetings Of Allied Seen Strategy In Luring New Members

Allied States Assn. is out for new members and seeking to lure them via regional meetings in non-key city spots. Strategy is that exhibs in the more-or-less remote towns would be more inclined to look in on Allied activities if the outfit's field conclaves are conducted nearby.

That was the idea behind the locationing of West Virginia Allied's session recently in Clarksburgh. If the session had been slated for Wheeling, the Allied unit figured, only the old membership would show up with little prospect of "new business" being brought in. Next year's convention will be held in Bluefield, W. Va.

Group last week elected Max. Matz to the presidency, succeeding Fred Helwig. Latter was named board chairman. Other officers voted in included Don Shultz, 1st v.p.; H. A. Gilbert, 2d v.p.; Woodrow Thomas, secretary-treasurer, and Rube Shor, director on the National Allied board. C. D. Crawford and Joseph Raad were added to the W. Va. unit's board.

Arnall Re-elected

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers re-elected Ellis Arnall president and tossed a dinner to celebrate his return from a leave-of-absence during which he served the Government as Price Stabilizer in Washington.

All other officers were re-elected, including Marvin Faris as executive secretary, George Bagnall, treasurer, and Gunther Lessing, chairman of the board.

Senate Investigators List 4 Major Gripes Of Indie Exhibitors

Washington, Sept. 30.

The Senate Small Business Committee has been told by its staff investigators that indie exhibitors have four major complaints about the way films are sold to them. The complaints, gathered mainly after trips to L.A. to confer with spokesmen for the Southern California Theatre Owners Assn., are these:

1. The small indies can't get the same availabilities as larger theatres.
2. Independents are being compelled to book product in blocks again.
3. In some areas, branch managers of the distributors have interests in theatres which they favor in product playing time.
4. Distributors are compelling indie exhibitors to bid competitively against each other, which results in higher prices for the distributors.

William D. Amis, of the committee staff, does not plan to return to L.A. for another month or so. Gillis Long, another staff investigator, has just returned from two weeks on the Coast in which he checked into the motion picture situation.

The Lusty Men

Good outdoor action drama built around rodeo life, with star names.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

RKO release of Wald-Krasna presentation, produced by Jerry Wald. Stars Susan Hayward, Robert Mitchum, Arthur Kennedy, Arthur Hunnicutt; features Frank Faylen, Walter Coy, Carol Nugent, Maria Hart, Lorna Thayer, Burt Mustin, Karen King, Jimmy Dodd, Eleanor Todd. Directed by Nicholas Ray. Screenplay, Horace McCoy, David Dortort; suggested by story by Claude Stanush; camera, Lee Garmes; editor, Ralph Dawson; music, Roy Webb. Previewed Sept. 19, '52. Running time, 112 MINS.

| Louise | Susan Hayward |
| Jeff | Robert Mitchum |
| Wes | Arthur Kennedy |
| Booker Davis | Arthur Hunnicutt |
| Al Dawson | Frank Faylen |
| Buster Burgess | Walter Coy |
| Rusty | Carol Nugent |
| Rosemary Maddox | Maria Hart |
| Grace Burgess | Lorna Thayer |
| Jeremiah | Burt Mustin |
| Ginny Logan | Karen King |
| Red Logan | Jimmy Dodd |
| Babs | Eleanor Todd |

Profitable returns shape up for "The Lusty Men," a good outdoor action drama that makes valid use of a rodeo background to spin a story of love and glory among the bucking broncs. Exploitation advantages accrue from the story, and the title and star names supply marquee strength, all of which indicates excellent playdates.

The excellent Jerry Wald production is more drama than straight actioner, but none of the latter values is neglected in getting the rousing tale on film. A lot of actual rodeo footage is used to backstop the story of romance and competitive drama that goes on behind the scenes along the bigtime rodeo circuit. A somewhat slow starter, as writers Horace McCoy and David Dortort establish plot and characters, once underway it is kept playing with growing interest under Nicholas Ray's firm direction. Scripting displays a sure hand for building the dramatics and provides top-notch dialog.

Robert Mitchum gives what many will term his best performance yet as a faded rodeo champion who has fallen on bad days after an accident. Returning broke to the tumbledown ranch where he spent his boyhood, he finds the property desired by Arthur Kennedy, poor cowpoke, and his wife, Susan Hayward. Tales of Mitchum's past glory light a fire under Kennedy, who sees a chance at quick realization of his ranch-owning yen via rodeoing prizes. He talks Mitchum into being his coach and manager, and they take off to cover the circuit, with Miss Hayward a reluctant member of the trio.

As the days pass, Kennedy wins money and develops a taste for the glory that goes with success. Mitchum has a growing interest in Miss Hayward and, when Kennedy begins to go off the deep end, makes a pitch for her. She's interested but faithful, and their renunciation scene is misinterpreted. Kennedy accuses Mitchum of cowardice and to meet this challenge and prove he's still a man, the former champ tries again. He proves his old ability hasn't left him, but is fatally injured doing it. The death awakens Kennedy to the pitfalls of the rodeo glory road and he decides ranching is the better way of life. Miss Hayward does a fine job, as does Kennedy, and the writing and direction use a credible adult approach to the triangle.

Arthur Hunnicutt adds a lighter flavor to the film as a broken-down performer given to telling tall tales of his past prowess. Frank Faylen, Walter Coy, Maria Hart, Lorna Thayer and Eleanor Todd are among others helping the film's realistic flavor.

The production has expert technical assists, including Lee Garmes' camera work, the Roy Webb music score, directed by C. Bakaleinikoff, and the editing by Ralph Dawson. Brog.

Back at the Front

Bill Mauldin's Willie and Joe characters in amusing comedy adventures in Japan. Good general audience offering.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

Universal release of Leonard Goldstein production. Stars Tom Ewell, Harvey Lembeck; features Mari Blanchard, Barry Kelley, Vaughn Taylor, Richard Long, Russell Johnson, Palmer Lee. Directed by George Sherman. Screenplay, Lou Breslow, Don McGuire, Oscar Brodney, from story by Breslow and characters created by Bill Mauldin; camera, Clifford Stine; editor, Paul Weatherwax. Previewed, Sept. 23, '52. Running time, 87 MINS.

| Willie | Tom Ewell |
| Joe | Harvey Lembeck |
| Nida | Mari Blanchard |
| General Dixon | Barry Kelley |
| Major Ormsby | Vaughn Taylor |
| Sgt. Rose | Richard Long |
| Johnny Redondo | Russell Johnson |
| Capt. White | Palmer Lee |

Universal has a good followup to last year's amusing comedy adventure dealing with the antics of Bill Mauldin's Willie and Joe characters. The promise of acceptance in the general market is excellent, so Universal should have no trouble rating a profitable payoff with the sequel, "Back At the Front."

Tom Ewell repeats as Willie, while Harvey Lembeck has taken over the role of Joe. It is good teaming, and laughs result as the pair runs through the contrived involvements under George Sherman's broad direction. The slapstick pace and treatment of the situations turn on enough laughs to carry it over the 87 minutes with only a few slow spots.

This time, Willie and Joe are called back to active duty and, despite all manner of deception and gold-bricking, are sent to Japan. There, after playing guinea pigs for new equipment, they are rewarded with a leave in Tokyo and get involved with a smuggling gang sneaking weapons and explosives to North Korea. They survive this involvement to be hailed as heroes, but a wise commanding officer arranges for their shipment back to the states so the Army can continue to maintain friendly relations with Japan.

The screenplay by Lou Breslow, Don McGuire and Oscar Brodney, from a story by Breslow, is well-supplied with chuckle stuff. The amusing opening shows how the Mauldin characters, at the insistence of Joe, got out of the service in "Up Front" by signing up for inactive status. Amusing sequences include the boys pretending assorted illnesses in abortive tries for discharge, their adventures in a Japanese bath, and on the streets of Tokyo being pursued by M.P.'s.

Abetting the numerous chuckles are Mari Blanchard, a svelte, sexy femme spy; Russell Johnson, the suave smuggler; Vaughn Taylor, a perplexed military police officer; Barry Kelley, the general; Richard Long, Palmer Lee and others.

The two principals, director Sherman and camera crew treked to Japan for one-the-spot locales, and this adds to the picture's background and other production touches furnished under Leonard Goldstein's supervision. Clifford Stine's lensing is good, as are the other technical functions. Brog.

Hollywood, Sept. 25.

Warners release of Louis F. Edelman production. Stars Gary Cooper, Phyllis Thaxter, David Brian; features Paul Kelly, Lon Chaney, Philip Carey, James Millican, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, Alan Hale, Jr., Martin Milner, Wilton Graff. Directed by Andre DeToth. Screenplay, Charles Marquis Warren, Frank Davis; from story by Sloan Nibley; camera (Warner Color), Edwin DuPar; editor, Robert L. Swanson; music, Max Steiner. Previewed Sept. 23, '52. Running time, 92 MINS.

| Major "Lex" Kearny | Gary Cooper |
| Erin Kearny | Phyllis Thaxter |
| Austin "Mac" McCool | David Brian |
| Lt. Col. Hudson | Paul Kelly |
| Pete Elm | Lon Chaney |
| Capt. Ed. Tennick | Philip Carey |
| Matthew Quint | James Millican |
| Sgt. Snow | G. "Big Boy" Williams |
| Mizzell | Alan Hale, Jr. |
| Olie | Martin Milner |
| Col. Sharpe | Wilton Graff |
| General Halleck | Richard Hale |
| Pvt. Ferguson | James Brown |
| Cook | Vince Barnett |
| Cpl. Hamel | Poodles Hanneford |
| Sims | Jack Woody |
| Lt. Evans | Jerry O'Sullivan |
| Sgt. Poole | Ned Young |
| Cpl. Ramsey | William Fawcett |

The Springfield rifle and army counter-espionage are the bases for the plot of this Gary Cooper starrer. Premise serves as a good springboard for the 92 minutes of early-west localed dramatics and generates enough excitement to satisfy the action fan. The Cooper name for the marquees and the use of WarnerColor tints for displaying the outdoor scenery help make the business outlook good.

There are realistic values in the production to set up a story of how a foresighted Union officer masterminds a scheme to use counter-espionage to uncover the reasons why a northern cavalry post is unable to supply the mounts needed to keep the government's army on the move in the southern states. Every time the cavalry outpost tries to move a string of horses, renegades are tipped to the plan, ambush the soldiers and sell the horses to the Confederacy. There are a few story deficiencies but not enough to bother the average outdoor action fan nor to keep Andre DeToth's direction from spinning a steady pace.

Cooper, Union officer, is the key to the counter-espionage plot. He's cashiered on charges bordering on cowardice in the scheme cooked up by Wilton Graff, Union colonel, and joins up with David Brian, leader of the herd raiders. Working undercover, with the constant risk of exposure, plus the difficulties that arise with his wife, Phyllis Thaxter, and son, who are not tipped to the part he is playing, Cooper is put through the action gamut. DeToth handles the big, brawling sequences well. Before the conclusion is reached, Paul Kelly, commander of the cavalry post, is revealed as the southern sympathizer. Finale finds Cooper reinstated with full honors, both for breaking up the plot against the Union and affording the Army with an unorthodox testing of the Springfield rifle, which later is to become standard equipment.

Cooper handles himself easily in the top role. Miss Thaxter is appealing in a brief part. Brian's heavy character is excellently done. Kelly is strong as the southern sympathizer and other featured and supporting parts expertly delivered include those by Lon Chaney, Philip Carey, James Millican, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, Alan Hale, Jr., Martin Milner, Graff and others.

The Louis F. Edelman production of the Charles Marquis Warren-Frank Davis script makes good use of outdoor scenic values, and Edwin DuPar's lensing is top-notch. Editing, music score and other contributions are expert. Brog.

Savage Triangle

"Savage Triangle," French import which preemed at the Paris Theatre, N. Y., Monday (29), was reviewed by VARIETY under its original title of "Le Garcon Sauvage" (The Savage Boy) at the 1951 Venice Film Festival. Writing in the issue of Sept. 19, 1951, Mosk felt that director Jean Delannoy guided the film with "slick ness and pace." But nevertheless the critic opined "this picture does not have enough depth and motivation to give it credibility."

"Story of a prostitute and her young son," Mosk noted, "may have some exploitation values which may make it a good bet for sureseaters . . ." Reviewer added that Madeleine Robinson is "fine" as the good-natured prostitute, Pierre Beck is "sensitive" as the boy and Frank Villard "brings too many mannerisms" to the parasitic lover. Joseph Burstyn is distributing the Joseph Bercholz production in the U. S.

Pic originally was halted by U. S. censors, but one deletion allowed it to pass.

The Planter's Wife
(BRITISH)

Routine domestic drama with Malayan war background; Claudette Colbert name may help overcome script weakness.

London, Sept. 16.

GFD release of Pinnacle Production. Stars Claudette Colbert, Jack Hawkins and Anthony Steel; features Ram Gopal. Directed by Ken Annakin. Screenplay, Peter Proud and Guy Elmes; camera, Geffrey Unsworth; editor, Alfred Rome; music, Allan Gray. At Odeon, Leicester Square, Sept. 16, '52. Running time, 91 MINS.

|---|---|
| Liz Frazer | Claudette Colbert |
| Jim Frazer | Jack Hawkins |
| Inspector Hugh Dobson | Anthony Steel |
| Nair | Ram Gopal |
| Mat | Jeremy Spenser |
| Jack Bushell | Tom Macauley |
| Eleanor Bushell | Helen Goss |
| Ah Moy | Sonja Hana |
| Wan Li | Andy Ho |
| Mike Frazer | Peter Asher |
| Putra | Shaym Bahadur |
| Capt. Dell | Bryan Coleman |
| Lieutenant Summers | Don Sharp |
| Arminah | Maria Baillie |

The first British pic to have the Malayan war as its background, "The Planter's Wife" was made as a co-production with United Artists. The jungle campaign against local terrorists is depicted against a commonplace domestic drama, but later action sequences compensate for the lame opening. Claudette Colbert's name on the marquee should be a selling angle in the U. S. for a film which needs plenty of exploitation to help it at the boxoffice.

In its earlier stages, the yarn just limps along, the director introducing contrived thrills to sustain the action. One such incident depicting a tussle between a snake and a mongoose has absolutely no relation to the plot. Later sequences, however, focus attention on the actual campaign, and here the story is tense and dramatic.

The central characters in the yarn are Jim Frazer and his wife Liz, whose marriage shows signs of cracking. He wants her to return to London with their son and she makes it clear that if she leaves the plantation she will never come back. It is against this backcloth that the plot unspools. After their final triumph against the terrorists, the child is sent home while the wife remains.

Weaknesses in the script are an obvious handicap to the stars both of whom are capable of something much better. Anthony Steel has only a trivial role as a British inspector while Ram Gopal, better known for his Indian stage dancing, has a little more scope as a loyal native. Two juve roles are well played by Jeremy Spenser and Peter Asher. Backgrounds, filmed mainly in the Far East, deserve full credit. Myro.

Night Without Sleep
(SONGS)

Dull, wordy attempt at psychological drama; very doubtful prospects.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

20th-Fox release of Robert Bassler production. Stars Linda Darnell, Gary Merrill, Hildegarde Neff; features Joyce MacKenzie, June Vincent, Donald Randolph, Hugh Beaumont. Directed by Roy Baker. Screenplay, Frank Partos, Elick Moll; from story by Moll; camera, Lucien Ballard; editor, Nick De Maggio; music, Cyril Mockridge; songs, Alfred Newman, Haven Gillespie, Ken Darby. Previewed, Sept. 24, '52. Running time, 77 MINS.

| Julie Bannon | Linda Darnell |
| Richard Morton | Gary Merrill |
| Lisa Muller | Hildegarde Neff |
| Laura Harkness | Joyce MacKenzie |
| Emily Morton | June Vincent |
| Dr. Clarke | Donald Randolph |

| Mrs. Carter | Louise Lorimer |
| Mr. Carter | William Forrest |
| Maitre D' | Steven Geray |
| Singer | Mauri Lynn |
| Henry | Bill Walker |
| Maid | Mae Marsh |
| Benny | Ben Carter |

"Night Without Sleep" is a wordy, dull attempt at psychological drama that plays off over 77 minutes at a slow flashback pace. Strictly for programmer bookings.

Stodgy pacing, lack of dramatic punch and the florid, bountiful dialog are three strikes against "Night." Yarn deals with a composer (Gary Merrill) who has flooded his talent in alcohol during his six-year marriage to heiress June Vincent, comes to early one morning on the sofa in his wife's Long Island mansion with the feeling he has committed murder sometime during the night. Footage takes off in a series of flashbacks to show him quarreling with his wife on the eve of her departure for Boston. Later, there's another quarrel with his mistress, Hildegarde Neff; then an idyllic evening with Linda Darnell, a film star whom he meets at a friend's home. This quick, romantic affair also ends in a quarrel and then is followed by another late-hour clash with the mistress.

Resolution of the complicated plotting finds Merrill telephoning Miss Neff, finding she's still alive: He then calls Miss Darnell. She's still around, so he goes upstairs, finds his wife's body. Before calling the police, Merrill takes time to arrange for a single tearose to be delivered to Miss Darnell on the boat she is taking to England, and the fadeout comes on this last gesture to romance.

There's not much the principals can do with the characters, and Roy Baker's direction fails to help them surmount the material. Brief, smaller parts fall to Steven Geray, Mauri Lynn, nitery singer, and Bill Walker, among others. "Too Late for Spring" and "Look at Me," are the tunes used, the first by Alfred Newman and Haven Gillespie, and the latter by Newman and Ken Darby.

The Hour of 13

Charming Raffles-type Scotland Yard yarn.

Hollywood, Sept. 29.

Metro release of Hayes Goetz production. Stars Peter Lawford; features Dawn Addams, Roland Culver, Derek Bond, Leslie Dwyer, Michael Hordern, Colin Gordon. Directed by Harold French. Screenplay, Leon Gordon, Howard Emmett Rogers; based on novel by Philip MacDonald; camera, Guy Green; editors, Robert Watts, Raymond Poulton; music, composed and conducted by John Addison, played by the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. Previewed Sept. 24, '52. Running time, 79 MINS.

| Nicholas Revel | Peter Lawford |
| Jane Frensham | Dawn Addams |
| Connor | Roland Culver |
| Sir Christopher Lenhurst | Derek Bond |
| Ernie Perker | Leslie Dwyer |
| Sir Herbert Frensham | Michael Hordern |
| MacStreet | Colin Gordon |
| Mrs. Chumley Orr | Heather Thatcher |
| Ford | Jack McNaughton |
| Mr. Chumley Orr | Campbell Cotts |
| Lady Elmbridge | Fabia Drake |
| Anderson | Michael Goodliffe |
| Magistrate of Court | Moultrie Kelsall |
| Cummings | Peter Copley |
| The "Terror" | Richard Shaw |

A slick jewel thief versus Scotland Yard, with a skulking murderer who has it in for London bobbies as an extra melodramatic touch, are the motivating factors behind this tale of charming skullduggery, lightly told under the title of "The Hour of 13." It's an okay companion feature entry offering.

The Hayes Goetz production has been filmed against an authentic London background, lending a nice touch to the 1890 setting of the Philip MacDonald story, scripted by Leon Gordon and Howard Emmett Rogers. Peter Lawford is the dashing jewel thief, pleasantly and likeably delivering the Rafflish character. He and his accomplices, Leslie Dwyer, a cabbie, and Colin Gordon, an insurance appraiser, have illegal designs on a valuable emerald. They manage to steal it at a swank party, but the rapier-wielding terror kills a bobbie who is guarding the affair, upsetting the plans for escape.

From then on, Harold French's direction makes it a good chase film as Lawford comes under the suspicions of Scotland Yard superintendent Roland Culver, both for the theft and the killings that have grown to an alarming total. Lawford's wits manage to keep him one jump ahead of Culver as he waits for the killing hue and cry to die down so he can dispose of the jewel. While this is going on he turns his attention to the pleasant chore of courting Dawn Addams, daughter of a Scotland Yard commissioner and betrothed of Derek Bond. When the chase gets too close, Lawford comes up with a scheme to trap the police-killer, executes it neatly but fails to reckon with Culver's unrelenting determination, so bids a farewell to Miss Addams and goes off to pay his debt to society.

French's direction, the scripting and the trouping of the cast keep the plot unfolding at an entertaining pace. Miss Addams is an attractive romantic foil, and Bond answers the stuffed-shirt demands of his role. Dwyer's cabbie is excellent. Culver, Gordon, Michael Hordern, Jack McNaughton and other British players making up most of the cast all do their part to make this good, light entertainment.

Guy Green's photography and special photographic effects, the editing, music score and other behind-the-camera credits are worthy. Brog.

B.O. SOCK FOR REELS OF WALCOTT-MARCIANO

RKO should reap plenty of coin on its reelage of last week's Joe Walcott-Rocky Marciano heavyweight title fight, in which the latter lifted the crown via the kayo route in the 13th round at Philadelphia.

Tightly edited to show the exciting aspects of each of the 13 rounds, the clips had the benefit of a slugfest that in itself was exciting all the way, with audience always expectant of the one blow that could end it. And the right hand that ended the fight after less than a minute of the 13th was a fitting, explosive climax to a contest that had Walcott unquestionably on his way to a successful defense of the title that he won more than a year ago in his kayo of Ezzard Charles.

All highlights of the fight are captured by the camera, and Jimmy Powers supplies whatever fill-in commentary necessary. Sidelight explanations aren't vitally needed, however, since the excellent camerawork caught everything, including the closeups of the devastating body attacks employed by the aged champion and his rock-ribbed challenger.

The crushing right of Marciano that spelled finish to the battle is easily evident in the films, and if there was any question of the blow, the slow-motion unspooling reveals the devastation of the belt. Kahn.

Pine-Thomas have another of their acceptable outdoor action features in "The Blazing Forest," a tall-timber yarn that shapes toward good prospects in the general market. As usual with P-T entries, the stress is on rugged action, dressed in Technicolor, with good exploitation possibilities.

Location lensing sets up the outdoors flavor for the screen story by Lewis R. Foster and Winston Miller. Plot mixes in a romance angle, as well as a good and bad-brother twist, to balance off the action sequences involved with log-

CENSORSHIP SEALS PRESS-PIX TIE

'53 Cannes Fete to Open in March; Film Festivals Mushroom Over World

Paris, Sept. 23.

With the Venice Film Festival still an echo here, the Cannes Fete is already being discussed and planned for next year. This second big competitive festival will have new rules and will be staged early so as to leave a gap between it and Venice fete. This would allow each to have a good choice of the worthy films. Another reason for the March 11-26 dates stems from the difficulties encountered last year with the Bureau of Tourism. The 1952 festival cut into the already going season, and it would prefer to have it held during the offseason so as to get special rates from hotels and help cure the dull trade.

The Cannes fete also will be cut down in running time, according to Director Favre Le Bret. A selection committee will be formed to pick the films, and only 12 pix will be officially entered in the competish. Other films will be shown during the day. Prizes have not been set as yet, but there may be only one for the best film.

In spite of the agreement of the International Producers' Assn. to support only two competitive festivals annually, Venice and Cannes, there are still many fetes unspooling every year, with new ones mushrooming out in all parts of the world. Though they are considered unofficial and no prizes are awarded in many cases.

This year already has seen fetes in Knokke-Le-Zoute, Belgium, Berlin, Vichy (a public referendum festival), Madrs, India, Uruguay and Edinburgh. In the offing there are festivals planned for Rio de Janeiro (in 1954), Acapulco, Mexico, and one in Moscow, this year.

20th-Fox, Artie House In Tussle Over Switch In Bookings of 'O. Henry'

Tussle is going on between 20th-Fox and the Fine Arts Theatre, New York art film showcase, over distrib's move in throwing booking of "O. Henry's Full House" to Brandt's Trans-Lux 52nd St. house after originally signing contract for pic with Richard Davis, Fine Arts operator.

Davis is burning over 20th-Fox switch and currently discussing things with his attorney, Louis Nizer. Davis' position is that while he has had his differences with 20th over the film, he never released the company from its contract. According to Davis, 20th had made concessions and then tried to renege. 20th spokesman this week minimized whole issue as a normal difficulty between buyer and seller. He said that Davis, after ogling Chaplin's "Limelight," had asked to be released of his contract and that 20th had accepted, leaving the company free to do as it pleased.

Davis says he originally contracted with the understanding that 20th would eliminate the "Ransom of Red Chief" sequence, starring Fred Allen and Oscar Levant. Darryl F. Zanuck, 20th production chief, objected to this but later

Stanwyck in 'Fire'

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Stanley Kramer signed Barbara Stanwyck to star in "Circle of Fire," replacing Mary Pickford, who turned down the role because the film lacked a Technicolor commitment. Script is being rewritten to make the star a younger woman.

Filming will start late in November to permit Miss Stanwyck to complete her role in "Titanic" at 20th-Fox.

20th's 25c Divvy

A quarterly cash dividend of 25c per share on outstanding 20th-Fox common stock has been declared payable Oct. 31, 1952, to stockholders of record at the close of business on Oct. 15, 1952.

Pic Teaches ABC's Of Political Campaigning

ABC's of campaigning are being taught volunteer Republican workers in the current Presidential race by means of a 20-minute film titled "Henry Lends a Hand."

Sponsored by the Committee for Political Education and Information, the film was made last summer by Information Productions, Inc. It tells how a young American couple became interested in political work and examines their failures and successes in canvassing, publicity, speechmaking, etc.

Cast as the couple are John Ward and Frances Helm. IPI owners Alfred Butterfield and Thomas H. Wolf produced from their own script. Dwight Weist narrates.

Carriage Trade Lured to Russe Opera-Ballet Pic

Apparently moved by the axiom, "art knows no barriers," the carriage trade is swarming to the Stanley Theatre, N. Y., where the Soviet-made "The Grand Concert" went into its fifth week Saturday (27). The Russian opera and ballet picture, which features leading Soviet artists, is rated by house operator David Fine as his best grosser there since "Ivan the Terrible" in 1945.

Many of the Stanley's new patrons, Fine observed this week, are those who attend the Metropolitan Opera. That institution, incidentally, is diagonally across the street from the Stanley. Newcomers heading for a "Concert" screening are frequently chauffeur-driven in limousines.

Fine credits the capacity business to a number of favorable reviews, principally Howard Thompson's notice in the Times plus an editorial, and Bosley Crowther's Sunday followup piece in the same

CARLTON'S $504,385 LIABILITIES IN BKPTCY.

Rex Carlton, who once headed the now defunct Laurel Films, filed a voluntary petition of bankruptcy in N. Y. Federal Court last week, listing liabilities of $504,385 and $300 in assets. All his assets, the indie producer explained in the papers, had been taken over by two major creditors, the Chemical Bank & Trust Co. and the Motion Picture Releasing Corp.

Chemical Bank originally lent Carlton $400,000. He repaid part of this amount but still owes a balance of $155,800. His indebtedness to MPRC results from a $55,800 judgment the firm won against him in N. Y. Supreme Court last year. Other large creditors include Kenneth Meredith and J. Edward Pluss, $146,950; Reeves Sound Studio, $68,291, and Deluxe Laboratories, $29,000.

Although listing $504,385 as his liabilities, Carlton claims that he's not entirely liable for $455,708 of this amount since his former associates, Joseph Lerner and Edmund Dorfman, are also involved in running up this tally. Among unsecured creditors named in the petition are Martin Stern, $25,000; Gail Kubic, $10,000, and L. Liebson, $3,500.

While heading Laurel, Carlton turned out such films as "Guilty Bystander," a Zachary Scott-Faye Emerson starrer, and "Mr. Universe," which had Jack Carson, Robert Alda and Janis Paige in top roles. More recently he reportedly was associated with producing an indie venture called "The Miami Story."

COMMON FIGHT KEY TO BOND

An important but overlooked adjunct of the industry's censorship fight, according to many pixites, is that it did more to bring about a friendly press than all previous direct overtures.

Film execs frankly state that the pro-industry comments stemmed from the time of the U. S. Supreme Court's decisions on the "Miracle" and "Pinky" cases. When the rulings were handed down, the nation's newspapers were almost unanimous in hailing the pic industry's attainment of a status similar to a free press.

Pro-industry support continued as local newspapers offered editorial aid in the effort to strike down local and state censors. The trend continued with solid press support against the Dept. of Justice's antitrust action in aiming to force pic firms to sell their 16m films to television. Speed and tone of the editorials condemning the Government's action, with important and influential newspapers aligning themselves with the industry, surprised veteran filmites who for years had been accustomed to a lukewarm if not hostile press.

It's pointed out that less than five years ago serious attempts were made to elicit press support for the censorship battle, but to no avail. Overtures to individual newspapers and publisher associations resulted in a cold shoulder. At that time, films and the radio-TV industry failed to get the press to join them in presenting a solid front against Government regulations considered of a censorship nature. The general stand-offish press attitude continued until only recently. Industryites attribute the change to the press' realization that it was a common fight and that when one medium of communication is threatened, all are.

Press' friendliness to films has been reflected in other ways in

Theatre Execs Become 'Students' of Ballyhoo Course Set by AMPA

Pointing up the importance being placed by exhibs in more aggressive exploitation is the interest displayed by higher-echelon execs in the pub-ad courses instituted by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, New York. Weekly session, which got underway last Thursday (25 were originally conceived to instruct young industryites in the elements of film showmanship and ballyhoo. To the surprise of AMPA, however, many experienced and vet filmites signed up for the 12-session course.

Classes are being held in various N. Y. screening rooms. Theatremen returning to "school" include Bob Shapiro, managing director of the N. Y. Paramount; Gene Pleschette, manager of the Brooklyn Paramount; Nick Schermerhorn, Walter Reade circuit general manager, and Paul Peterson, drive-in supervisor for the Reade organization. In addition, the "students" include top city managers and theatre managers from the Reade circuit. Tuition for the Reade personnel, $15 per person, is being paid by the Reade company. Latter arrangement is also being contemplated by RKO Theatres, which is currently polling its managers to line up volunteers.

Because of interest being shown in the showmanship courses outside the N. Y. metropolitan area, AMPA plans to publish the text of the initial series. Sessions will be tape-recorded.

Par's Italo Distrib

"Sensualita," Ponti-De Laurentiis Italiah production, has been acquired for release outside the American market by Paramount, which participated in financing the film.

Pic will be distributed in the U. S. and Canada by Lopert Films.

RKO's New Mgt. Seeking to Stretch Product Until Assured of New Pix

With production at the studio shut down while the new management group, headed by Ralph Stolkin, is in the process of taking over the operation from Howard Hughes, RKO's distribution force is aiming to stretch the available product until it is assured of a steady flow from its own factory.

Currently there are 13 pix set or nearly ready for release, with only five completely bearing the RKO stamp. Although the 13 pix are more or less ready to move through the distrib channels, various factors exist that could conceivably delay several.

Among the five exclusively-made RKO films are three starring Jean Simmons, all made during the period Miss Simmons was having a court squabble with Hughes. In addition, Miss Simmons has a leading role in Gabriel Pascal's production of G. B. Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," made on the RKO lot. Her other pix include "The Murder," "Beautiful, But Dangerous" and "Breakup." Although "Androcles" and the other pix are set to go, RKO's sales force does not think it wise to give exhibs and the public too much of Miss Simmons at one time. As a result, pix will be held and released on a staggered basis.

Another pic, although completed, is still in the problem category. "Jet Pilot" has been in and out of the editing mill several times and still hadn't been processed to the satisfaction of studio officials up

Argentine Pic Nixed By N.Y. Regents Bd.

Albany, Sept. 30.

"Slaves of the Underworld," Spanish-language picture produced in Argentina, cannot be publicly shown in New York State because it would "tend to corrupt morals and incite to crime," the Board of Regents decided Friday (25).

The Regents upheld Hugh M. Flick, director of its division, who refused a state license to the film, which tells the efforts of a doctor to track down the killer of his wife, slain under circumstances indicating she had been a marijuana addict and had connections with underworld characters. The physician exposes himself to the drug and becomes an addict, but finally is cured and the drug ring smashed.

The appellant, A. J. Film Distribution Co. of New York City, through attorney Arnold Jacobs, argued that the film would help check drug addiction.

Would Overhaul RKO Theatres Bd. In Pix Co.'s Sale

Overhauling of the RKO Theatres board of directors is due shortly in the wake of sale by Howard Hughes of his controlling stock in RKO Pictures.

Having dropped the film shares, Hughes expectedly will get the legalistics moving to take over the active ownership, which includes direct voting rights, of the 929,000 shares of the theatre outfit's stock trusteed with the Irving Trust Co. Trust arrangement was part of the RKO antitrust consent decree and was to last as long as Hughes held the pic company stock.

Board now comprises prexy Sol A. Schwartz and Edward C. Raftery, representing management; William J. Wardall and Ben-Fleming Sessel, for Irving Trust, and David J. Greene and A. Louis Oresman. Greene led the proxy battle against the management last year, the result of which was his and Oresman's election to the board.

Extent of the reshuffling due is not clear at this time but it's regarded as a certainty that Greene and Oresman will stay on. They own 107,950 shares of the chain's stock and had numerous other minority stockholders on their side in the proxy row. The two, incidentally, have been steadily increasing their holdings.

Observers believe that the likely source for Hughes would be for him to remove the two Irving Trust reps.

BERNSTEIN-HITCHCOCK READY 2 MORE FILMS

Sidney L. Bernstein, who's partnered with Alfred Hitchcock in Transatlantic Pictures, planed to London, Friday (26), after a nine-month stay in the U. S. and Canada to supervise production of TP's Montgomery Clift starrer, "I Confess." Directed by Hitchcock, the venture has been locationing in Quebec for the past efw weeks.

Prior to his departure from New York Bernstein disclosed that Transatlantic is readying two more projects. First on the indie company's agenda is "Dark Duty" while "To Catch a Thief will roll in England next year, with Cary Grant as the male lead.

Although "Confess" will be released through Warners, Bernstein declared that no distribution agreements as yet have been made for either "Duty" or "Thief." The producer, who's also a top exec of Granada Theatres in England, expects to return from London soon.

RKO to Release Atom Bomb Maneuvers Next Month in Govt. Deal

RKO-Pathe expects to have the color footage of the Yucca Flat, Nevada, atomic warfare maneuvers of the Marine Corps ready for release some time next month. Outfit is currently editing the 29,000 feet of footage, which contains for the first time tinted shots of an A-bomb blast. Film, shot by 15 Marine Corps cameramen, will be cut to 1,530 feet for a 17-minute two-reeler and will be released by RKO under the title of "Operation A-Bomb."

RKO snared the footage after the Defense Dept., via the Motion Picture Assn. of America, asked the major filmeries to have a gander at the footage and to suggest what could be done in the matter of editing and distribution. RKO apparently offered the Defense Dept. the best deal. No coin was involved, of course, the Defense Dept. being interested in the assembling and distribution of the footage as a public relations effort. Only stipulation was that RKO turn over to the armed forces 16 prints of the film for instructional use. Coin received from regular theatrical rentals goes direct to RKO with no strings attached.

Jay Bonafield, RKO Pathe's exec v.p., serves as producer, and Burton Benjamin is writing the narration and supervising the assembling. Hearst newsman Bob Considine is doing the narration.

Suspends Farley Granger

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Farley Granger was suspended by Samuel Goldwyn Productions over the weekend as the result of his refusal to participate in promotional activities for "Hans Christian Andersen." Granger is not in the film, which stars Danny Kaye.

Star was asked to travel to New York to make the publicity rounds and refused.

Techni's 50c Divvy

Following a board meeting in New York last week, Technicolor declared a dividend of 50c per share payable Oct. 20 to stockholders of record on Oct. 6.

Melon marks the third 50c divvy per share paid by Technicolor during 1952.

L.A. Lagging; 'Pirate' Brisk $31,000, 'Devil'-'My Man' Okay $27,000, 'Paris' Light 18G, 'Hawk' 19G; 'House' 8G, 2d

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

First-run biz continues to slip in current frame despite five new entries. Best newcomer is "Crimson Pirate" with good $31,000 in three theatres. Combo of "Devil Makes Three" and "My Man and I" shapes fairly nice $27,000 in 9-day week for two houses.

Light $18,000 is seen for "Assignment Paris" playing in two spots while "Woman of North Country" looks small $6,000 in four locations. "Golden Hawk," playing in two sites, shapes mild $19,000, with fight pix helping.

"Full House" still is smart at $8,000 in second session at the Canon. "Just For You" is way down to $13,500 in second round in two houses.

Estimates for This Week

Los Angeles, Chinese (FWC) (2,097; 2,048; 70-$1.10)—"Just For You" (Par) and "Tropical Heatwave" (Rep) (2d wk). Way off to $13,500. Last week, $20,300.

Hollywood, Wiltern, Orpheum (WB-Metropolitan) (2,756; 2,344; 2,213; 70-$1.10)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Midnight Melody" (Rep) (reissue) (Orpheum only). Good $31,000. Last week, Hollywood, Wiltern, "Yankee Buccaneer" (U) (10 days), $13,000. Orpheum Fox Beverly, "Big Sky" (RKO) and "Jungle Chang" (RKO) (Orpheum only) (5th wk), $8,200.

Loew's State, Egyptian (UATC) (2,404; 1,538; 70-$1.10) — "Devil Makes Three" (M-G) and "My Man and I" (M-G). Fairly nice $27,000 in 9 days. Last week, "Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "You For Me" (M-G) (2d wk-5 days), $8,500.

Hillstreet, Pantages (RKO) (2,752; 2,812; 70-$1.10) — "Golden Hawk" (Col) and "Voodoo Tiger" (Col). Light $19,000. Last week, "The Ring" (UA) and "Cry, Beloved Country" (UA), $27,600.

Beverly Hills, Downtown (WB) (1,612; 1,757; 80-$1.20) — "Les Miserables" (20th) (4th wk). Small $6.000. Last week, $7,000.

Los Angeles, Hollywood Paramounts (UPT-F&M) (3,300; 1,430; 70-$1.10) — "Assignment Paris" (Col) and "Oriental Evil" (Indie) (L. A. Par only). Light $18,000. Last week, L. A. Paramount, "Wagons West" (Mono) with Lionel Hampton orch topping stagebill, $27,300.

Ritz, Loyola, Vogue, Globe (FWC) (1,370; 1,248; 885; 782; 70-$1.10)—"Woman of North Country" (Rep) and "Gallant Thoroughbred" (Rep) (reissue). Lukewarm $6,000. Last week, Vogue, Loyola, Globe, El Rey, "Pancho Villa Returns" (Indie) and "Feudin' Fools" (Mono), $8,700.

Canon (ABC) (533; $1.20)—"Full House" (20th) (2d wk). Smart $8.000. Last week, smash $9,200.

Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; 80-$1.50) —"Carrie" (Par) (7th wk). Dull $2,700. Last week, $2,800.

Four Star (UATC) (900; 70-90)—"Cyrano" (UA) and "Kon-Tiki" (RKO) (reissues). Thin $2,300. Last week, "One Minute Zero" (RKO) (3d wk), $2,200.

United Artists (UATC) (2,100; 70-90)—"Yankee Buccaneer" (U) and "Scatterbrain" (Rep) (2d wk). Slow $2,300. Last week, $4,500.

Palace (Metropolitan) (1,230; 70-90)—"World in Arms" (U) (6th wk) and "Where's Charley" (WB) (2d run). So-so $4,000 or near. Last week, with Hollywood Paramount, $10,500.

'Ivanhoe' Giant $40,000, Pitt.; 'Monkey' Tall 9G, 'Fatima' Fancy 9½G, 3d

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

"Ivanhoe" is delivering the expected smash session at the Penn, and will shake loose the biggest gross there in years. Looks set for a run. Walcott-Marciano fight pix are helping second week of "Crimson Pirate" at Stanley while Marilyn Monroe's b.o. draw is credited with putting over "Monkey Business" at the Harris. "Untamed Frontier" just so-so at Fulton. Third week of "Lady of Fatima" and second of "Lady Vanishes" both are still in the chips.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 50-85)—"Untamed Frontier" (U). Nothing much for this at $5,000. Last week, "Full House" (20th), $4,200.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 50-85)—"Monkey Business" (20th). Sturdy $9,000. Sticks two extra days to put house back on Friday opening

'Fatima' Huge 29G Tops Slow Philly

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.

"Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" struck a fast pace right at the start and was boosted further by a big weekend. "Assignment Paris" also broke well and maintained its pace at the Goldman. "My Man and I" looks okay at Stanton. "Fearless Fagan" is dull at the Midtown. "Rose Bowl Story" is being helped by Duke Ellington on the stage but only fair session looks at the Earle.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (625; 85-$1.20)—"Merry Widow" (M-G) (5th wk). Good $9,000. Last week, fine $10,000.

Boyd (WB) 2,360; 80-$1.30)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB). Terrific $29,000. Last week, "Devil Makes Three" (M-G), mild $8,500 for last 5 days.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 50-99)—"Monkey Business" (20th) (2d wk) plus Marciano-Walcott fight pix. Fight film's helping to hold this to big $17,000. Last week, $20,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; 50-99) — "Assignment Paris" (Col). Sturdy 20,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) (5th wk), great $10,000.

Mastbaum (WB) (4,360; 50-99)—"What Price Glory" (20th) (3d wk). Way down to $8,500. Last week, small $11,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; 50-99) —"Fearless Fagan" (M-G). Sad $5,000. Last week, "Captain Pirate" (Col), $6,500.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 50-99)—"Full House" (20th) (2d wk). Thin $9,000. Last week, strong $18,000.

Stanley (WB) (2,900; 50-99)—"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) (2d wk) plus fight pix. Mild $13,000. Last week, good $20,000.

Stanton (WB) (1,473; 50-99)—"My Man and I" (M-G). Okay $8,500. Last week, "Black Swan" (20th) and "Laura" (20th) (reissues), $8,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 85-$1.20)—"Dreamboat" (20th) (4th wk). Holding at $5,000 near last week's big $5,200.

Earle (WB) (2,700; 50-$1.10)—"Rose Bowl Story" (Mono) with Duke Ellington onstage. Band is helping but only fair $16,500 looms. Last week, not open.

'Pirate' Socko $15,000, Port.; 'Sky' Rugged 13G

Portland, Ore., Sept. 30.

Biz has gone into a slump here partly because of the opening of city's first TV station. Extreme heat also has hurt. Standout currently is "Crimson Pirate," smash at the Broadway. "Big Sky" shapes nice in two spots.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; 65-90) —"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Without Warning" (UA). Smash $15,000. Last week, "Where's Charley" (WB) and "Captive City" (UA), $7,000.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,850; 65-90) —"Washington Story" (M-G) and "Desert Passage" (RKO). Fine $8,000 or close. Last week, "The Merry Widow" (M-G) and "You For Me" (M-G) (3d wk), $8,000.

Mayfair (Evergreen) (1,500; 65-90)—"Wild Heart" (RKO) and "Maytime In Mayfair" (Indie). Mild $3,500. Last week, legit play.

Oriental (Evergreen) (2,000; 65-90)—"Big Sky" (RKO) and Marciano-Walcott fight pix, day-date with Orpheum. Good $5,000. Last week, "Monkey Business" (20th) and "Shores of Tripoli" (20th) (reissue), $4,800.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,750; 65-90)—"Big Sky" (RKO) and Marciano fight films. Nice $8.000. Last week, "Greatest Show" (Par), $9,000.

Paramount (Evergreen) (3,400; 65-90)—"Monkey Business" (20th) and "Shores Tripoli" (20th) (reissue) (2d wk). Big $7,400. Last week, $8,800.

United Artists (Parker) (890; 65-90—"Just For You" (Par) (2d wk). Oke $7,500. Last week, fine $9,400.

Crosby Hotsy 10G Tops Mild Mpls.

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Fresh entries are limited to four bills as holdovers and moveovers currently are perking here this session. Comparatively limited choice of new product and weekend return of warm weather helped to depopulate the Loop and make for boxoffice blues.

First honors go to "Just for You" at Radio City, where good. "One Minute to Zero" looks fine at Orpheum. "Fearless Fagan" and "Les Miserables" are finding the going rough. Moveovers of "The Quiet Man" and "Sudden Fear" are doing well.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Par) (1,600; 50-76)—"Les Miserables" (20th). Well received all around, but absence of cast names a handicap. Good $5,000. Last week, "Merry Widow," (M-G) (3d wk), $4,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 50-76)—"Don't Bother To Knock" (20th) (2d wk). Potency of Monroe-Widmark name combo helping this one at boxoffice here. Okay $4,000. Last week, $6,200.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 50-76)—"Quiet Man" (Rep.) (m.o.). Moved here after hitting good initial Radio City pace. First moveover here in many months. Nothing but

'Ivanhoe' Wow $57,000 in OK Hub; 'Miracle' Brisk 17G, 'Quiet' 18G, 2d

Boston, Sept. 30.

Two newcomers, "Ivanhoe" at State and Orpheum and "Miracle of Lady of Fatima" at Astor, each at tilted prices, are both great. With the exception of the oldie combo, "Fuller Brush Man" and "Fuller Brush Girl" at the Boston, and return date of "Tales of Hoffmann" at Beacon Hill other majors are holding over. "Stranger in Between" at Exeter opened Sunday. "Quiet Man" still is getting sizable coin in second Met session.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; 74-$1.20)—"Miracle of Lady of Fatima" (WB). Great $17,000. Last week, "Assignment Paris" (Col) (2d wk), below expectations at $5,000.

Beacon Hill (Beacon Hill) (682; 50-90)—"Tales of Hoffmann" (UA). Opened today (Tues.). Last week, "Lady Vanishes" (UA) and "The Scarf" (UA) (2d wk), nice $4,000.

Boston (RKO) (3,000; 40-85)—"Fuller Brush Man" (Col) and "Fuller Brush Girl" (Col) (reissues) plus Marciano-Walcott fight pix. So-so $9,000. Last week, "Golden Hawk" (Col) and "Desert Passage" (RKO), good $13,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,300; 60-80)—"Stranger in Between" (U). Opened Sunday (28). Last week, "Island Rescue" (U) and "Ivory Hunter" (U) (4th wk), oke $4,000.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 40-85)—"Just for You" (Par) and "Woman of North Country" (Rep) (2d wk). Off to about $3,500 following oke $5,500 for first.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 40-85)—"Big Sky" (RKO) and "Secret People" (Lip) (2d wk). Held at $14,000 after solid $19,500 for first. Fight pix added during current session.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,367; 40-85)—"Quiet Man" (Rep) (2d wk). Skidded to $18,000 following sturdy $26,000 opener, but below expectancy.

Orpheum (Loew) (3,000; 74-$1.25) —"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Wow $34,000. Last week, "Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "Rainbow Round Shoulder" (Col), slow $9.500 in six days.

Paramount (NET) (1,700; 40-85) —"Just for You" (Par) and "Woman of North Country" (Rep) (2d wk). Near $9,000 after tasty $14,000 for first.

State (Loew) (3,500; 74-$1.25)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Sock $23,000. Last week, "Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "Rainbow Round Shoulder" (Col), slender $5,000 in 6 days.

'Quiet' Sockeroo $18,000 in Cleve.

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

Main stem houses are galvanized by a brace of boxoffice heavyweights, led by State's "Quiet Man," which did terrific weekend biz, and looks like one of house toppers for season. "Ice Capades of 1953" moved into Arena to cop capacity trade at start but is not hurting many of key spots. "Miracle of Fatima" still is sock on third round at Allen. "High Noon" on stayover at Hipp continues to be big. Same goes for "Ivanhoe" on ninth lap at Stillman.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (Warner) (3,000: 55-85)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB) (3d wk). Sock $10,000 after $19,000 last folio.

Hipp (Telemagemont) (3,700; 55-85)—"High Noon" (UA) (2d wk). Smart $13,000, following great $22.000 last week.

Ohio (Loew's) (3,300; 55-85)—"Son of Paleface" (Par) (m.o.). Stout $7,500. Last week, "Jumping Jacks" (Par) (m.o.), great $8,500 on third downtown week.

Palace (RKO) (3,300; 55-85)—"Assignment Paris" (Col). Okay $13.000. Last week, "Full House" (20th), average $7,000, but week helped by telecast of Walcott-Marciano fight, which pulled $4,500.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-85)—"Quiet Man" (Rep). Great $18,000, and holding. Last week, "Son of Paleface" (Par), big $16,000.

Stillman (Loew's) (2,700; 55-85) —"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (9th wk). Fine $9.000, about same as last week.

Tower (Telemagemont) (500; 55-85)—"Comanche Territory" (U) and "Apache Drums" (U) (reissues). Oke $2,500. Last week, "What Price Glory" (20th) (m.o.), average $2,400.

'Alley' Lively $14,500, Toronto; 'Quiet' Terrif 25G, 'House' 11G in 2d

Toronto, Sept. 30.

It is mostly holdover at the major first-runs but all appear warranted. In fact, "Quiet Man" looms even bigger on second stanza than first at Imperial, both being terrific. Also in subsequent frames are "Affair in Trinidad," "Full House," "Carrie" and "Merry Widow," all big. One of few newcomers, "Glory Alley," shapes okay in six houses.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i. e., without the 20% tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Woman'-'Wac' Hep $14,000 in Frisco

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

Plenty of holdovers here this week, with the overall gross picture not very bright. "Woman of North Country" paired with "WAC from Walla Walla" shapes nice at the Golden Gate while "Caribbean" with two days of vaude also looms fine at Paramount. TV of fight boosted second week of "Just For You," the telecast grossing $7,200 which represented standing room capacity at the Paramount last week. "Quiet Man" looks strong in second round at the Fox.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,850; 65-95)—"Woman Of North Country" (Rep) and "WAC Walla Walla" (Rep). Nice $14,000. Last week, "One Minute To Zero" (RKO) (2d wk), oke $12,200.

'IVANHOE' BOFF 32G, ST. LOO; 'MONKEY' 16G

St. Louis, Sept. 30.

Despite excellent weather over the weekend and hiked admission scale, always frowned on by the natives, "Ivanhoe" is creating the big noise here currently at the downtown Loew's. It is landing a terrific total. Fine bally is getting "One Minute To Zero" off to a solid start at the Fox. "Monkey Business" also looks fine at Ambassador. "Tales of Hoffmann" shapes okay in holdover in two small houses.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (F&M) (3,000; 60-75)—"Monkey Business" (20th) and "Woman of North Country" (Rep). Fine $16,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Models, Inc." (Indie), solid $15,500.

'Paleface' Powerful 17G, Seattle; 'Fear' Good 9G

Seattle, Sept. 30.

Biz here this round is sagging, with newcomers on slow side for most part. However, the Coliseum is in the chips, with "Son of Paleface," aided by fight films. "Miracle of Fatima" still is doing well in second session.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; 90-$1.25)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB) (2d wk). Good $4,500 after big $7,400 opener.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,829; 65-90)—"Son of Paleface" (Par) and fight pix. The 13-round bout film is definite help. Huge $17,000. Last week, "Capt. Pirate" (Col) and "Last Train to Bombay" (Col), okay $8,700.

Fifth Avenue (Evergreen) (2,366; 65-90)—"Les Miserables" (20th). Mild $7,000. Last week, "Full House" (20th), nice $9,000 in 9 days.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,650; 65-90) —"Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "Allan Lane" (Rep). Mild $6,000 or near. Last week, "Devil Makes 3" (M-G), 2d-wk-3 days), $2,600.

'Pirate' Rousing $15,000 in D.C.

Washington, Sept. 30.

Main stem shapes mild compared to past week when preem of "Ivanhoe" and the Marciano-Walcott bouts proved to be biz boosters. Sole newcomer to make much of a dent is "Crimson Pirate," solid at the Warner. "My Wife's Best Friend" plus vaude, is so-so at Loew's Capitol. "Ivanhoe," in second stanza at Loew's Palace, continues boff after breaking all records on initial Saturday. "Carrie," in second week at Trans-Lux, is sturdy.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 55-95) — "Wife's Best Friend" (20th) plus vaude. Okay $18,000, but below recent weeks. Last week, "Island of Desire" (UA) plus vaude, nice $20,000.

Columbia (Loew's) (1,174; 50-80) — "Caribbean" (Par). Fine $8,000. Last week, "Merry Widow" (M-G) (m.o.), nice $5,000 for third downtown week.

Dupont (Lopert) (372; 50-85) — "Cry Beloved Country" (Indie). Bright $4,500 for small-seater. Last week, "Song of Bernadette" (20th) (reissue), firm $4,000 in 10 days.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 50-85) — "Allegheny Uprising" (RKO) and "Annie Oakley" (RKO) (reissues) plus fight pix. Good $9,000 for these oldies with fight reels helping. Last week, "Big Sky" (RKO) (2d wk), steady $8,500 for 6½ days. Absolute capacity for TV fight, with standees bringing total to slightly under $6,000 for the one shot.

Palace (Loew's) (2,370; 74-$1.25) —"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Continues as champ with boff $32,000. Stays. Last week's smash $49,000 was second only to "Quo Vadis" (M-G), which played at higher scale.

Playhouse (Lopert) (485; 50-$1) —"High Treason" (Indie) (6th-final wk). Okay $3,500 for stage of run, and moves on. Last week, $4,000.

Metropolitan (Warner) (1,200; 50-80)—"Stolen Face" (Lip) and "Outlaw Women" (Lip). Average $5,000. Last week, "Woman of North Country" (Rep), $3,000.

Warner (WB) (2,174; 50-80) — "Crimson Pirate" (WB). Solid $15,000 to top town for newcomers. Last week, "Assignment Paris" (Col), oke $11,000. Televised fight brought in additional SRO, and $6,700, with house scaled at $3.60.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 60-$1) — "Carrie" (Par). Bright $9,000 after big $11,000 last week. Holds again.

Strong Films Lift B'way; 'You're Mine' Big 145G, 'Somebody'-Mary Small Tall 90G, 'Widow' Sock 41G, 'Magic' $10,400

Five new bills, all except one doing well, plus cool weather and seasonal factors, are keeping Broadway first-run business on an even keel this session. Offish trend last Thursday (25) and early Friday was counteracted by the launching of fresh product and a sharp upbeat on Saturday. Both the Music Hall and the Roxy shape big with their new shows. All houses suffered on Tuesday (22), with the Nixon TV speech blamed.

"Because You're Mine" with stage show is heading for $145,000 in opening stanza at the Hall. "Somebody Loves Me," plus Mary Small, Al Bernie and iceshow heading stage lineup, wound up its initial frame with $90,000 or near at the Roxy. Personals by George Jessel, Milton Berle, Benny Fields and Blossom Seeley opening day (24) got the film off to a rousing start.

New ace straight-filmer is "Merry Widow," which looks smash $41,000 or thereabouts on initial round at the State. Fullscale bally was a helpful factor. Lone weakie newcomer is "You For Me," with dull $5,000 opening at the Globe stanza despite a preview on Sunday (28). "Magic Box" rounded out its first week on Monday (29) with a solid $10,400 at the Normandie, with a longrun in prospect.

Second session of "Snows of Kilimanjaro" continues in smash style with around $61,000 at the Rivoli, with an indefinite run assured. "The Quiet Man" still is going great guns, with $27,000 or better in prospect for the sixth frame at the Capitol.

"Big Jim McLain" with Mills Bros., Jean Carroll, Danny Lewis, Tommy Reynolds band heading stageshow finished its second stanza with an okay $53,000 at the Paramount. "Son of Paleface" opens today (Wed.) with Bob Hope, star of the film, making personals opening day.

"One Minute To Zero" is off considerably but still strong with $16,000 for second frame at the Criterion. "Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" continues okay with around $12,000 in sixth session at the Astor.

"High Noon" continues in sensational style with big $14,000 in current (10th) round at the Mayfair. "Affair in Trinidad" still is fine at $10,000 for its ninth Victoria stanza. "Night Without Sleep" and the usual eight acts of vaudeville is heading for a nice $22,000 at the Palace. Oddly enough the Walcott-Marciano fight pix do not appear to be helping much as an added feature on the bill.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (,300; 70-$1.50) —"Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" (WB) (6th wk). Current session ending today (Wed.) continues okay with around $12,000 in sight. Last week, good $13,500. Stays.

Park Avenue (Reade) (583; 90-$1.50) — "Mons. Fabre" (Indie) (4th wk). Third stanza ended Saturday (27) was trim $6,000 after fine $7,000 for second week.

Paris (Indie) (568; $1.25-$1.80)— "Savage Triangle" (Indie). Opened Monday (29) in fine fashion. In ahead, "Casque d'Or (Discina) (6th wk), was okay $5,500 after $5,800 for fifth week.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 80-$2.40)—"Because You're Mine" (M-G) with stageshow. Initial session ending today (Wed.) likely will hit big $145,000 but not up to recent Hall first-week gait. Holding, naturally. Last week, "Ivanhoe" (M-G) and stageshow (8th wk), nice $123,500, over hopes, to wind up a terrific eight-week run, biggest initial eight weeks in history of Hall.

Rivoli (UAT) (2,092; 70-$2) — "Snows of Kilimanjaro" (20th) (2d wk). Holding at smash $61,000 or near. First week was terrific $78,500, one of biggest opening weeks over at the Riv, but still slightly below expectancy.

Roxy (Nat'l) (5,886; 80-$2.20)— "Somebody Loves Me" (Par) plus Mary Small, Al Bernie, iceshow onstage (2d wk). Initial stanza ended last night (Tues.) climbed to big $90,000, with the Friars Club honoring Benny Fields and Blossom Seeley (pic is based on their lives), and including personals by Milton Berle, George Jessel, Joe E. Lewis, Corinne Calvet, others, helping give bill a terrific opening. Last week, "Monkey Business" (20th) with Kyle MacDonnell, George De Witt, iceshow onstage (3d, wk-5 days), okay $50,000 to round out nice run.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-$1.50)— "Merry Widow" (M-G) (2d wk). First week ended last night (Tues.) hit smash $41,000. In ahead, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) (7th wk-6 days), fine $13,000, to round out a great run, one of longest here in some time.

Sutton (R&B) (561; 90-$1.50) — "Man in White Suit" (U) (27th wk). Continues steady with $5,400 in 26th week ended Monday (29), after $6,200 for 25th round. "Four Poster" (Col) opens Oct. 15, playing day-date with Victoria.

Trans-Lux 60th St. (T-L) (453; 90-$1.50) — "Lady Vanishes" (UA) (9th wk). Continues at fancy $4,500 after good $4,000 for eighth round. Due to stay on. "Limelight" (UA) is scheduled to open Oct. 23, on two-a-day, reserved seat policy, playing day-date with Astor.

Trans-Lux 52d St. (T-L) (540; 90-$1.50)—"Ivory Hunter" (U) (7th wk). Sixth frame ended Sunday (28) was nice $4,800 after big $6,000 for fifth week.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,030; 70-$1.80) — "Affair in Trinidad' (Col) (10th wk). Ninth stanza ended last night (Tues.) was fine $10,000 or close. Eighth week was sturdy $12,000. "Four Poster' (Col) is due in Oct. 15.

'Fatima' Smash $24,000, Det.; 'Quiet' Lusty 17G, 'For You' Slow 13G, 2d

Detroit, Sept. 30.

"Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" is shaping socko at the Madison to pace the field this week. "Quiet Man" also looks big at the United Artists. "Just for You" is slow in second round at the Michigan. "What Price Glory" plus Marciano-Walcott fight pictures is mild at the Fox. "Caribbean" looks fairish at the Palms. "Devil Makes Three" shapes lukewarm at the Adams.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; 70-95) —"What Price Glory" (20th) and fight pix. Mild $22,000. Last week, "Leave to Heaven" (20th) and Laura" (20th) (reissues), modest $6,000 in 3 days, "Wait Til Sun Shines Nellie" (20th) plus Johnnie Ray heading stageshow, sock $39,800 in 3 days, way over expectancy.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 70-95)—"Just For You" (Par) and # Exhib Demands for Report on Where Eady Coin Goes Threatens Brit. Prod.

London, Sept. 30.

The unanswered question of where does the Eady money go?, which exhibitors have been pressing for months, has been leading to a rift so serious it may endanger the future of this scheme which helps British production.

The reluctance by the fund directorate, mainly reported to come from production interests, to reveal who was benefitting, and by how much, from the regular dividends paid out was one of the major factors leading to lack of co-operation from theatre operators. By last month, nearly 300 exhibs had contracted-out of the Eady setup and the number was seen to be growing at an alarming rate.

The crisis was reached when two prominent theatre owners, Sir Albert Clavering and former Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. prexy Arthur B. Watts intimated that they too would cancel-out unless the information was forthcoming.

An emergency meeting of the four trade associations was called last Wednesday (24) in a last-minute attempt to reconcile the opposing viewpoints of producers and exhibitors. At this meeting, apparently, production reps bowed to the overwhelming exhibitor demand and agreed to support their for months, has been leading to a claim for detailed information.

If harmony can be established on this issue of principle, it is likely that a new all-industry agreement will follow, insuring the prolongation of the Eady scheme. The decision is now being made a matter of urgency by the production industry, and during recent weeks there have been major pronouncements by studio toppers insisting that an early decision is necessary to insure the future of continued British film making. J. Arthur Rank's statement in his annual report and followed a week later by a similar expression of opinion by Harold C. Drayton, the British Lion topper. Although Rank was silent on the question, the latter did reveal that his corporation's share of the Eady coin would be materially in excess of the estimate of $1,400,000 given last year.

In a recent breakdown of the division of Eady money among the three majors, VARIETY last month estimated that the Rank group of producers had netted around $2,800,000, the British Lion group (including the Romulus product) had earned some $2,500,000 and the Associated British-Pathe outfit over $1,100,000.

3 British Major Chains Live Up to 1st-Feature Rules in 4th Quota Yr.

London, Sept. 30.

With the end of the fourth Quota year today (Tues.), an analysis shows that the three major circuits have each fulfilled their first feature commitments. The Associated British group topped the list with 20 British films screened in the year. Gaumont came second with 18 and Odeon third with 16. To fulfill the 30% commitment, each group was obliged to give 15½ weeks of screen time to British product.

The majority of West End first-runs were also up on their obligations although a few have defaulted. Of the No. 1 theatres controlled by the J. Arthur Rank group, the Odeon, Leicester Square, and the Gaumont, Haymarket, over-filled their quotas. The Odeon, Marble Arch and the Leicester Square Theatre were slightly down.

Paramount has two first-runs, of which one, the Plaza, devoted more playing time to British pix than legally required but the other, the Carlton, was slightly below requirements. The London Pavilion (UA) which, because of relief, needed only nine weeks British playing time, fulfilled only a third of its quota.

The Warner Theatre came out on the right side and the Rialto, which was only obliged to give five weeks screen time, topped the list with a record 28 weeks. Metro's Empire finished the year with 11 weeks to its credit, all of which were given in the second half of the year.

Dublin Needs Niteries To Hypo Tourist Trade

Dublin, Sept. 23.

Despite its great yen for tourist coin, Ireland is still coy about entering the nitery biz. But Dublin bonifaces are beginning to converse about brighter bistros for next season which is slated to open early in April with the Ireland at Home Festival.

Only a few spots cater to the after-theatre patron, with most bistros shuttering around 10:30 p.m. The stranger in town can get a few lonely drinks in his hotel—that is all. Several of out-of-city spots have been raised to a high level, but legally they can offer no entertainment or floor show. The sole attraction is the alcoholic beverage.

Police would like to trim these operations to cut down drunken driving charges while the Tourist Board would like to find some way of pleasing overseas visitors who do not want to retire at 11 p.m. Niteries are the obvious solution, but previous experiments have not hit jackpot possibly because there was not enough coin to bridge the "catch-on" period.

British Lion's Loss Of $415,000 Blamed Mainly On High Cost of Prod.

London, Sept. 30.

Having finished the year with a net loss of $415,000, British Lion Film Corp. is now $5,800,000 in the red. This is disclosed in the profit and loss account for the year ended last March 31. In that period, the company made a gross profit of $890,000.

In a review by the company's prexy, Harold C. Drayton, it is shown that in the last three years interest payments on loans for production have cost approximately $1,960,000. In the same three years, their films had grossed more than $35,000,000 at the boxoffice, of which a little less than $14,000,000 went to the treasury in entertainments tax. After allowing for the exhibitors share of around $12,700,000, the balance was left to meet distribution, advertising and printing charges and also reimburse production costs.

Referring to the loan from the National Film Finance Corp., Drayton reports that to date it has paid nearly $1,060,000 in interest. He points out that the advance has enabled the corporation to produce films which have yielded more than the original loan capital in entertainments tax and has provided employment which in turn yielded income tax on wages and salaries. On balance, he estimates that the government has not done badly out of the business because in the same period it has earned foreign currencies, particularly dollars, required to help in meeting the country's adverse balance of trade. Since 1949, B-L has earned over $3,000,000, apart from dollar contributions, toward production costs. U. S. distribution arrangements had been made for practically every single film produced by the company.

Mex Dance Marathon Halted After 29 Days

Mexico City, Sept. 23.

Current bonanza of local show biz, the international marathon dance at the Teatro Iris, was stopped by the city government after 29 days. Officialdom took action because it claimed numerous complaints were made by the public and the press. City inspectors swooped down on the show one morning and called the contest off. There was no trouble when the gendarmes appeared.

Surviving hoofers (five) each got $400 for 696 hours work. That was because Jorge Martinez Isaac, the promoter, had guaranteed to pay the winners a total of $5,780, when the show was stopped, the prize money was divided among the 10 survivors, less taxes. Francisco Sierra agreed never to rent out the Iris for such spectacles.

British to Show Color TV at Berlin's Fair

Berlin, Sept. 23.

One of the highlights of the forthcoming Berlin Industrial Fair will be an exhibition of British color TV. There will be a series of daily programs for the public, these originating in a special studio erected near the British Pavilion located at the Industrial Fair.

There also will be a British Broadcasting Corp. display.

Majors Get Only 59 Pix in Japan

Tokyo, Sept. 20.

The Japanese Finance Ministry today announced the division of import film quotas for U. S. distributors for second half of the current year. Major companies were allotted 59 films while the independent distributors got 15. Final decision of the ministry followed several weeks of huddles between majors and indies who failed to reach an agreeable division. Major companies had been insisting on 63 films for themselves and 11 for the indies, while the indies wanted 18 against 56 for majors.

Although ministry officials gave no explanation of their decision in a note sent the parties concerned, it is believed they reached their final decision by studying the yearly figures on production of majors and indies and their distribution receipts at home and in Japan. This proportion was calculated at eight to two. On this basis, division of the full year quota of 152 U. S. pix worked out at 122 to 30, with 65 and 15 were allocated for the first half year, leaving the last half at 59 for majors and 15 for indies.

Both parties voiced opposition to this plan but had disagreed principally on what constitutes a half fiscal year. Majors stood firm for January to June, 1952, as the period upon which the new allocation should be made. The indies contended that the preceding Japanese fiscal year (April, 1951 to March, this year) should be the determining period.

Globetrotters Big Hit In Tokyo; Draw 23,000

Tokyo, Sept. 23.

Abe Saperstein's Harlem Globetrotters opened a tour of Japan last week, at Tokyo's Korakuen Stadium. Their basketball form drew 23,000 astounded and amused Japanese and foreign fans, headed by U. S. Ambassador Robert Murphy.

The Trotters will play their traveling mates, the N. Y. Celtics, in two more games here before hitting the road. They also are set to play once in Yokohama, once in Nagoya, four times in Osaka and return to Tokyo for two more dates before moving on to Guam and Honolulu. They return to the U. S. sometime in October.

Called Depression Year, Arg. Cinemas, Legit in 1st Four Mos. Top '51 Biz

Buenos Aires, Sept. 23.

Uncertainty still hangs over possible changes in the cabinet here as a result of Mrs. Peron's death, it being considered a struggle between the Evitistas and Peronistas. The hassle last week between Press and Information Minister Raul Apoid and Entertainment Board chief Eduardo Oliveira appears to have been smoothed out, with the former reportedly headed for an ambassadorial job.

Although rated a depression year, both attendance and grosses at film houses and legit theatres increased in the first four months this year compared with 1951, according to figures of the Ministry of Technical Affairs. Film grosses increased $1,000,000 over last year in this four-month period while legit grosses were up $100,000. In contrast, attendance at football (soccer) games and prizefights slumped. Radio manufacturers report a heavy dip in set sales whereas disk sales are holding up well, with Radio Corp. of America-Victor selling over 500,000 each month.

Indicating that the management of the Opera Theatre has confidence in future biz it has booked Josephine Baker for a limited engagement starting early next month.

Film grosses have been satisfactory but not sensational in recent weeks. The French film, "Manon" (DIFA) has been leader, with $132,583 in 14 weeks day-dating at the Radar, Capitol and Biarritz. This is close to the "Joan of Arc" record this year of $145,256. "Joan" has been reissued at the Radar and Capitol. RKO is also doing nifty biz with "Our Very Own" day-dating at the Trocadero, Libertador and Palacio del Cine.

"All About Eve" (20th) grossed an excellent $88,354 in 6 weeks at the Broadway and Luxor plus one opening week at the Gran Rex. "Hamlet," reissued Aug. 4 at Suipacha Theatre, grossed $83,950 in 8 weeks, which compares well with its original take when first released early this year.

The local pic, "She of Eyes the Color of Time," starring Mirtha Legrand and Carlos Thompson, grossed $40,276 in the first two weeks at the Gran Rex, where the picture is past its fifth week. This is good business, but not sensational.

Another local picture, "No Other Like Me," held only three weeks at the Opera, grossing $40,276, a low for that theatre, apparently proving that the Entertainment Board's insistence on the picture being exhibited at that deluxe theatre was misplaced.

U.S. Films Dominate Mex B.O. But Local Product Shows Top Gross Per Pic

Mexico City, Sept. 30.

Although U. S. and other foreign pix dominate down here, Mexican films top imports by far in total boxoffice per pic, according to the Nacional Financiera, government's fiscal agency which helps finance much film production here. Its survey of the local film trade showed that Mexican productions had an average gross of $46,500 each last year while the intake of foreign films averaged only $24,650 per film.

Last year, Mexican pictures took 35.7% of the playing time here and 40.2% of playdates over all of Mexico, the agency reported.

The Mexican film trade employs 23,366 persons, most of them or 12,000 in the cinemas. There are 7,500 in the production field, 1,200 in distribution and 2,500 in other branches.

Mexican exports last year were down to $805,750 from $810,175 in 1950, the survey showed. Naming the U. S., Guatemala, Panama, Cuba and Columbia as the top foreign markets for Mexican pix, Nacional Financiera admitted that Mex films are losing biz in Spanish-speaking countries. Nacional Financiera lamenting the drop in film output, estimated by the trade not to exceed 100 this year, was blamed on the necessity of marketing films already made and lack of credit to make other pix.

H'wood's Sloane Finds Nip Pix-Making Big Headache

Tokyo, Sept. 23.

Hollywood director Paul H. Sloane has learned that all is not smooth sailing in the field of joint Japanese-U. S. film production. Directing "Forever My Love" with Daiei Studio and using American and native actors, he has been at loggerheads for months with his Japanese colleagues. Irked over a two-month delay in bringing the film in, the studio filed a strong protest with Sloane and said they would finish the pic with Japanese directors unless he speeded work.

"Forever My Love," starring Cris Drake and cover girl Mitsuko Kimura, went before cameras July 7 and was set for completion by the end of that month. Sloane postponed the finish to end of August and later to Sept. 7. Daiei now has announced it will be released in October, but Sloane is still listed as director.

Massey's 'Judge' Given Even Chance in London; 'Threshold' Rated Fair

London, Sept. 30.

Raymond Massey's first play "Hanging Judge" had its London debut at the New Theatre last week (23). It is based on a book by Bruce Hamilton and presented by Michael Powell and Walter P. Chrysler, Jr. Godfrey Tearle stars as a ruthless criminal court judge framed on a murder charge by his own son. (Detailed review on page 122.)

It is a splendid vehicle for the veteran actor and his personal popularity will have much to do with the play's even chance of prosperity. A good supporting cast and excellent direction by Michael Powell contribute full share to the play's merit and just lifts it out of the old meller standard. It might be better if adopted for the screen.

"Second Threshold," the latest importation from Broadway, presented last Wednesday (24) at the Vaudeville Theatre by Jack de Leon in association with Marcell Hellman, has only fair prospects of paying off. Its success will mainly depend on the marquee value of Clive Brook and Margaret Johnston. The former is playing the role he filled in the N. Y. production of last year.

The production received critical press reaction which concentrated mainly on the unsuitability of the theme for West End theatrical audiences.

Emile Littler's new British musical, "Love From Judy," preemed successfully at the Saville last Thursday (25) and looks set for a healthy run. It is adapted from "Daddy Long-Legs" by Eric Maschwitz and Jean Webster, with music by Hugh Martin. Jean Carson, who stars, was hailed by the first-night audience for a performance of surprising merit.

$70 Top for 'Limelight' At London Preem, Oct. 16

London, Sept. 23.

Charity preem of Chaplin's "Limelight" has been set for Oct. 16 at the Odeon, Leicester Square, to aid the Royal Society for the Blind. The star arrived in London this week, and expects to stay two or three months.

Inflated prices are being asked for the preem, with a top of $70. The scale includes $42 and $28 ducats with a minimum of $2.80. After the preem, the film will stay at the theatre for a regular run.

Rediffusion Taps Dunlop

London, Sept. 23.

Appointment of Roy Graham Dunlop, a Canadian, to post of program director for Overseas Rediffusion, Ltd., which operates radio stations on five continents, has been made here.

Dunlop will have overall charge of program management, and will set up headquarters in Bermuda in October.

H'WOOD TURNS TO THE BIBLE

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Although only six states have film censorship statutes, effect of these laws spreads beyond the borders of the states, resulting in difficult-to-estimate but nevertheless substantial extra costs to the film industry. Another effect, not generally known, is that pix audiences in neighboring states are forced to view snipped films because of the exchange center setup.

An exchange, located in a censor zone, cannot prepare two sets of prints—one for the censored area and one for the free section, the process being complicated and costly. For example, Boston is the New England exchange area. Massachusetts has a Sunday censorship law which, in effect, results in full film censorship since the filmeries cannot prepare separate films for Sunday and daily showings. Since Boston is the shipping center for many New England areas, a good part of the northeast territory receives snipped films as ordered by the Bay State censor.

Similarly, Washington, D. C., is guided by the film censorship laws of Maryland and Virginia. Towns in states bordering Kansas, Pennsylvania and Ohio are hit by statutes of those states. An example of how snipping costs are upped is the situation in Toledo, which is closer to uncensored Detroit exchange, but is serviced out of Cleveland because of the Ohio censorship statute.

Films have been so successful in promoting institutional messages of the Oil Industry Information Committee of the American Petroleum Institute that the organization is releasing a 25-minute subject next month with some of Hollywood's more familiar names in its cast. Titled "Crossroads, U.S.A.", it was turned out by Columbia Pictures' subsidiary, Screen Gems.

OICC has sponsored close to 10 pix since embarking upon its film program in 1948. Subjects were made on contract by such producers as Warner Pathe News and Louis De Rochemont, among others. In "Crossroads" the committee stresses "free enterprise" and "free competition." This message isn't forcibly thrown at audiences but nevertheless exists in the screenplay as scripted by Joseph Moncure March and Brown Holmes. Locale for the plot is a service station in a small American town.

Produced and directed by Jules Bricken, the film has Rhys Williams, Regis Toomey, Elisabeth Risdon, Darryl Hickman, Ted De Corsia, James Bell, Frank Darien and Joseph McGuinn in its cast. Film Counselors, Inc., of New York, and the committee's film division, chairmanned by P. C. Humphrey, of the Texas Co., supervised production.

Distribution of the National Legion of Decency's latest ratings caused a brief flurry of excitement in trade circles last week when the Class "C" (Condemned) classification included 20th-Fox's "Snows of Kilimanjaro." A check disclosed that a printer's error was responsible for the confusion since the picture actually had been handed a "B". Legion subsequently sent out a correction.

In placing "Kilimanjaro" in the "B" (Morally Objectionable in Part for All) category, the Catholic reviewing organization asserted that the Gregory Peck-Susan Hayward starrer contains "suggestive costuming, dialog and situations; tends to justify immoral actions."

Hollywood producers and studios reportedly will be well represented Nov. 16 when the New York News publishes its fourth annual motion picture issue in the tabloid's Sunday Coloroto issue. Special section previews many important films due for release through the winter months. Supplement is to be printed in four colors. Through 1952 to date, incidentally, The News has devoted more than half its four-color front covers in the Sunday Rotogravure section to film stars. Besides the covers, a number of pictures and stories on inside pages also plugged the stars.

Drive-in theatres are an excellent medium for film ads of an automotive nature. At least that's the feeling of the Ethyl Corp., which last week placed another series of "spot movie ads" with the Movie Advertising Bureau. Nearly 500 ozoners in 15 states reportedly are screening the Ethyl adpix in the peak driving season. Ethyl's faith in the outdoor theatres was also buttressed by a questionnaire the company recently sent to drive-in patrons. Some 80% of those replying said they remembered the Ethyl films.

VARIETY is in receipt of the following note: "I enclose for your files and future information concise biographies of myself and wife which I regret to state you may have occasion to use as obits in the not-too-distant future, as my wife is afflicted with cancer and my heart is starting to act up."

Besides ousting Sam Weiler as his personal manager, Mario Lanza has severed with MCA; has substituted Martin Gang's Hollywood law firm for Lawrence Beilenson as his personal attorney; and, in his squawk against Metro, among other things, he has focused his personal spleen against director Curtis Bernhardt.

a government, administrative and creative level. Latter include Dr. Renato Gualino, IFE general director, who is already here; Nicola De Pirro, director general of the Italian government's Entertainment Industry Bureau, and Dr. Eitel Monaco, president of the National Assn. of the Motion Picture and Allied Industries of Italy, etc. The s.a. dept. will be represented by Silvana Mangano, Eleonora Rossi-Drago, Marina Berti, Carla del Poggia and Lea Padovani. Actor Gino Cervi also is making the trip.

Italian directors due here for "Salute" include Renato Castellani, Luigi Zampa and Luciano Emmer. The 10 films being shipped from Rome include: "Anna," directed by Alberto Lattuada, starring Silvana Mangano, Raf Vallone and Gaby Morlay and featuring Vittorio Gassman; "The Little World of Don Camillo," directed by Julien Duvivier and starring Fernandel, with Gino Cervi; "Two Cents Worth of Hope," directed by Ranto Castellani, starring Maria Fiore and Vincenzo Musolino; "The Overcoat," directed by Lattuada, starring Renato Rascel, Yvonne Sanson, Guilio Stival and Antonella Lualdi; "Umberto D," directed by Vittorio de Sica, starring Carlo Battisti, with Maria Pia Casilio and Lina Gennari; "Bellissima," directed by Luchino Visconti, starring Anna Magnani, with Tina Apicella, Walter Chiari, Amadeo Nazzari and Silvana Pampanini; "Europe '51," directed by Roberto Rosselini, starring Ingrid Bergman and Alexander Knox, with Guilietta Masina and Ettore Giannini; "Times Gone By," directed by Alessandro Blasetti, with de Sica, Gina Lollobrigida, Aldo Fabrizi, Pina Renzi, Aldo Arnova and Enzio Staiola; "City on Trial," directed by Luigi Zampa, starring Silvana Pampanini, Eduardo Cianelli and Amedeo Nazarri, and "The Girls of Piazza Di Spagna," directed by Luciano Emmer, starring Lucia Bose, Cosetta Greco and Liliana Bonfatti.

HEFTY TREND TO RELIGIOSO PIX

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

The Biblical period, which turned out some of the greatest stories the world has ever known, continues to come to the fore, production-wise, as a backdrop for story-telling. Certain producers, notably Cecil B. DeMille and Darryl F. Zanuck, long have realized the potency of the period as a canvas against which to paint their cinematic masterpieces. Both these showmen, as well as others, continue turning to this period for upcoming efforts.

Since great research is required to prep adequately the start of such projects, and the production values entailed in reaching back into the past, these films in many instances will individually ring up costs which might cover whole groups of features. From experience, however, it's been learned that Biblical films, such as DeMille's "Samson and Delilah" and Zanuck's "David and Bathsheba," more than make up in b.o. returns from these added and astronomical costs.

Fortressed by the reaction to "Bathsheba," Zanuck, whose studio already is about to launch camera work on Lloyd C. Douglas' "The Robe," under the producership of Frank Ross, will personally undertake for his sole 1953 endeavor the picturization of Mika Waltari's best-seller, "The Egyptian." Film will have a setting of Egypt, Crete, Babylon and other points of the Holy Land, circa 1,500 B.C. Announced as Zanuck's most ambitious production, it very likely will soar into the $4,000,000-plus class. Ross' "Robe" now carries a budget around $3,000,000.

DeMille again is borrowing from the Bible for his next, "King of Kings," a new version of one of his greatest successes of the same tag, made in 1927. He originally had planned to do a version of "Helen of Troy," antedating the strict Biblical period, but when Warners also announced such a project, he switched to his present plans. Warners is to do "The Private Life of Helen of Troy." DeMille also had contemplated a production based upon the Queen of Sheba, but 20th-Fox has this property on its production agenda.

William Dieterle also is readying "King Saul," which he'll produce next year as an indie in the Holy Land. Director got the idea while in Israel earlier this year to film backgrounds and action for Columbia's "Salome, the Dance of the Seven Veils," Rita Hayworth starrer. Latter film also is an entry in the Biblical category.

"The Story of Ruth" is a project by Herbert Kline, who directed "The Fighter," and will be made in Israel and England. "Esther" is an upcoming Hedy Lamarr production. "Joseph and Potiphar's Wife" is on indie producer William Broidy's upcoming slate, and Louis B. Mayer also owns the property. "Joseph and His Brethren." Also, Sam Katzman is prepping "Slaves of Babylon."

Murphy, Breen Run For SWG Presidency

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Richard Murphy and Richard Breen will run against each other as candidates for presidency of the Screen Writers Guild in the annual election to be held next month.

Currently Murphy is first veepee and Breen is second veepee, both work for 20th-Fox.

Pix Expo for Dallas

Dallas, Sept. 30.

Film industry's development from the nickelodeon days to the present will be exhibited to the public in the "Motion Picture World Exposition" at the 1953 State Fair of Texas.

Plans for the project were disclosed this week by R. J. O'Donnell in behalf of the executive board of the Texas Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

Denver Drama Critic Chooses to Eat His 'Nasty' Words About 'Movietime'

Denver.

Editor, VARIETY:

The spectacle of witnessing a critic capitulate should be one to bring joy to the hearts of everyone connected with the picture business. I have words to eat, and choose to eat them publicly.

I, too, could be counted among those who without any basis except supposition have heretofore scorned "Movietime U. S. A." as a weak and ineffective program, sort of a patronizing pat on the head to moviegoers, a public relations mouse born after great labor to a mountain of an industry.

After making one of the "Movietime" tours as an observer and a reporter, I have to admit that I was as wrong as Messrs. Gallup and Roper on the second Wednesday in November, 1948. Critics of "Movietime" should make one of those tours; they may be as wrong as I was.

With a snide smile on my face, I accompanied Una Merkle, Chill Wills, Barbara Ruick, John Agar and Jeanne Cooper through western Colorado. Meanwhile, Mervyn Leroy, Debra Paget and her mother, and John Derek were wheeling over the eastern Colorado plains.

Before taking off, I thought these things:

1. The approach that movie celebrities are just like everybody else was dead wrong. They should be sold on the basis of their difference, their mystery, their glamour.

2. Such a tour couldn't possibly be a success without the top personalities of the industry. I expected the tour to die in the boondocks without any Rita Hayworths, Betty Grables, John Waynes and Martins and Lewises.

3. The folks in Cedaredge, Hotchkiss, Steamboat Springs, Salida and Montrose would feel cheated and patronized if a group of Hollywood folk came wheeling up in a cloud of dust in new Packards driven by Marine sergeants to utter 15 minutes of platitudes, scatter a few autographs and speed off with obvious relief.

I had other criticisms, also proved wrong, but those were the main ones.

Now I am willing to eat three dishes of crow with a side order of humble pie. Here's why:

1. The way to sell motion picture personalities, at least outside the big cities, is the folksy approach. Democracy is the answer. When Barbara Ruick rounded up a group of teen-agers and forgot how tired she was by commandeering an American Legion hall for an impromptu dance, she sold herself and motion pictures in Glenwood Springs, Colo., in a way only a young, fresh, teen-age kid with her future before her would be able to do.

When Jeanne Cooper bought shoes in Grand Junction instead of Saks, she displayed the same kind of touch. So did Una Merkel eating a hamburger with onions and talking with the Girl Scout mothers at the Delta county fair. So did Chill Wills when he fished earnestly and unsuccessfully at Gunnison.

When they got to these towns, they had fans. When they left they had friends, not only for themselves but for the motion picture industry.

2. The great, big boxoffice stars could not have sold the industry and its product as effectively as the real, earthy human men and women who visited Colorado.

I know a few of the big ones, and I have observed that when they don't get the star treatment they get snappish, when they get snappish—they are apt to bite all the people. They expect time to rest. A speck of dust disconcerts them and two hours of hot sunshine on a parking lot in front of a smalltown theatre broils their tempers. Unless a task force of handlers travels with them, they are lost.

You'll notice our visitors were divided almost half and half between gracious, solid, friendly, undemanding troupers like Una Merkel and ambitious, healthy, strong youngsters like Jeanne Cooper, with the energy, vim and curiosity required and with their careers to be made.

Democratic Stars

They behaved democratically because they are democratic. They were friendly because they felt friendly. They didn't become difficult because they were either used to being easy to get along with or hadn't learned yet that a star has to be demanding as a tribute to her own ego.

Whatever was expected of them

Exhib Sounds Off On 'Movietime' Unit That Won Rural Good Will

Washington, Ind.

Editor, VARIETY:

We have been a reader of 'the Bible' of Show Business for some 35 years but seldom have we had the urge to take time out to comment on anything we had read. After reading the article which quoted Forrest Tucker in your Sept. 24 issue, we felt that we must sound off.

Now, we were one of the fortunate theatre managers in southwestern Indiana to have the pleasure and privilege of having Forrest Tucker, Bill Shirley, Tony Romano, Mari Blanchard and Gene Evans visit our town on the recent "Movietime" tours. Trueman Rembusch took time off from his multiple duties as president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Indiana to shepherd the movie ambassadors of good will around this part of the state. "Ambassadors Of Good Will" for the industry of ours is just exactly what they were in our book. For in the two hours they spent in our town they did a bigger and better public relations job than we or anyone else have or could have done in years.

First of all, this group m.c.d by Tucker was the most gracious and friendly of any group of movie personalities we have ever seen or met. There was not one discordant note from any of them, although they worked and were rushed around every second of the time here. As Tucker pointed out in his article, he had a show. It was well organized, well played and never have we seen Hollywood stars or personalities give so much entertainment for free in or out of a theatre. We cannot possibly tell you how much this show and this group of movie people were loved by our citizens, during the hour they stood in the mid-day sun and relished the show from beginning to end, and then roared for more.

Then as if that wasn't enough, Tucker himself took his place behind the speakers stand at Rotary Club, before some 75 representative businessmen of our community, and gave them a straight-from-the-shoulder, heart-to-heart talk about Hollywood. He pulled no punches, he gave no alibis, but rather with honesty, sincerity and good common horse sense told them of the good the movies have done, just exactly why he and other groups were making these tours. And he made them believe it and like it.

They are still talking about the visit of Forrest Tucker, Mari Blanchard, Tony Romano, Bill Shirley and Gene Evans in our town, and will be for a long time to come.

This is the kind of stuff that will put the picture industry back on top where it belongs. Hollywood would do well to let such men as Tucker go out and do more of this kind of work. For here is public relations at its very best, certainly grassroots public relations, and, after all, we in the hinterlands, or stix if you prefer, have as much at stake as anyone, and Hollywood has as much to gain here as elsewhere.

Map Tour of Stix By Producers To Build Goodwill for B. O.

Move is underway to have the 135 members of the Screen Producers' Guild take to the hinterlands on goodwill tours for Hollywood and its films. Film-maker Jerry Wald, who just wound up a whirlwind swing of Texas, and Robert J. O'Donnell, v.p. of the Texas Interstate chain, are pushing the idea and likely will approach the producers via the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

Aim is to have the producers get from behind Hollywood's "celluloid curtain" to the public for some accurate pulse-taking. Wald feels there's a "healthy curiosity" about Hollywood, and the producers are well equipped to answer the public's questions. He's plenty high on the idea as a result of his Texas results.

On his Texas visits Wald encountered queries on Red-tainted pix. His stock answer: "Did you ever see a Hollywood film with Communism in it"? As for the commerce end of pix, the film-maker points up that Sears Roebuck in Rio de Janeiro has special reps in the states to spot new wearing apparel, household items and the like in films and see to it that the Rio branch is supplied with them ahead of the South American release of the pix involved.

Wald and Milton Pickman, business head of Wald-Krasna Productions, covered 5,000 miles in six days in their Texas whistle-stopping. They spoke to exhibs in 25 different areas, had 15 interviews with newsmen and made numerous radio and TV appearances. While upbeating Hollywood in general, "The Lusty Men," Wald's latest film for RKO release, also was spotlighted. Also as part of the tour, straight talks were given at various Texas universities and at the San Antonio Lions Club.

Wald and Pickman are slated to cover the Boston area on a similar junket beginning Oct. 15.

Par's 'Jacks', 'Paleface' Sold Away From UPT In Mpls.—on Bidding

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Illustrating anew how the consent decree has changed the clearance pattern, an unusual development here finds Paramount's current top boxoffice pictures, "Jumping Jacks" and "Son of Paleface," getting away on competitive bids from United Paramount Theatres' leading local neighborhood house, the Uptown, to competing independent theatres for its first area nabe-suburban run in the 28-day slot.

Inasmuch as it's contrary to the circuit's policy to play pictures at the Uptown day-and-date with or after the independent theatres in question, the Uptown will pass up both smashes.

The Edina, a Ben Friedman suburban theatre, bid competitively against the Uptown for "Jumping Jacks" and won out. While the Edina currently is offering the Martin-Lewis hit, the Uptown, which has regular 28-day availability as compared to the Edina's 35, is countering with a twin bill of oldies, "The Rains Came" and "Leave Her to Heaven," the theatre's first fling at double-featuring. The 28-day slot is the earliest here after the downtown first-run.

"Jumping Jacks" was sold away from the Uptown to the St. Louis Park, a Harold Field-Harold Kaplan house, whose regular slot is 35 days. Metro zoned the city for the neighborhood-suburban release of "Quo Vadis" and on competitive bids it was sold away from the Uptown to the St. Louis Park and Terrace.

All three aforementioned pictures had their downtown first-runs here at UPT, but Paramount's Martin & Lewis "At War With the Army" and its initial regular admission run of "Samson and Delilah" were sold away from the big chain's loop houses to Bennie Berger's independent Gopher.

Because of distributor's refusal to put the Edina in the regular 28-day slot along with the Uptown and independent Hopkins, it is suing the major film companies and UPT for $1,900,000 damages.

HEFTY MDSE. TIEUPS FOR 'ANDERSEN' PIC

Giving an unusually heavy play to the merchandising approach, Samuel Goldwyn's New York office and RKO, as the distrib, so far have arranged tieups with 40 manufacturers of clothing and accessories, fabrics and toys for "Hans Christian Andersen." Also, Macy's and other members of the Associated Merchandising Corp., which includes leading department stores across the country, will use "Andersen" as the theme in Christmas displays.

Other promotions are being lined up in the music and book publishing fields. Also, via a tie-in with a national tobacco outfit, "Andersen" will be plugged in cigaret advertising across the country.

Censorship Seals

addition to editorial support against Government actions. Many newspapers have stepped up coverage of film news. Others have issued special pix sections. Some have launched promotional campaigns urging their readers "to get out of their living rooms and go to a movie." N. Y. Mirror, for example, runs a daily box far up in the general news section calling attention to the pleasures of film-going.

Another aspect of the press' new attitude is the trend to grant local film theatres the same advertising rates as local department stores. This campaign, launched many years ago, is seeing more and more papers equalizing their rates.

Press' new attitude has also extended to national mags. Collier's last week, for example, came out with a full-page editorial rapping the Government's 16m suit. In addition, many mags have been on the prowl for pro-industry stories.

Some of the changes brought about have been due to the work of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, the Motion Picture Assn. of America, the Motion Picture Industry Council and local exhibs who have carried the ball to their local editors. COMPO, MPAA and MPIC have been instrumental in correcting inaccuracies about Hollywood and in obtaining corrections of raps based on misleading information or lack of pertinent facts.

Seek to Kayo Ohio Law

Columbus, Sept. 30.

The Ohio Censor Board's rejection of Superior Films Hollywood remake of the old German film "M," the second rejection in 18 months, has touched off a renewed effort by the firm's attorneys here to knock out the state's screen censorship law.

The board originally rejected "M" on April 23, 1951, because the film was "permeated with crime and depicted a juvenile in complete perversion." Superior, after cutting the film and receiving a clean bill of health from all censors except those in Atlanta, resubmitted the film to Ohio's board, but Clyde M. Hissong, state education director and censor chief, refused to review it again. Whereupon, Superior brought a mandamus action against the board.

Ohio's attorney general ruled that Hissong's position was indefensible and the board would have to review the cut version of "M." This they did and rejected it in toto on Sept. 16. Last Thursday (25), the firm of Wright, Harlor, Purplus, Morris & Arnold, acting for Superior, filed a petition in Ohio Supreme Court asking for a review of the order and basing their case on two points.

1. That the Ohio censorship statute is unconstitutional both in the state and in the U. S. since it is an abridgement of free speech and press.

2. If the statute is valid, then the censor board has acted arbitrarily and abused its discretion in rejecting the pic.

Md. Censor Stresses Need to Restrict Foreign Producers

Editor, VARIETY:

Baltimore.

Our statement to the Governor of Maryland that certain Hollywood companies have been deviating from their own production code does not end there, as VARIETY's recent article does. On the contrary, we laid particular emphasis on the productions of many foreign and domestic producers, who, never having been signatory parties to the Hollywood code, have been, and still are, free to turn out pictures that have time and again crossed the border line of decency and morality. These pictures are completely beyond the censoring powers and control of Joseph I. Breen's department, and the bypassing of them when the public is told that the industry has its own set of regulations to make pictures clean and wholesome is a matter which the citizens of this state are gradually catching on to. Both of these situations have been frequently dwelt upon in our reports and in other public statements, and we did not hold them in abeyance until the U.S. Supreme Court decided "The Miracle" and "Pinky" cases.

It is well known to the trade that certain Hollywood producers, notably Samuel Goldwyn and David O. Selznick, are on record as advocating the adoption of a new production code—one which Goldwyn has gone so far as to say will enable the industry to get away from producing "pollyanna and fairy-tale pictures." One wonders just what Goldwyn has in mind putting on the screen in the light of some of the present pictures.

But aside from our own findings, it appears that we are eloquently supported by no less an authority than the Theatre Owners of America. At their convention held in New York City last September, they adopted a resolution which called upon the film industry to avoid movies that might be considered in bad taste by any part of the total audience. The resolution stated, in part, that several pictures in current and recent releases had broached the barriers of the Hollywood Production Code to a point where public criticism was invited and the resolution proceeded to recommend that any attempt by script writers or directors to "overstep the word, letter and intent" of the code "be instantly curbed." How does this attitude on the part of the theatre owners fit in with Breen's assertion that there has been no relaxation of the standards of good taste and decency represented by the code?

Regarding Breen's assertion that, in a recent report by Father Masterson, of the National Legion of Decency, he commended the high moral standards of American motion pictures, we understand that, actually, Father Masterson in addressing a women's organization last month, stated that about 18% of the domestic pictures had been found to be morally objectionable, or a decrease of 2% over the pictures so deemed previously. On Aug. 26, 1949, Father Masterson issued a written report wherein it was stated that American-made pictures were morally deteriorating to the extent that nearly 20% of them were considered objectionable. This figure, the report added, was the highest since the formation of the Legion of Decency in 1933.

Now, as to the article's statement that our board is threatened with abolition because of an opinion by our Attorney General, let it be said that since the Supreme Court's decision in "The Miracle" case, he has taken the position that we are restricted to the censoring of films that are indecent and obscene. In no manner, has he even intimated that we, as a board of censors, have no legal right to function under the law of this state. On the contrary, he has suggested that the law be strengthened by the enactment of a statute which, in his opinion, will insure the state's right to keep out pictures that are found to be of the indicated character.

Hollywood.

Easily fetched by anything in distress the Samaritan in me simply bleeds at the cries of hunger pains emanating from Hollywood. If better pictures can be made at less cost it is obvious that cuts will have to be made all along the line. Merely suggesting that the cuts begin by cutting off the dead branches at the top isn't enough. Life must be infused into the old redwood, and that means story-value.

So reluctantly I toss away some more of the stock pile which in better times might have been used to send our kids to college. Take 'em, pals. The plots are all yours.

| "Hizzoner Cal Coover" | "Has Anybody Seen My Cal?" |

This is a frank effort to cash in on the drink, sex, smoke and skullduggery that goes on in a national political convention. Cal Coover, a brass check manufacturer, who was born in New England, reared in the south, educated in the west and made his dough in Chicago, so much in fact and from such shady sources that his attorney thought it would be wise to siphon off $10,000,000 and set up the Coover Foundation For Clean Government. It was set up in honor of his first wife, who presumably died from overeating at Monte Carlo while Coover was teaching a blonde how to play baccarat.

The Foundation decides to pitch for the Presidential nomination of Gen. Mills, a six-star general, figuring he will get smeared so badly in the campaign that it would be no trouble at all to toss Coover in as a compromise candidate. His backers are assured Coover has now married that blonde he has been running around with since (and before) his wife died.

The day the convention opened, sure enough, a schnook named Severance Liveright (a Communist parading as a loyal delegate) flooded the convention hall with documentary proof that Ben. Mills filched his sixth star from a brigadier he had demoted for being too kind to wives of prisoners-of-war.

The general's wife came forth the next day with the explanation that she had found the extra star in his pocket and, thinking it was one that had worked loose from its mooring, had sewed it on. This explanation came too late to save Mills, however, and the convention made the worst of a bad situation by nominating Cal Coover.

Coover put on a terrific campaign. Everybady seemingly wore buttons, cut like stars and as big as stop lights. All bore the legend "My Pal Cal."

But he was running against an incumbent, and the Dopey Voters League, with the slogan "We always vote for incumbents," swept their old standby into office. Cal won four states—Maine, where he was born; Georgia, where he was raised; California, where he went to college, and Illinois, where he made millions in slot machines, jukeboxes and brass checks.

| "The Whining Team" | "Too Bad To Win" |

This is a picture for Frank Lovejoy, who as Rogers Hornsby sort of stole "The Winning Team" from Ronald Reagan as Grover Cleveland Alexander. It starts with Hornsby taking a bunch of rambling wrecks, including Alexander, from the cellar to a World Series. After they win the Series they all go out on a bender and don't get over it for the whole of the next season. "You know why we lost?" asks the surly Rajah of Alexander. "Cause your wife, who looks to me an awful lot like Doris Day, wasn't in the stands for you to wink at when the going got tough. That's why we lost."

That night Bill Veeck, the club prez, fired him.

For 20 years the Rajah rattled around in the stix and then worked himself back in the big leagues as a manager of the St. Louis Browns. He landed a three-year contract, worth $120,000 in any lawyer's language.

Feeling his oats again, the Rajah began riding herd on his coolies and pushed them so hard they were in the cellar by the end of spring. No Doris Day was in the stands to soften his cruel tongue. Players whimpered under his tongue-lashings and all but laid down.

So the prez of the club called him on the carpet. The prez's name, by a terrifying coincidence, was Bill Veeck. Junior, this time.

"Rajah, I guess you're through."

"Are you guessing or issuing an executive order?" asked Hornsby.

"I should have learned from my old man's experience," said the prez, "when he canned you before."

"If you were that bright," riposted the Rajah, "you would be working for a living in a wayside garage. Your second-guessing is gonna cost you $100,000."

"You won't settle for less?"

"Not a penny."

'Suppose with you off our backs we go ahead now and win the pennant?" asked the prez.

"Then I want a bonus."

"Hornsby, you're a hard man. You need the softening hand of a woman."

"Okay," said Hornsby, "get me a Warner contract and Doris Day and I'll waive the bonus."

They shook hands, and as Hornsby came out of Veeck's office and walked down a tunnel under the grandstand, there was Doris Day to receive him. On one side of her stood a Warner talent scout and on the other an agent. As Hornsby put his arms around Miss Day the agent stuck a contract in his hand like a subpoena. They all laughed and left the ballpark for highballs and Hollywood.

| "Keep Your Shirt On" | "Atomic H" |

Hi Hatt, who won his H at Harvard in fencing, is assigned to Alamogordo on a super-secret project. His job is to see that no scientists changed shirts. It was his job to change them, not theirs.

Virginia Dublin, a specialist in splitting infinitives, is brought to Alamogordo to teach the children of atom-splitters how to split infinitives to conform with the split personalities of the community.

One day, while Hatt's back was turned, she got his department. She was on the hunt for Jackie Morbid, who was playing hookey. As she tried to leave, Hatt insisted on taking her shirt off. She slapped his face and caused such a row that Dr. Morbid came out to see what all the commotion was about.

When he learned his kid was on the loose he became hysterical. A hunt revealed has was off limits. Then came a telephone call indicating he had been kidnapped and was being held for ransom. The price was simply some formulas only Dr. Morbid knew.

Hatt and Virginia forgot their diferences in this new crisis and the next hour is simply a chase to find the moppet. He is discovered, having escaped his captors, hanging from a clipp. Hatt makes a rope of shirts, but it is still too short to affect a rescue. Virginia sees the problem and goes behind the mesquite bush. From there she hands her slip and bra to Hatt. In the nick of time Jackie is rescued. Hatt returns the torn bra and slip to Virginia by tossing them over the bush. The security guard and state troopers arrive just in time to miss the whole thing. Virginia is dressed by the time they come crashing into the scene.

She and Hatt and Jackie get in the backseat of a rescue car, and while the moppet gets ready for the whacking of his life, the lovers embrace.

This is a picture for college kids who get a thrill out of unoccupied unmentionables.

Exhib Plan to Charge Distribs for Comm'l Pix Stirs Sponsor Tangle

Recent VARIETY story that theatremen were mulling the possibility of charging for the showing of commercial pictures, touched off a minor hassle among distribs of these pix, who have been making the films available to theatres at no cost for some time.

E. L. Manke, of Modern Talking Picture Service, a leading distrib of commercial pix of a highly institutional nature, said flatly that films would be withdrawn because sponsors would not go for the extra cost. He said pix distributed by his outfit were general and had entertainment value, so that the commercial plug was barely, if at all, discernible. He cited "Green Harvest," a short put out by the lumber industry, which plugged for conservation and said nothing about the use of lumber. Manke also pointed out that the booking of the commercial pix saved many exhibs coin on their short subjects rentals.

Commercial pix, running from seven to about 15 minutes, are frequently used by smaller theatres as regular parts of their programs while the big Broadway houses occasionally employ them as fillers. Roxy, N. Y., for example, makes use of these pix to fill program time during the morning shows or to plug a gap when the stage show runs short.

Modern Talking Picture Service, which has contacts with bookers in all the U. S. exchange zones, is currently placing about a half a dozen of the sponsored pix. Some are appropriate for national distribution, while others are suitable only for regional showings. Pix cover such subjects as sugar beets, electric power, lumber, banking, credit and gasoline.

B. O. Optimism

on Earth" (Par) and "Ivanhoe" (M-G) are surpassing records which have stood for years at many theatres.

While theatremen's complaints about income were down to a whisper at the TOA conclave, their big beef was over the continuing upbeat in operating expenses. They feel though that there will be a sufficient lift if the current campaign to repeal the 20% Federal admissions tax is successful.

Also seen reflecting the heartening uptrend is the big investment made by the Ralph Stolkin group in RKO. Howard Hughes sold out his controlling stock at $7 a share to Stolkin and his businessmen pards. It's understood that Hughes would have relinquished his interests long ago if that price was met by previous bidders.

In addition to the b.o. improvement, which began in mid-summer and is continuing, strong factor behind the encouraging state of the industry is the number of adjustments on the economic front. Overall, production budgets and shooting time have been substantially cut and other operating economies have been placed into effect. It's recalled that Metro recently halved all exec salaries beginning over the $1,000-per-week level.

The most optimistic analysis heard from a company president in years was made by Balaban in New York last week following his return to the homeoffice after two weeks on the Coast. On the basis of talks with Par studio heads and the chief execs of other film companies, Balaban stated, the "present boxoffice upswing will be maintained and undoubtedly increased."

The Par prez said he was plenty high on Par's future and added: "Similar enthusiasm is felt for their product and for their planned production in 1953 and beyond" by other prexies.

French, Japanese

imply approval of the French cut in the number of dubbing permits issued to foreign imports. Hollywood's share was whittled from 121 to 90. For the moment, at least, U. S. companies are not picking up any of these 90 licenses, and continued refusal on their part to accept the French cut will result in the pic shortage.

Presidents' powwow tomorrow should decide date of Johnston's departure for Paris. Likelihood is that he will be accompanied on his trip by Ellis Arnall, president of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers. After the breakdown of negotiations between the MPEA and the French, MPEA board gave its prexy full powers to deal with the situation as he sees fit.

Franco-U. S. Obstacles

Formal Franco-American deal ran out June 30 and subsequent talks hit several obstacles. First came when the French, taking their cue from the MPEA Italian pact, hinted they would favor a subsidy arrangement. Outlook was bright for a while when Johnston actually proposed the idea at the first round of Paris conferences.

MPEA head's capitulation astounded some Paris observers and was quickly and effectively nixed by the SIMPP, which came out flatly against any subsidy arrangement. Subsequently, the French changed their minds and withdrew their offer to remit the remaining $4,800,000 at the agreed capital account rate.

Jap situation is constantly creating new problems, with the unfreezing of additional coin and Tokyo's yardstick in dividing total of import permits between majors and the indies taking the spotlight. Richard T. McDonnell, special MPEA rep, is due to leave for Japan soon in an attempt to unthaw additional funds accrued to the U.S. companies since the war. McDonnell, who recently was successful in prying loose $5,000,000 in frozen earnings, is going to attempt to unlatch another $2,472,661.

Tokyo Government has set the total of U.S. import licenses at 74 for the first half of the financial year, with the Finance Ministry set on a 60-14 split, a reduction of three pix for the majors and one for the indies. Should the Japanese division be found unacceptable by the Americans, plan is to dump the whole problem in the lap of the U. S. producers.

Irving Maas, MPEA veepee, is currently in Tokyo to discuss the situation with the Finance Ministry and also to work out details of U.S. company participation in the foreign picture screening board now in the planning stage.

Propose Wald

stood that Corwin requested Wald to come east to be on the spot when the deal comes up but the filmmaker felt that Pickman, who is the business head of Wald-Krasna Productions, could handle all details. Pickman arrived in Gotham over the past weekend from Texas where he and Wald were on a six-day whistle-stop tour promoting the newest Wald pic, "The Lusty Men."

Initial discussions took place in Gotham yesterday between Grant and Pickman but it's understood that nothing concrete developed. Also participating was Sidney Korshak, Chi attorney, who has been active on the Stolkin side.

Also as part of the pact, it's said, is the purchase by RKO of Wald's 50% stock interest in the W-K unit. Basis of this portion of the overall deal is a bottom price of $250,000 and an escalator formula determining additional sums in accordance with the profits brought in by the four pix Wald ~~made for RKO under~~ Hughes. These are "Blue Veil," "Behave Yourself," "Clash by Night" and "Lusty." Also involved are eight unproduced properties developed by W-K

Although he's had talks with both Columbia and 20th-Fox on a possible affiliation, Wald has said he'd be amenable to the RKO spot if the arrangements could be worked out. Until a short time ago a pact with Col looked like a strong likelihood with Wald to operate as a straight producer under prexy Harry Cohn.

Attending the directorate session today will be Stolkin, Corwin, A. L. Koolish (Stolkin's father-in-law and head of Empire Industries, Chicago), and Ray Ryan and Edward Burk, San Antonio oilmen. Stolkin, Koolish and Ryan are committed for around 90% of the $7,346,340 to buy Hughes' 1,013,420 shares and the 36,000 shares held by prexy Ned E. Depinet.

In addition to voting upon the personnel setup, new RKO operating policies expectedly will be decided at the conclave tomorrow.

Joe Ravotto to Europe To Harmonize U.S. 'Voice,' Pix Messages Vs. Soviets

Joseph C. Ravotto, veteran ex-VARIETY mugg in Berlin, Paris, Rome, Madrid and Lisbon—the course traced prewar by Hitler's aggression—is returning to Paris to head up the film division of the combined press bureaus of the Mutual Security Administration and the U. S. Information Service abroad. MSA, successor to ECA, and USIS often have been charged with airing two different viewpoints. The services were combined so that the American attitude will speak with one voice, as it were, and that the two agencies' propaganda be of like pattern.

Under this new information program which Ravotto will supervise will come also the Voice of America. Motion picture propaganda is also on the agenda to offset the Russians' admittedly potent pix pitch, with which they have been making impact in the Middle East, the Far East, and also some of the fringe Iron Curtain countries.

Besides the counter-propaganda against the Commies, NATO, productivity (more production for less hours; the American assembly line technique), and other European functions will be integrated so that the Marshall Plan countries get the same reflexes.

MSA has counterpart funds (pounds, lira, francs, marks, etc.) available, which had been paid for U. S. resources exported to the European lands, and these monies will be expended on a local level for America's new propaganda campaign. Each of the "country missions," as the U. S. agencies in the various Marshall Plan countries are called, will report to the Paris regional office and under that streamlined and centralized operation Ravotto will handle the American propaganda attitude abroad.

Govt. as Stymie?

and complete endorsement is anticipated.

Abram F. Myers, Allied States Assn. board chairman, takes a different view. He stated in D. C. last week that, because of the changes made by the film company presidents, there has been no progress toward getting arbitration off the ground since Aug. 20, when the original plan was drafted.

That the company heads are anxious to hit upon a mutually agreeable system is seen by their continuing attempts to re-draft the plan. It's said that the changes they made were in the nature of recommendations to the exhibs and not outright demands. Since Myers, in particular, was not in agreement with the revisions, the company heads and their chief counsel are studying new changes.

Ultimate plan is for the chief execs to hold another meeting shortly on writing a new arbitration plan. This had been tentatively set for tomorrow (Thurs.) but Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, and the MPAA member companies now feel that the entire session will have to be given to pressing foreign market matters.

20th-Fox, Artie

agreed to the elimination, adds Davis. In fact, his deal, he avers, gave him the "unprecedented" privilege of doing his own publicity on the pic and placing ads on it through his own agency. With this understanding, he put pic into the works.

Next, Davis was informed 20th had opened the O. Henry pic at one or two out-of-town spots, that national mags had gandered the film, and reaction to "Red Chief" was not unfavorable. As a consequence, 20th did not feel justified in pulling the Allen-Levant sequence.

Distrib's version is that Davis, cooling on Chaplin pic after comedian was rapped by the Attorney General, returned to 20th with demand for the O. Henry film, which by then had gone Brandt's way.

While undecided on future course of action, Davis has meanwhile booked Universal release, "The Promoter," Alec Guinness starrer, to follow the current "Stranger In Between." The O. Henry pic is slated to follow "Ivory Hunter" into the Trans-Lux house.

Slashed Budget

saturation would ever be achieved, or whether it's even desirable.

"I'd like to be able to reach each of our primary target groups in 20 different countries with non-theatrical film shows every two weeks," he said. Film package offered for one showing runs between an hour and an hour-and-a-half.

State Dept. at present turns out about 300 reels a year, acquiring two pix for every one it make on its own. This breaks down into approximately 150 short subjects, an inadequate number, in Edwards' opinion, since it allows only 30 subjects for each region or between eight and 10 shorts per-target country.

Half Produced in U. S.

Of the 300 reels, about half are produced in the U.S. and the rest abroad under American supervision and often from scripts written by Hollywood writers. Group of filmites who left recently for Germany under State Dept. auspices to pen info pix there includes Virginia Van Upp, Agnes Christine Johnston, William Rankin, and Frank and Mitchell Dazy, the latter working as a team.

Films lensed abroad are done in semi-documentary fashion, which permits a story line. State Dept. has used feature approach only for past two years but rules out use of Hollywood personalities for the reason that they would weaken the credibility of the shorts.

However, an attempt is being made to introduce more of a showmanship touch in the reels farmed out by the Department. Edwards revealed that veteran Hollywood producer Tim Whelan is being considered for a job with the division where he would supervise production. Whelan is currently undergoing the various formalities preceding his hiring by the State Dept.

This year's Congressional budget-cutting spree, which reduced film division funds to $7,000,000, $3,500,000 less than has been requested, has forced Edwards to cut the number of language versions from 26 to 15. Two out of every three pix used by the division are acquired from outside sources.

Cost of pix made by the Department has risen from $10,000 to $12,000 a reel in 1945 to $15,000 to $16,000 in 1952.

"We no longer content ourselves with telling the American story, Edwards reveals, "Now we also try to expose Red lies and give the audience an inkling of what might happen to them under Communism."

Films division currently employs 35 full-time employees in 26 countries, with the film needs of other areas taken care of by State Dept. personnel concerned also with other info matters. More than 300 mobile units bring the U. S. pix messages to out-of-the-way places, and the division has about 4,000 16m projectors, which it lends on request.

The State Dept. eventually may get around to making special TV pix for use abroad, according to Edwards.

B. O. Acceptance

play the art circuit first and later do a repeat in dubbed version.

Costs the Same

~~Costs of dubbing a film here or~~ in Europe are approximately the same, ranging from $14,000 to $30,000 on the average, the final tab being determined less by the quality of the job than by the number of parts to be dubbed in.

Distribs admit that European studios have dubbing facilities far superior to those found in the U. S., but they argue that dialog added on the Continent is apt to lose the flavor which makes it attractive to American audiences.

Accent on dubbing activities is highlighted by plans of Italian Films Export to operate its own dubbing studio in N. Y. The facilities are expected to be installed and ready within two months, with IFE doing the job for individual Italian producers. Mauro Zambuto, Italian dubbing expert, has been here for several months investigating various problems involved in setting up a studio.

Most recent Italian-dubbed hit was "Bitter Rice," which chalked up 3,400 bookings in its foreign-language version. The Lux release is expected to ring up another few hundred dates on the strength of the English dialog.

Currently in the dubbing works is the Lux pic, "Anna," which is being revamped for U. S. consumption in N. Y. under IFE supervision. Plans call for the film to be dual-premiered, with the subtitled version going into an east side art house, as customary, and the dubbed pic making its bow on Broadway.

The distribs feel that once the American audience has become accustomed to seeing dubbed imports, it will take the development in its stride. Importers cite European acceptance of dubbing, with practically all Hollywood films getting the treatment for their general release in Italy, France, Germany and Spain.

U. S. majors for a time tried dubbing exports for South American market but the experiment was a dud, largely because of language differences within the various countries.

One of the dubbing hurdles is that the number of pix that lend themselves to the treatment is limited by the very nature of the material. Preferred films are those that lean heavily on visual appeal, i.e. spectacles like "Fabiola" which turned in a nice profit.

As television continues to suffer from the lack of adequate Hollywood product, foreign film distribs figure they can't lose by offering dubbed pix. They say they can already double their dubbing cost by selling to TV, and they foresee the day when a good import will clean up in art theatres, regular runs and TV.

Glenn Ford

try now are doing everything they can think of to get out the vote," Ford pointed out. "Here's an ideal opportunity for the industry to join in a civic undertaking on both a local and a national level and help boost the percentage of eligible citizens who take advantage of their voting privilege."

Election day is only five weeks away and the industry would have to get started on the scheme immediately, Ford pointed out, but there's still enough time to guarantee that the message reaches every eligible voter in the country. Actor volunteered to spearhead a local committee which would launch the plan in Hollywood by making special trailers which could be sent to the nation's theatres.

"The trailers alone should be a big help to the vote-getting campaign," Ford opined. "If we could get them to the theatres about two weeks before election and run them at every performance every day, we could get the vote message to millions of people."

Problem of getting out the nation's voters has been in Ford's mind since his last trip to Europe last year. "I got a much clearer picture of how precious a privilege the vote is," he explained, "when I got behind the Iron Curtain for a while and travelled through other countries where there is no universal suffrage such as we have here."

Vote Receipt Pass

The current campaigns being staged to insure a tremendous turnout at the polls crystallized the idea in the actor's mind and he began working out plans for a film industry drive. Framework for ~~the scheme has already been~~ roughed out and is ready to be acted upon by interested individual exhibitors or associations.

Under Ford's plan, voters in those states where voting receipts are disturbed would use those receipts as an admission pass to their local film houses. In other states, exhibitors could arrange with voting registrars to countersign mimeographed forms, to be supplied by industry groups, certifying that the voter had actually exercised his franchise.

Receipt or mimeographed form would serve as a free admission, when the bearer is accompanied by a regular paying patron, for seven weekdays beginning on the day after Election Day. Thus, Saturday and Sunday would be excluded under the terms of the arrangement to enable exhibitors to secure the necessary paid admissions for a one-week period to guarantee that the vote-getting operation would not cue an operational loss. Patrons, of course, would pay the required Federal admission tax on the pass.

Rush Adlai Job

Random House is rush-publishing "Speeches of Adlai Stevenson," 128-page paper-bound tome selling for $1. John Steinbeck wrote the foreword and Debs Myers and Ralph Martin have written a 2,500-word biog of the Democratic nominee.

Book was contracted for on Sept. 24, hurried to press on Sept. 26 and will be released Oct. 16.

Paul Gallicos' Vox Pop

Under the N. Y. Daily News "Voice of the People" the following announcement appeared Sept. 25:

"In order to forestall rumor and misinterpretation, we deeply regret to announce that after some 13 years of marriage we have reached a parting of the ways. The reason for this action may be said to be a latent and increasing incompatibility and the need and desire of each to work out his and her career individually. There is no other woman. There is no other man. There is no contemplated 'next' for either of us. There is nothing between us but affection and deep regret that we can no longer continue in marriage. We shall seek a divorce. This is our whole story and although we are not unavailable we will have no further statement or amplification to make on the above.

Once A Ham . . . !

Quondam actor John Lodge, now governor of Connecticut, was principal speaker recently at a nearby West Haven dedication ceremony of the First Congregational Church, chairmanned by local VARIETY mugg Harold M. Bone.

As the governor sat down at the conclusion of his talk, Bone thanked him for a fine address. His Excellency replied: "What sort of notice would you have given me in VARIETY?"

A Tallulu of a Book

Tallulah Bankhead has another hit on her hands — her autobiog. Few people have cause for soul-searching and if they do it's usually a case of who cares? but Miss Bankhead, circa 1952, is as much public property as her beloved Giants or Marilyn Monroe. So there is a vast audience (thanks to NBC's "Big Show" builder-upper) who will care. It's a cinch that "Tallulah (My Biography)" (Harper; $3.95), including 24 pages of photographs, will attract that vast audience.

Few public personalities are as frank about themselves or have reason for introspection, but in the case of the daughter of Congressman Bankhead—the "My Daddy" to whom she dedicates her memoirs—there is much justification.

There is special dedication to Broadway publicist Richard Maney for his collaborative interest.

A legend within her own time, she is an extrovert who doesn't spare herself in her saga of show biz struggles; her expression of personal spleen (Billy Rose, Michael Myerberg, Lillian Hellman, Herman Shumlin); her dislikes (to get up, go to bed, and be alone); her passionate likes (the Giants, ribald company, yatata into the night); her positive opinions (newspapers hate to retract their erratum, although she is goodhumored amidst her definite expressions on this subject, mentioning her tussles with Arthur Hays Sulzberger, Sam Zolotow, Danton Walker, et al.); her general disdain of the critics; her sex life attitudes, frankly recounted in an entire chapter captioned "Flirtation With Sin"; her eight years of glory in London's West End; the gamut from guzzling to gambling; her schoolgirl adulation, that lingers to this day, of such theatrical greats as Ethel Barrymore; her fluctuating fortunes; and the rest of it right up to Hollywood, radio, etc.

Paraphrasing the author's pet greeting, "Tallulah" is a "dahrling" of a book; it defies being laid down and not quickly picked up again. It's good reading. In a measure it is a revealing saga of our times, personalized by a never-dull career of a compelling personality. It's a "Tallulu" of a personal memoir. It'll sell big. Abel.

Bradna's Circus Lowdown

Fred Bradna, with the Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey Circus for more than 43 years, has written, with Hartzell Spence, lusty memoirs of those years in "The Big Top" (Simon & Schuster, $3.95). Bradna, in a silk hat washed with beer to keep it shiny, was the equestrian director of the Big One all those years. Surviving many managements, blowdowns, wrecks, the Hartford fire and volatile prima donnas, he was finally felled by a quarter pole in a Dallas cyclone in 1945. He even recovered from that, but at 83 he now takes things easy in the Sarasota sun. Easy, that is, until someone refers to him as a "ringmaster."

("The Big Top" went into its second printing (19) on the eve of its publication date, due to a big advance order by circus fans.)

Bradna certainly has the right to write about the American circus from 1900 to 1950, and he has done it accurately, colorfully and aromatically, tinting it with the high style of a man who was always one of the class figures in show biz.

Here is the true story of Lillian Leitzel, of the Ubangis and Zip, and why clowns are called Joey, Charlie and Auguste. It describes for the first time in detail the last embattled years of John Ringling and has complete word portraits of King Otto Ringling, Alf T., Charles and the other brothers, and of James A. Bailey, who hired Bradna in Europe. He introduces a youthful circus apprentice named Johnnie North and takes you on a circus honeymoon in an upper and lower over the wheels.

He says that bears are the most dangerous circus beasts and laments the passing of the techniques which produced May Wirth, Lucio Cristiani and Ella Bradna, his equally celebrated wife, who was still riding handsomely at 70. He also explains the eclipse of great solo clowns like Silvers Oakley and Polidor. He calls Buffalo the poorest circus town, and Denver the best, and tells how the Hollywood celebs crowd the act in Los Angeles. He also tells why the Big Show will never play Scranton again. And he deals bluntly with ticket cadgers and other pests.

Here also is Bradna's proposed Hall of Fame for the circus and his nominations for it in every branch from exploitation to common working man. These appear to be conscientious selections, not sops to old friends, and it is conceded that Bradna, as the ranking circus veteran in America, has the right to start this gallery.

"The Big Top" takes its place among the best books ever written about the circus, and will be eager, controversial reading for anyone who ever worked rings, stages, wire or webbing. Or who ever loved the circus. Doul.

Fanny Brice Biog

"Fabulous Fanny," life story of Fanny Brice, headlines the November Ladies' Home Journal. Written by Norman Katkov from 300 pages of notes the late comedienne left behind, plus interviews with her and her friends, the story will run through four issues.

Pieces cover Ziegfeld Follies days, the "Baby Snooks" radio stanza, etc.

DeVries' Breezy Anthology

Peter DeVries is another New Yorker contributor who has put together his pieces from that weekly (plus one from Harper's) into a breezy book titled "No, But I Saw the Movie" (Little, Brown; $3). It is good bedside reading, sophisticated yet generally appealing. His tongue-in-cheek observations on the passing American scene will strike a nerve with everybody.

Little, Brown-Duell, Sloan & Pearce's stable of New Yorker autors, incidentally, now includes Ludwig Bemelmans, Hortense Calisher, John McNulty, Joseph Mitchell, Ogden Nash, Mollie Painter-Downes and J. D. Salinger. Abel.

Scrutinizing The Savoy

Through the swing doors of the Savoy Hotel in London's Strand have passed most of London's visiting celebrities. In recent years, particularly, it has become the mecca for show biz personalities, and most top-ranking execs and stars have stayed there at one time or another.

Jean Nicol, who was pressagent at the Savoy for some 10 years, including the whole of the war period, has penned her impressions in an engrossing book, "Meet Me At The Savoy" (Museum Press, $2.50), with a foreword by Danny Kaye.

During the war, the Savoy became an unofficial press club for American correspondents and a large slice of the yarn is inevitably taken up with the problem of running a No. 1 hotel during an era of shortages of food, liquor, etc., while the bombs were falling nightly and many of the guests were being housed in air raid shelters. The Savoy didn't escape the blitz but the hotel was never put out of action.

Because the film and theatre personalities who stayed at the Savoy during her term of office obviously provided the best copy, Miss Nicol has filled many pages with fascinating anecdotes about the stars. Kaye naturally comes in for a lion's share and many of the stories told of him are quite new. There are also interesting sidelights on many British political personalities. The regular wartime visits of Winston Churchill, and yarns about A. P. Herbert and the editors of the national dailies, are described by the author in a facile if not entirely objective light. Myro.

Atlantic Club Kickoff

Atlantic mag will kick off the Atlantic Monthly Book Club this month with James Norman Hall's autobiography, "My Island Home." The alternate selection for October will be "The Tundra World," by Theodora C. Stanwell-Fletcher.

Atlantic editor Edward Weeks and his editorial associates, Charles W. Morton and Charles Rollo, will select the books for the Club.

More of the Human Museum

Shrewd observer of the passing show business scene, seer of screwballiana, ace interviewer and obviously sage student of human nature that he is, it is no surprise that Maurice Zolotow's latest is socko. "It Takes All Kinds," anthology of many of his Satevepost pieces, includes a couple of newies (the opening chapter, "The Eccentric Way of Life" and "Feedbox Jack"). It's arresting reading that should find a wide orbit.

"It Takes All Kinds" (Random House; $3) tells it by its title—and all of them aren't haywire. There's nothing but suave sagacity and urbanity in the finale piece, an excellent profile on Cartier's ace salesman and goodwill ambassador, Jules Glanezer.

The 12 chapters include closeups on Dunninger, Cardini, Richard Himber, S. S. Adams, Jim Moran, Charles Dempsey, Henry Nemo, Bruno Furst, Maurice Dreicer and Glaenzer, whose diverse personalities reflect one common ground—the passionate desire to be different. The exhibitionism runs the gamut from cruel practical jokes, mixologists, seekers of good steaks, off-beat antics, party-giving and wierdies, and points up anew how diverse a parade we mortals be.

Zolotow's skillful treatment and sharp journalistic insight almost endows some with a distinction that borders on of-the-moment immortality. His is the hep newspaperman's approach rather than the conventional magazine "profile" etching. He is as surgical as Dr. Kildare in his clinical closeups on the mores, modes and manners of these sundry men—and he is as entertaining as the "Folies Bergeres" as he denudes them. It's swell reading. Abel.

Big in Books Too

Texas is big in book circles, too, says Charles Hackelman, editor of Popular Edisons. Put "Texas" in a book title, be it western or otherwise, and it sells— and especially in that state.

Vaude Song Survey

With a background of the songs popularized by vaudeville singers over the past century, "They Were Singing," a new book by Christopher Pullem [George G. Harrap, $2.60] pictures different aspects of English life as reflected in the songs. The final four chapters, entitled "A Bit of Background," have an emphatic, nostalgic appeal in its review of the rise and fall of the music hall.

Many of the tunes featured in the book are still being sung. Presumably they will never die, but even those that have been forgotten give a lively glimpse of social changes, with pungent comments on topicalities of their day. A special feature of the publication are the numerous contemporary illustrations and the line drawings used for chapter headings. Myro.

CHATTER

John Kobler's "Ballet in America" due in the November Holiday.

Alistair Cooke's "Christmas Eve," collection of short stories, to be published by Knopf Nov. 10.

J. M. Ruddy covering the Hollywood beat for the Kemsley Newspapers, a 42-paper British chain.

Harry Meade, ad staffer with Cue the last 14 years, has exited for a similar post at Park East mag.

Robert Carson's "The Magic Lantern," a novel about filmites, will be published Dec. 1 by Henry Holt & Co.

George Jean Nathan back as drama critic in the October issue of Theatre Arts, after a summer-vacation absence.

Paul Denis writing a book, "Opportunities in Dancing," for spring publication by Vocational Guidance Books.

British Book Society is publishing an English edition of Irving Stone's "The President's Lady," currently filming at 20th-Fox.

William Donald Maxwell, Chicago Tribune managing editor, will be awarded an honorary doctor of literature degree at DePauw U. Oct. 15.

Howard Taubman's "Mitropoulos, Unpredictable Maestro," profile on the N. Y. Philharmonic conductor, in the October House & Garden.

Paul Gallico, author-columnist, and Harold Callender, Paris bureau chief of the N. Y. Times, enroute to Europe on the Queen Elizabeth.

Elmer Peterson contributing a number of anecdotes for the forthcoming Putnam book dealing with experiences of foreign correspondents.

Ray Hunt, former Chicago Sun-Times feature and amusement editor, has been named editor and general manager of the South Bend, Ind., Record.

Leo Lerman, entertainment editor of Mademoiselle, to leave mid-November for a 10-week combined vacation-biz trip to Scandinavia and western Europe.

Michael Blankfort's "The Juggler" will be published in a pocket book edition by Dell Publications to coincide with the release of Stanley Kramer's film version.

Bill Ornstein, Metro trade rep, currently in American Jewish Times Outlook with "The Moon Turns Green" and in Baltimore Jewish Times with "Growing Boy."

Alfred A. Duckett, managing editor of Tan, and former associate editor of Ebony and Jet magazines, has resigned from his post to open a public relations office in Chicago.

Barnett Fowler, byliner for the Albany, N. Y., Times-Union, appointed to the Siena College faculty as instructor in journalism. He will continue the newspaper affiliation.

Emory Lewis appointed feature editor of Cue mag, succeeding John Keating, newly-named drama critic by Archbold van Beuren, publisher. Lewis will also cover legit interviews and features.

All 16 short stories published by Mademoiselle during the past year are cited by Martha Foley in her "The Best American Short Stories of 1952." Three stories are reprinted in their entirety among "the best" of the year.

Nancy Becker quietly took over the advertising and promotion of Henry Holt & Co. after Fred Rosenau's resignation because he wanted to "widen" his orbit. Miss Becker was his aide. Maureen McManus continues as publicity chief of Holt.

Arturo Toscanini's RCA recording of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony was considered so unusual that the Atlantic Monthly has given the maestro its October issue cover, plus a full-length copyright story by its music critic John M. Conly dealing with the nine hours (over two days) of recording on the opus.

Robert Ewing, Jr., of New Orleans, is new chairman of the board of the Shreveport Times and Monroe News-Star and Morning World, all Louisiana dailies. He succeeds Wilson Ewing, Monroe, who died recently. Ewing had been chairman of the board of KWKH, Shreveport, and KTHS, Hot Springs, Ark., since the death of John D. Ewing, May 17.

Entries in the fourth annual art exhibit of the Newspaper Guild of N. Y., which opens tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Heywood Broun Room in Guild headquarters, will be judged by a panel of five, including Will Barnett, Edwin Dickinson, John Groth, Ethel Katz and Jean Liberte. Employees of virtually every newspaper, magazine and wire service are competing for prizes.

films before 2 p.m. the day following last Tuesday's (23) bout in Philadelphia.

Although the bout did not involve a foreign boxer, requests for the films from abroad have been heavy, according to Sid Kramer, RKO's shorts subjects chief. Special edition, with Spanish commentary, already has been prepared for the Latin-American market. English commentary was handled by Jimmy Powers, N. Y. News sports editor and TV sportscaster.

RKO's New Mgt.

to the time of the Stolkin takeover. Company's sales staff hopes that the pic will be gotten out in time to bolster its immediate release sked.

Another problem is that several of the pix appear headed only for art house engagements. These include "Under the Red Sea," which is being teamed with "Tarzan's Savage Fury" for dual bill runs; "Face to Face," the two-part Huntington Hartford production featuring yarns by Joseph Conrad and Stephen Crane, and "No Time for Flowers," a Mort Briskin-Don Siegel film made in Vienna. In addition, there's a western, "Montana Belle," starring Jane Russell. Latter film was picked up by Hughes several years ago from Howard Welch, who obtained Miss Russell from Hughes on a loanout. Although Hughes has had the complete rights to the film for several years, release was withheld for some unexplainable reason. Pic, however, became the property of the new RKO management and is currently on the company's release slate.

Only immediate pix on the company's sked which sales staffers feel will continue the momentum engendered by "King Kong," "Sudden Fear," "One Minute to Zero" and "The Big Sky" are Jerry Wald's "The Lusty Men," which preems in Texas this week; "Androcles," set for immediate release; "Blackbeard the Pirate," skedded for Thanksgiving, and Samuel Goldwyn's "Hans Christian Andersen," RKO's biggest of the year, pencilled in for Thanksgiving release.

Two pictures have been set to roll at the studio for some time, but have been held up for various reasons. Inavailability of Victor Mature, set to costar with Jane Russell, delayed "Split Second," an Edmund Grainger production. Pic is expected to roll, however, as soon as new management gives the green light. Similarly, Jerry Wald's "Size 12" is ready to go. It had been delayed because of Hughes' failure to okay the cast. With Hughes out of the picture now, it's felt production will start shortly. In oddition, company has numerous story properties completed and ready to roll as soon as the new top brass gives the okay.

Carriage Trade

paper. For when "Concert" opened on Saturday (Aug. 30), business was slightly above average. Sunday showed improvement and Monday had standees.

Reflecting upon the success of "Concert," Fine recalled that occasionally "it had been rough in the past few years and frequently I played Yiddish, German and French pictures when I couldn't get Russian films. The theatre's main support is its 'foundation trade' and they came every week regardless of what is on the screen.

"New customers," Fine said, "are what I call the 'marginal trade.' It's easy to identify them for invariably they phone for directions to get to the theatre. Others inquire for the location of the rest rooms. I've had hundreds of such queries." He also disclosed that the admission scale for the 600-seat house has remained constant in recent years at 65-85-$1-$1.20 throughout the week.

On a hunch that "Concert" might develop into a hit, Fine acquired as many recordings of arias sung in the film well in advance of the preem. Since demand for that type music was negligible, he nabbed the platters at a nominal price. Disks had a hefty sale at the theatre's second-floor display rack after the picture's opening. Waxings of basso Mark Reizen sold out within a few days. Most of the original Soviet recordings, were marketed on the Stinson and R. G. labels.

Meantime, on the strength of "Concert's" reviews, a number of exhibitors have sought to book the film. Nicholas Napoli, who distributes Soviet-made product via his Artkino Pictures, disclosed that he only has "two or three" prints available but expects a shipment of about 15 more in October. Pic opens at the Cinema Annex, Chicago, Saturday (27) and a tentative date has been set at the World Theatre, Philadelphia.

The Blazing Forest

ging in the big woods and a climactic forest fire that resolves most of the problems. Edward Ludwig gave it suitable direction to point up movement and keep the 90 minutes from lagging.

John Payne plays a tough logging boss, brought in to cut the timber on land owned by Agnes Moorehead so she can stake her niece, Susan Morrow, to a city life. Payne's a driver who works his crew hard so he can get the job over and receive his percentage quickly. Miss Morrow, already interested in the logging boss, comes to believe he needs the money for another woman when she sees him meet Lynne Roberts. Events eventually prove, however, that Payne is repaying money stolen by his ne'er-do-well brother, Richard Arlen, and trying to patch up the marriage of Arlen and Miss Roberts. Plot brings together loose ends when a truck accident starts a fire and Payne manages to rescue William Demarest, logger, with the aid of a Forestry Service helicopter. Arlen dies from injuries in the accident, thus saving him from the sheriff for a second theft, and Payne can now devote his time and money to convincing Miss Morrow she doesn't want to live in the city after all.

Trouping is generally good. Payne and Miss Morrow team nicely. He puts over the rugged facets of his character and she treats the eye with natural looks. Demarest and Miss Moorehead hoke up their performances for chuckles, and Arlen is an ingratiating ne'er-do-well. Roscoe Ates, camp cook; Miss Roberts, Walter Reed and the others are up to demands of script and direction.

Lionel Lindon's cameras do a good color job of putting the action and outdoor locales on film. Other technical assists are in keeping, all helping to shape this one as acceptable material for the average situation and general action fan.

Strange Fascination

Sordid drama; okay for exploitation but spotty in general release.

Columbia release of Hugo Haas (Robert Erlik) production. Stars Cleo Moore, Hugo Haas, Mona Barrie. Written and directed by Haas; camera, Paul Ivano; editor, Merrill G. White; music, Vaclav Divina. Tradeshown, N. Y., Sept. 26, '52. Running time, 80 MINS.

"Strange Fascination" is another "one-man" production from Hugo Haas. For he wrote, directed, produced and stars in this Columbia release as in his previous "The Girl on the Bridge" and "Pickup." Latest Haasian entry has a sordid, sexy theme in keeping with his earlier efforts. As such it rates as a fine subject for exploitation houses but appears to have a spotty future in general release.

This time Haas trains the camera on a European concert pianist whose career and character disintegrate after he meets and weds a buxom, blonde dancer Cleo Moore on a U. S. tour. Marriage of pianist Haas is serene enough to begin with but by coincidence shortly thereafter he's plagued by bad luck.

Haas' ill fortunes comprise inability to secure further bookings, reduction to penniless status and loss of interest in him by wealthy Mona Barrie, who sponsored his American tour. These blows are bad enough but the crusher comes when Miss Moore leaves the middle-aged pianist for a younger man and at the same time an insurance company denies a claim injury to his hand. A stagey finale finds him giving a one-hand concert in a Bowery meeting room.

Despite some good performances, the cast doesn't quite make the script believable. Haas' portrayal of the concert artist is in the sympathetic vein. Miss Moore easily fulfills the physical demands of her role but falls short of meeting the thesping requirements. Miss Barrie, as the sponsor, carries on with a platonic spirit one would expect a wealthy socialite to have. Rick Vallin, Karen Sharpe and Marc Krah, among others, provide fair support in lesser roles.

Haas guided the entire film in a low-key, downbeat atmosphere unrelieved by the slightest presence of humor as a change of pace. His is a study in human disintegration, and he relentlessly follows through. Production appurtenances reflect a modest budget. Vaclav Divina contribbed a good musical score while also of merit is the nocturne composed by Jacob Gimpel plus his own piano soloing. Paul Ivano's camerawork is okay as is Merrill G. White's editing.

Captive Women

Cliffhanger meller, good for juveniles and as supporting feature.

RKO release of Aubrey Wisberg-Jack Pollexfen production. Features Robert Clarke, Margaret Field, Gloria Saunders, Ron Randell. Screenplay, Aubrey Wisberg, Jack Pollexfen; camera, Paul Ivano; editor, Fred R. Feitshans; music, Charles Koff. Tradeshown in N. Y., Sept. 26, '52. Running time, 67 MINS.

| Captive | Paula Dorety |
| Bram | Robert Bice |
| Captive | Chili Williams |
| Carver | William Schallert |
| Sabron | Eric Colmar |
| Jason | Douglas Evans |

"Captive Women" is an elongated cliffhanger, a natural for juveniles on some dual bills.

Story of three surviving branches of the human race, A.D. 2000 or after the last atomic blast has laid New York City to waste, develops into a Buck Rogers sort of adventure. All imaginative touches are kept hidden as the plot ploddingly relates the efforts of a New Jersey tribe to bear offspring who will not possess their hideous facial features. It seems that the atomic blasts have scarred them for life. This yen to create a normal race results in raids on a subterranean tribe where the femmes are comely and desirable for mating. From such a beginning, there is the familiar machinations of a third tribe to two-time them. The flooding of a tunnel under the Hudson river is the tipoff as to the absurd heights this reaches.

Most of the acting is in the serial film tradition although Ron Randell occasionally shows himself as a first-rate actor. He is the hero. Both Margaret Field and Gloria Saunders partially make up in looks for what they lack in terp ability. Robert Clarke, Stuart Randall, Paula Dorety and Robert Bice head the large supporting cast.

Stuart Gilmore's direction is standard for this type of pic. Sharp editing by Fred R. Feitshans keeps it from getting too far out of hand. Paul Ivano has contributed a good camera job.

Tropical Heat Wave
(SONGS)

Routine programmer with mild comedy and songs for lowercase bookings.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

Republic release of Sidney Picker production. Stars Estelita; features Robert Hutton, Grant Withers, Kristine Miller, Edwin Max. Directed by R. G. Springsteen. Written by Arthur T. Horman; Camera, John MacBurnie; editor, Harold Minter; songs, Sammy Wilson, Arthur T. Horman, Nester Amaral. Reviewed, Sept. 25, '52. Running time, 74 MINS.

| Estelita Rodriguez | Estelita |
| Stratford Carver | Robert Hutton |
| Norman James | Grant Withers |
| Sylvia Enwright | Kristine Miller |
| Moore | Edwin Max |
| Frost | Lou Lubin |
| Ignacio Ortega | Martin Garralaga |
| Dean Enwright | Earl Lee |
| Stoner | Lennie Bremen |
| Stickey Langley | Jack Kruschen |

This is mild-mannered programmer entertainment. Estelita stars and the material is the type of frantic romantics usually supplied her in these low-budgeters by Republic.

As usual, plot has her newly arrived from Cuba and singing in her uncle's New York nitery. Grant Withers is a mobster who moves in on the uncle as a forced partner who threatens to take care of the singer if he is not given a piece of the club. Robert Hutton, as a young professor working up case histories on criminals, becomes the target of Estelita's romantic inclinations, poses as a hood himself with her help, and there are a lot of chases and impossible situations thrown into the plot before the fadeout clinch.

Estelita sings three tunes during the course of her nitery stint. They are "My Lonely Heart and I," by Sammy Wilson and Arthur T. Horman; "I Want to be Kissed," by Wilson and Nestor Amaral, and "What Should Happen to You," by Wilson. None is impressive. Material is against the star, as it is against the other players. Kristine Miller, as the jealous fiancee of Hutton, hasn't much to do. Supporting players are adequate.

R. G. Springsteen's direction gets nowhere with the Arthur T. Horman screen story. Budget values provided by Sidney Picker's production supervision are okay, and the technical departments are standard.

Under the Red Sea
(DOCUMENTARY)

Overlong film depicting sights and sounds under the Red Sea.

Hollywood, Sept. 26.

RKO release of Thalia Productions (Sol Lesser) presentation, produced by Dr. Hans Hass. Features Hass, Lottie Berl. Photographed by Hass and Miss Berl; narrative and production supervision, Bill Park; narrator, Les Tremayne; editor, Robert Leo; music, Bert Grund. Previewed Sept. 22, '52. Running time, 67 MINS.

|---|---|
| Expedition leader | Dr. Hans Hass |
| Expedition secretary | Lottie Berl |
| Expedition members | Gerald Weidler, Leo Rohrer, Edward Wawrowetz Alfonso Hochhauser |
| Sudanese recruits | Mahmoud Amir Achmed Nur Mohamed, Ali O'Sheik, Abdul Wahab |

Sol Lesser's Thalia Productions has come up with an overlong documentary edited from footage lensed on a scientific expedition under the Red Sea. When dealing with underwater action the picture has some interesting natural thrills, but a contrived narrative and repetitious scenes slow the overall appeal and make the footage's 67 minutes long and frequently boring.

Dr. Hans Hass, director of Underwater Research Institute at Vaduz, Lichtenstein, headed the expedition to the Red Sea, where he tested theories dealing with fish language, etc. Color would have dressed up and done justice to some of the striking underwater footage. For thrill moments, picture has several sequences with sharks, extremely close photography of giant manta rays and the ride of a skin-diver on the head of a monster whale shark.

Expedition recorded sounds which it presents as the language of deep-sea denizens and even staged a dance to show fish reaction to the strains of "The Blue Danube." This sequence, as well as the rescue of the expedition's femme member, after having been hit by a manta, and much of the narrative have a "fishy" feel and were seemingly used only in an attempt to build up scenic and dramatic values.

Sight of the skin-divers, equipped with small cameras and oxygen tanks, swimming in the Red Sea depths have interest. This is particularly true of Lottie Berl, sole femme, who is a mighty fetching mermaid. However, these shots and those of the myriads of fish, coral reefs, etc., begin to bore after constant repetition.

Narrative and the production supervision for Thalia were handled by Bill Park. He could have done better in both departments. Les Tremayne's narration is too obvious in trying to read excitement into the lines. Robert Leo edited and Bert Grund did the score.

Father's Dilemma
(ITALIAN)

Arthur Davis Associates release of Franco-London production (Salvo D'Angelo). Stars Aldo Fabrizi, Gaby Morlay. Directed by Allessandro Blasetti. Story and screenplay, Cesare Zavattini; camera, Mario Craveri; music, B. Gigognini. Previewed in New York, Sept. 19, '52. Running time, 88 MINS.

| Man in the taxi | Jean Tissier |
| The Archbishop | Lucien Baroux |
| Carloni's maid | Laura Gazzolo |
| Limping man | Max Elloy |
| Italian Patriot | Ernesto Almirante |

(In Italian; English Titles)

Italian entry, winner of an award at the 1950 Venice Film Festival, is a frequently amusing comedy that misses clicking completely because of a forced attempt to pour laugh situations on a tenuous story. The film's prime purpose, however, is a study of manners and characters, and as such has enough plus-elements to make it a good contender on the art house circuit.

Film's names include scripter Cesare Zavattini, of "Bicycle Thief" fame, plus an Italo-Franco cast headed by Aldo Fabrizi, remembered for his portrayal of the priest in "Open City," and Gaby Morlay, the French star.

Basic theme is the loss of the first communion dress of a little girl, who waits at home in tears as her father races about the city attempting to retrieve the garment. Father, as portrayed by Fabrizi, is a self-centered, prosperous confectionery store owner who bullies his wife and employees, makes eyes at pretty women and expects the world to cater to his wishes and whims.

The adventure of obtaining the dress from the dressmaker turns into a nightmare, as he is harrassed by traffic policemen, his car breaks down, and he experiences frustration in attempting to obtain a taxi. Settling on a bus, he pushes and is pushed, eventually ending up in a fight that causes him to lose the precious dress. Failing in his attempt to buy the garment of a neighbor's child, he tries to get the church officials to delay the communion. However, his child finally makes it as the dress is delivered, traced by the dressmaker's label.

Fabrizi is fine in a difficult comedy role as he shouts, exhorts and finally mellows as the egotistical father with the heart of gold. Miss Morlay, in an outstanding performance, is his ever-loving, ever-patient wife who brings her husband to his senses with an unexpected slap. Remainder of the cast also turns in top jobs.

Allessandro Blasetti's direction gets most out of the comedy elements, and Mario Craveri's camera work rates a nod.

Merry Wives of Windsor
(GERMAN-MUSICAL)

Central Cinema Corp. release of Deutsche Film production. Stars Sonja Ziemann, Camilla Spira, Paul Esser, Claus Holm. Directed by Georg Wildhagen. Screenplay, Wolff von Gordon, Georg Wildhagen, based on William Shakespeare's play and opera by Otto Nicolai; camera, Eugen Klagemann, Kurt Herlth. At 55th St. Playhouse, N. Y., starting Sept. 20, '52. Running time 92 MINS.

|---|---|
| Frau Fluth | Sonja Ziemann |
| Frau Reich | Camilla Spira |
| Sir John Falstaff | Paul Esser |
| Herr Fluth | Claus Holm |
| Herr Reich | Alexander Engel |
| Fenton | Eckart Dux |
| Anna Reich | Ina Halley |
| Herr Spaerlich | Joachim Teege |
| Dr. Cajus | Gerhard Frickhoffer |

(In German ;English Titles)

Among the most successful German pictures in the U. S., pre-Hitler, were the musicals, and "Merry Wives of Windsor" should resume this type of boxoffice popularity. This opera film is well sung by the dubbed voices of well-known German operatic singers, with a fine cast of German and Austrian actors. Pic shapes up as a strong entry for some arty houses and German-languge theatres.

This is the Shakespearean story of Falstaff (Paul Esser), his love of wine and comely femmes. The familiar tale about two wives who punish him for his flirtations is related with more than usual action for an opera.

Director Georg Wildhagen has maintained an even pace between the spoken plot and actual ballading; hence the picture is not weighted with too much music. At the same time he has not overlooked the best-known arias and music. Wildhagen also has not forgotten the sex angle, with the beauty of Sonja Ziemann never neglected by the camera.

One of the outstanding voices, Rita Streich, sings the Ziemann role. Miss Ziemann, besides being comely by Hollywood standards, also is capable as Frau Fluth, one of the Windsor wives. Camilla Spira, as the other wife figuring in the conspiracy with Frau Fluth, also does well. Martha Modl is her singing voice.

Vet German actor, Esser manages to steal many scenes. Hans Kramer has his singing role. Ina Halley, as the younger girl in love with Eckart Dux, is attractive in a lesser part while Dux upholds the male side of the romance. Helmut Krebs vocalizes for him. Claus Holm, Alexander Engel and Joachim Teege also do well in their supporting roles.

Camerawork of Eugen Klagemann and Kurt Herlth is especially good on closeups. Wildhagen's direction is another strong credit. The Berlin State Opera orch neatly plays the music.

Les Conquerants Solitaires
(The Solitary Conquerors)
(FRENCH)

Venice, Sept. 9.

Seine Productions release and production. Stars Claire Maffei, Alain Cluny. Written and directed by Claude Vermorel. Camera, Jean Bourgoin. At Venice Film Festival, Venice. Running time, 98 MINS.

|---|---|
| Therese | Claire Maffei |
| Pascal | Alain Cluny |
| Bernard | Andre Simon |
| Paul | P. Chatin |
| Raphael | Raphael Ambengat |

This was filmed entirely in the African bush. Profusion of murky symbolism and philosophy has missed the color and flavor of the story. Erratically directed and acted, this exerts some force in scenes of primitive rituals and native dances. Film's combo documentary and dramatic aspect could slant this for some specialized U.S. slotting, but overall downbeat aspects and plodding dramatic level militate against this for most situations.

Story concerns a well brought-up girl who goes to the African bush to sell the property of her recently deceased father. She finds that the great house is a veritable shanty and the great woodlands unsaleable unless a road is built to civilization. Her neighbor is a misanthropic gold prospector who hates her on sight. Conflict develops between the two as he trys to drive her away. She persists in staying and finally begins to love the country. She wins over the brooding, occultist cynic to her side, but too late because he is dying. She decides to stay and help the natives.

Direction is rough and editing gives the film a choppy appearance. Story seems pretentious in its mystic illusions, but too many themes cause it to wander and results in many slow spots. Claire Maffei can not integrate her character in the splotchy aspects of the film. Alain Cluny, as the anguished social outcast, looks the part but lacks the dynamic drive to give the part body. Lensing gives the film some production assets.

Lo Sceicco Bianco
(The White Sheik)
(ITALIAN)

Venice, Sept. 16.

PDC release of Luigi Rovere production. Stars Brunella Bovo, Alberto Sordi, Leopoldo Trieste. Directed by Federico Fellini. Screenplay, Fellini, Tullio Pinelli from story by Michelangelo Antonioni, Fellini, Pinelli. Camera, Arturo Gallea, music, Nino Rota; editor, Rolando Benedetti. At Venice Film Festival, Venice. Running time, 105 MINS.

|---|---|
| Wanda | Brunella Bovo |
| The White Sheik | Alberto Sordi |

Film's main values lie in its spoof of the phony world surrounding the soap-opera stories which, printed in serial form, have thousands of faithful readers every week in Italy. Combined with pic's other laugh values, it should insure a healthy boxoffice future at local runs, but will also lessen the chances in the U. S. where the genre is less wellknown.

Film is overlong and uneven, but filled with intelligent humor of the tongue-in-check brand.

It tells of the Rome adventures of a smalltown girl on her honeymoon who becomes involved with a group of people "shooting" one of the photo-strip adventures staring her hero, the White Sheik. Visit affords audience a good look behind the scenes of their favorite adventure-makers, involves the girl in an uproarious love-affair with the Sheik, and eventually brings her back to her dull but sound husband. The Sheik, it develops, is a henpecked ex-butcher's assistant.

Brunella Bovo ("Miracle in Milan") stars as the girl, Alberto Sordi delightfully overplays his role of the Sheik and Leopoldo Trieste is fine as the husband. Production values are modest but adequate. Nino Rota's music does much to key action. Direction by Frederico Fellini of his own script, his first megging job on his own, is uneven, but shows promise.

Facundo, El Tigre de Los Llanos
(Facundo, Tiger of the Plains)
(ARGENTINE)

Buenos Aires, Sept. 9.

Guaranteed release of Dave Cabouli's production. Stars Francisco M. Allende, with Zoe Ducos, Felix Rivero, Miguel Beban, Jorge Molina Salas, Pascual Nacarati, Hugo Mujica, Mario Cozza. Directed by Miguel P. Tato, Carlos Borcosque. Story, Antonio Pages Larraya; editor, Leopoldo Torre Nilsson; camera, Bob Roberts; songs, Alberto Amor. At Ocean Theatre, Buenos Aires. Running time, 85 MINS.

Any film critic who launches out as a director is sticking his neck out for retaliation from those who formerly took the knocks from him. Miguel P. Tato (15 years ago "Nestor" of the tabloid El Mundo and not friendly to Hollywood) perhaps has avoided this pitfall by sharing direction honors with Carlos Borcosque, who was called in when it looked as though the picture never would be finished. Film will do better in the U.S. than most Argentine pix, especially for juvenile audiences.

Director, who allied himself with the Nazi cult during the last war, has slanted this historical opus, depicting Facundo Quiroga, a henchman of dictator Rosas, as a well-meaning patriot despite his violence. This slant ties in with the present regime's view of history.

Aside from this ideological twist, the picture succeeds as entertainment because there is plenty of action and some suspense. This makes it a good bet for the juvenile market.

The script has Facundo Quiroga on a legendary stagecoach ride from the capital to the distant province of Santiago del Estero, charged with a secret mission from Rosas to unify the northern provinces of Salta and Tucuman, to avoid another war. The envoy must evade attempts by enemies to prevent his getting through. On the return drive, the enemies catch up with him and murder him in an ambush which has impressed itself on succeeding generations because of its stark barbarism.

The famous drive is faithfully transferred to the screen via Bob Roberts' lensing. Otherwise the technique is corny; particularly the fade-out into the flashbacks as well as sequences showing Facundo presumably jolting along as he broods over his wrongs. Gaucho costuming is interesting, but to the experienced eye full of anachronisms which escaped the director. Other costumes denote low budgeting.

Francisco Martinez Allende handles himself conscientiously as Facundo, but is far too refined to convince as the terrible "Tiger," whose eyes were reputed to have a hypnotic effect. Zoe Duco is unbelievably wooden as Severa Willafane, but Felix Rivero, the one-eyed coachman, is outstanding as to makeup and authentic acting.

There are some typical native dances and Alberto Amor gives with some gaucho sings and guitarre playing.

The whole is just good enough to suggest what a great picture it could have been made, but nowhere good enough to be described as anything but ~~mediocre. The~~ picture has started out exceptionally at the boxoffice.

El Rebozo De Soledad
(Soledad's Shawl)
(MEXICAN)

Venice, Sept. 9.

STPC release and production. Stars Arturo De Cordova, Pedro Armendariz, Estella Linda. Directed by Roberto Gavaldon. Screenplay, Jose Revueltas, Gavaldon; camera, Gabriel Figueroa; editor, Salvador Lozano. At Venice Film Festival, Venice. Running time, 115 MINS.

|---|---|
| Alberto | Arturo De Cordova |
| Rocco | Pedro Armendariz |
| Soledad | Estelle Linda |
| Priest | Domingo Soler |
| Mauro | Carlos Moneteuma |
| Davide | James Fernandez |

This is a colorful, literary tale of a doctor fighting ignorance and custom in a small, primitive Mexican town. Full of incident, national flavor and blessed with top technical and thespian work, this is a natural for the Spanish language circuits. If the talky spots, which do nothing but philosophize on the action are sheared, this might have the appeal for some American arty spots. There is some marquee appeal in Arturo De Cordova and Pedro Armendariz.

Story is told in flashback as a country doctor comes back to the city to start a new life. His past in a small town is unfolded. Here he fights a constant battle with ignorance, superstition and poverty. He decides to stay on after a dramatic teacher operation to a save a boy's arm and his sister, Estella Linda, becomes his servant in gratitude. The medico decides to marry the girl but she is sought by Pedro Armendariz lusty landowner, who finally seduces her. She becomes pregnant and the doctor marries her. However, she runs off with her seducer, now a hunted man. The doctor realizes his place is at the side of the people and not in a hospital.

Roberto Gavaldon has directed with fine pictorial flair. The lensing of Gabriel Figueroa is of a lush, contrasty feeling peculiar to Mexican films. Arturo De Cordova is fine as the humane doctor. Armendariz gives spirit and excitement to his role of Rocco. Miss Linda is beautiful and moving as the ill-fated Soledad. Remainder of cast is fine.

Although the pic has its conventional aspects, its wealth of detail and feeling could give this a chance in the U. S. if properly hypoed. Mosk.

Monsieur Taxi
(FRENCH)

Paris, Sept. 16.

Pathe Consortium release of PAC-Pathe Cinema production. Stars Michel Simon. Directed by Andre Hunebelle. Screenplay, Jean Halain; camera, Paul Cotteret; editor, Jean Feyte. At Balzac, Paris, Sept. 16, '52. Running time, 88 MINS.

|---|---|
| Pierre | Michel Simon |
| Georges | Roland Alexandre |
| Lili | Monique Darbaud |
| Louis | Jean Brochard |
| Aunt | Jane Marken |
| Florist | Jean Carmet |

"Monsieur Taxi" is a slight tale about the life of a Paris cabbie. Although filled with some amusing bits and affable types, it falls into a conventional rut and soon wears out the originality of its theme. The name of Michel Simon and the look-see at the Paris streets and types may get this by in a few special U. S. spots.

Taxi driver, Michel Simon, lives his modest life carting people around Paris, yelling at policemen, guzzling his daily quota of wine, and trying to make financial ends meet on his limited income. One day he finds a lot of money in his taxi. He fights with his conscience as to whether to find the owner or not. Here pic falls into a familiar groove as the pic complications come to a head. Secondary angle of his son being secretly engaged to a chorine and a snoopy policeman brother-in-law fill the remainder of the film.

Direction by Andre Hunebelle is adequate, taking advantage of the usual Gallic types to forward the yarn. Simon is fine as the vociferous, kindly taxi man. Roland Alexandre is appealing as the son while Monique Darbaud does the chorus gal well. Others in the cast are adequate with Jean Brochard fine as the stuffy cop brother-in-law. Lensing is good in interiors but flat otherwise, losing some appeal of the intriguing Paris streets. Mosk.

chairman of the Colorado Public Utilities Commission and in 1918 was drafted to head the Utah Power & Light Corp. A year later, he was brought to N. Y. to become managing director of the National Electric Light Assn., helping to reorganize that firm.

When the NBC network was created Nov. 15, 1926, Aylesworth was tapped to become its first prexy and instituted several major policies which are still followed by the web. From that time until he resigned in 1935 to be succeeded by Lennox H. Lohr, he was variously tagged the "czar of radio" and "high commissioner of the air." Upon his resignation to devote his full time to the RKO interests, he was named a vice-chairman of NBC.

Besides being prez and board chairman of RKO, he served in a similar dual capacity for RKO-Radio Pictures and Pathe News, as well as a director of Keith-Albee and the B. F. Keith Corp. until March 1, 1937, when he joined Scripps-Howard. He was also board chairman of Radio City Music Hall Corp. from 1934-45, and from 1941 to '45 was an exec consultant to the Coordinator of Inter-American Activities.

At his death, Aylesworth was chairman of the executive committee of Ellington & Co., ad agency, and served as an advisory consultant to Mrs. A. I. duPont (for the annual duPont radio awards) and to Cities Service, where he sparkplugged the long-tenured "Cities Service Bands of America" show on NBC. His wife, a son and daughter survive.

3. Because they were human and democratic, the men and women, boys and girls at the forks of the creek didn't feel that they were being patronized. This was a chatty crew we had with us. Anyone can talk to them and everybody did.

The banker who is president of the chamber of commerce in a town of 5,000 population talked politics with Chill Wills. The dean of a stage college was gallant to Una Merkel. John Agar met some of his wartime buddies. Barbara Ruick had a long talk with a man in Grand Junction who went to school in the third grade in Arizona with her mother, radio actress Lurene Tuttle.

Wherever they went they added respect to the admiration which they had already earned. They gave everyone a true picture of the picture industry and the people who work in it, people who are not really different from everyone else except that they have a specialized skill that is required for a specialized job.

"Movietime" can stand improvement, as what can't. But just as it stands, it has the right approach, uses the right people, sells pictures in the right way, wins friends and influences people. When it gets the support, financial and otherwise, of everyone in the industry, it will grow into the finest public relations program ever staged by any industry anywhere.

unified move of any kind might still be open to legal hassles.

Difficulty at present is that while large companies like Metro and 20th-Fox can afford to cut flow of pix to an exhibitor until he has paid up, smaller companies are in a different position and may well find the theatreowner turning around and filling product hole from other sources, which would have no hesitancy serving him.

Exhibitors' outstandings vary by company and territory. Period of from 20 to 60 days is considered normal for delay in forking over cash rentals. 20th-Fox, for instance, finds average outstandings in France at five weeks, in Italy, one week, and Germany, two weeks. While Fox relations with exhibs are normal, Columbia is having trouble in these territories. Fox, on other hand, is having difficulties in Brazil, where rentals may be outstanding six to eight weeks.

20th-Fox exec this week observed that Brazil exhibs like to stall on payments. "That's how they finance their business," he said. "They build up a real octopus against you."

American distribs are having no difficulties with exhibitors outstandings in England, India and Australia. British Kinematograph Renters Society takes poor view of exhibs owing large sums to distribs for long periods of time, and the guilty theatreman finds himself without product.

Spokesman at Universal differed with the Columbia view that the situation is becoming serious for the entire industry.

Scalping In Richmond

Richmond, Va., Sept. 30.

Walcott-Marciano fight telecast at the National not only played to a sellout in the 1,350-seat house, but the event brought about the first instance of ticket scalping locally. With all seats sold out at around 11:30 a.m., on a straight $3, unreserved basis, several speculators worked the crowd outside the theatre shortly before showtime. Theatre manager states that he knew of some instances in which $10 to $15 were paid. About one-third of the audience came in from out-of-town.

National had established outlets at the Granby and Norva Theatres in Norfolk, but had to stop sales there the day before the fight in order to take care of local purchasers. The telecast was handled exclusively by the National, a Fabian house, although the Byrd, belonging to the Neighborhood Theatre chain, also is equipped with big-screen TV facilities.

Indpls. Sellout

Indianapolis, Sept. 30.

First theatre network TV here got a smash sendoff when capacity audience of 3,200 paid $2.50 per head to see Walcott-Marciano fight at the Indiana. Manager Al Hendricks said about 4,000 would-be customers were turned away after last tickets were sold at 6 p.m. fight night.

All first-run houses reported biz up over preceding night (Monday) and same night (Tuesday) of preceding week, attributing boost to overflow from Indiana.

Toledo SRO

Toledo, Sept. 30.

The Rivoli reported a full house for the TV showing of the Marciano-Walcott bout, with advance sales heavy. For the Robinson-Maxim fight, first theatre TV here, the Rivoli was about two-thirds full. Admission for last week's bout was $3.

Dayton Turns Away 500

Dayton, Sept. 30.

More than 2,700 fans jammed RKO-Keith's for the Marciano-Walcott bout, with Goody Sable, manager, estimating at least 500 were turned away. Admission was $3 a head.

9G Omaha Gross

Omaha, Sept. 30.

Marciano-Walcott fight TV at Orpheum here was a sellout despite rain scare (top head in evening paper), Nixon speech and pickets.

Bill Miskell of Tri-States said gross was $9,000 for 3,000-seater, scaled at the national minimum of $3. Net is around $1,800. Advance sale, as in past TV fights, was slow, but crowds jammed b.o. after Nixon's speech the same night.

Police had little trouble moving the pickets, men carrying signs such as:

"Why pay three when you can see it free."

"If you pay now, you'll always pay."

Said Miskell: "Heck, I'd have let them in free. But the next time there'd have been a thousand show up."

Albany's Fake Tix

Albany, Sept. 30.

An unexpected potential loss in receipts—via counterfeit tickets—showed up for the Marciano-Walcott bout before a capacity audience, at $3.60, in the 1,500-seat Fabian Grand. Fortunately, Guy A. Graves, Fabian city manager in Schenectady, spotted five counterfeits there the previous day. He immediately announced that persons who had bought tickets for the closed-circuit presentation at any place other than Fabian theatres in Albany and Troy, and at Proctor's, Schenectady, "probably have counterfeits."

This statement, coupled with the news that Internal Revenue agents would be on hand at the Grand—because of the 20% tax the Federal Government stood to lose—and with a warning advertisement in the local Knickerbocker News, undoubtedly stopped a large-scale presentation of fake stubs at the Grand. Only two were picked up at the door, where five revenue agents were stationed with 10 Albany detectives and uniformed policemen. FBI agents were reported investigating the forged printing, which constitutes a felony under Federal law.

Schenectady is said to have been flooded with the non-genuines, sold at $2 apiece. Press, radio and TV news roundups broadcast the warning.

Series Coverage

age will duplicate those used in the 1951 Series.

With Gillette Safety Razor sponsoring at an estimated cost of $1,500,000 for radio and TV rights, as well as air time, Series will be carried on the more than 550 Mutual AM stations. Full complement of NBC-TV affiliates will air the video pickup, as well as the four TV stations affiliated with the Mutual web, including those in New York, Boston, Chicago and Los Angeles. With an estimated 18,000,000 video sets now spotted around the country, it's believed the Series could play to more than 54,000,000 viewers.

Top Sportscasters

Gillette and the Maxon agency, which handles the account, have lined up what is probably the top array of sportscasters ever to bring radio and TV audiences a play-by-play of the games. On TV, Mel Allen, who's covered the N.Y. Yankee games during the regular season; and Red Barber, who's handled the Dodger games, will split the play-by-play chores. For radio, the announcers include Al Helfer, who's called Mutual's "Game of the Day" this year; Jack Brickhouse, of Chi, who was on the TV end of last season's Series, and Bill Corum. Latter will do the color commentary before and after each game.

While the TV versions will go out on the NBC video outlets, the local station crews which handled the two flag-winning teams during the season will repeat for the Series. Thus, Jack Murphy of the N.Y. Daily News' WPIX will head a WPIX crew on games played at the Stadium, while Ralph Giffen of WOR-TV, Tom O'Neil's local N.Y. outlet, will call the shots with a WOR-TV crew.

Giffen will work with four cameras, one stationed behind home plate for the pitcher-batter-umpire cover shot; one behind first base, another behind third, and the fourth to be used for super-imposition shots. Giffen also has two Zoomar lenses available, for the zooming closeup shots to the outfield, plus a 40-inch Reflectar lens.

Murphy plans to use five cameras, which is one more than he used during the regular season. He'll have two behind the plate, one behind first base, another behind third, and the fifth camera for commercial spots, super-impositions and the super of the players' names each time they come to bat, a technique which he introduced this year. Murphy will also use two Zoomars, and will rely whenever possible on his "wipe" effect—the split-screen technique used to cover a base-runner and the batter simultaneously.

"All Because of Sally" (U) (2d wk). Slow $13,000. Last week, $18,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; 70-95)—"Caribbean" (Par) and "Last Train Bombay" (Col). Fair $12,000. Last week, "Don't Bother To Knock" (20th) and "Capt. Pirate" (Col) (2d wk), $10,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; 70-95)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB). Great $24,000. Last week, "Will Rogers" (WB) (2d wk), $7,000.

United Artists (UA) (1,900; 70-95)—"Quiet Man" (Rep). Big $17,000. Last week, "Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "You for Me" (M-G) $7,600.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; 70-95)—"Devil Makes Three" (M-G). Fair $8,000. Last week, "Merry Widow" (M-G) (4th wk), $4,000.

'Ivanhoe' Wham $25,000, Buff.; 'Fatima' Rich 18G

Buffalo, Sept. 30.

"Ivanhoe," with a slightly upped scale, is pacing the field here this week with smash takings at the Buffalo. "Miracle of Our Lady of Fatima" is actually making as strong a showing with a terrific take in the smaller Center Theatre. "Monkey Business" is good at Paramount.

Esimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loews) (3,000; 74-$1.20)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Great $25,000. Last week, "Full House" (20th) and "Confidence Girl" (UA), $10,000 at 40-70c scale.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 40-70)—'Monkey Business" (20th) and "Franchise Affair" (Indie). Good $13,000. Last week, "Just For You" (Par) and "Wild Stallion" (Mono) (2d wk), $8,000.

Center (Par) (2,100; 70-$1)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB). Terrific $18,000. Lats week, "Lure of Wilderness" (20th) and "Army Bound" (Mono) $7,500 at 40-70c scale.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 40-70—'Untamed Frontier" (U) and "Secret Flight" (Indie). Fair $8,000. Last week, "Assignment Paris" (Col) and "Last Train From Bombay" (Col), $9,000.

Century (20th Cent.) (3,000; 40-70)—"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and "Yukon Gold" (Indie). Big $13,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) (2d wk), $7,500.

PITTSBURGH

(3) again with "Assignment Paris" (Col). Last week, "Les Miserables" (20th), $7,500.

Penn (Loew's) (3,300; 85-$1.25)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Easily the biggest thing here in years. Should have no trouble in hitting a blockbusting $40,000. Stays on natch! Last week, "Devil Makes Three" (M-G), $9,000.

Squirrel Hill (WB) (900; 50-85)—"Lady Vanishes" (UA) (reissue) (2d wk). Nearly $2,000 on top of solid $3,000 opening week.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 50-85)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) (2d wk). Holdover being helped by Walcott-Marciano fight pix, on top of sell-out crowd for telecast of the fight. Should come close to $9,000, okay. Last week, "Pirate" hit nice $13,000.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 60-$1.25)—"Lady of Fatima" (WB) (3d wk). Holding up nicely at better than $9,500. Last week, sock $13,300. Still drawing religious groups.

MINNEAPOLIS

praise for this picture and highly favorable word-of-mouth. Nice $5,000. Last wek, "Lady Iron Mask" (20th) and "Tom Brown's Schooldays" (UA), $2,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,000; 50-76)—"Just for You" (Par). Good $10,000 for Bing Crosby starrer. Last week, "Quiet Man" (Rep), $9,000.

RKO-Orpheum (RKO (2,800; 40-76)—"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and Walcott-Marciano fight pix. Fine $11,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO), $8,000.

RKO-Pan (RKO) (1,600; 40-76)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) (m.o.) and fight films. Okay $4,500. Last week, "The Ring" (UA) and "Red Planet Mars" (UA), $4,200.

State (Par) (2,300; 50-76)—"Fearless Fagan" (M-G). Surrounded by array of comedy shorts and sold as all-fun show. Mild $5,000. Last week, "Caribbean" (Par), $6,000.

World (Mann) (85-$1.20)—"Full House" (20th) (2d wk). Tapering off substantially after fast start. Fair $2,500. Last week, $4,500.

'FAGAN' TAME $8,500, PROV.; 'PIRATE' OK 8G

Providence, Sept. 30

This is a slow week all-around at the boxoffice with nothing approaching even an average total. Even Walcott-Marciano fight pix are not helping too much at RKO Albee. Loew's State is the top grosser with "Fearless Fagan" while the Majestic is doing comparatively better with "Crimson Pirate."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 44-65)—"Fuller Brush Man" (Col) and "Fuller Brush Girl" (Col) (reissues) and fight pix. Slow $5,500. Last week, "Untamed Frontier" (U) and "Bonzo Goes to College" (U), neat $9,000.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 44-65)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Arctic Flight" (Mono). Oke $8,000. Last week, "Full House" (20th) and "Sally and Saint Anne" (U), good $9,000.

State (Loew's) (3,200; 44-65)—"Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "My Man and I" (M-G). Mild $8,500. Last week, "Merry Widow" (M-G) (2d wk), fair $9,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 44-65)—"Golden Hawk" (Col) and "Triple Creek" (Col). Opened Monday (29). Last week, "Son of Paleface" (Par), disappointing $6,500.

'For You' Big $15,000, Denver; 'Beacon' Ditto

Denver, Sept. 30.

"Just For You" shapes standout here this week with big total at the Denham, and holds. "Walk East on Beacon" looms fine at Orpheum as does "Les Miserables" at Paramount. "Island of Desire" is fair in two locations.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Wolfberg) (1,200; 50-85)—"Merry Widow" (M-G) (4th wk). Off to $3,000. Last week, good $7,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 50-85)—"Just for You" (Par). Big $15,000. Holds. Last week, "Son of Paleface" (Par) (3d wk), $7,000.

Denver (Fox) (2,525; 50-85)—"Dreamboat" (20th) and "Flame of Sacramento" (Rep), day-date with Esquire. Fair $12,000. Last week, "Affair Trinidad" (Col) and "Yukon Gold" (Mono), big $19,000.

Esquire (Fox) (742; 50-85)—"Dreamboat" (20th) and "Flame of Sacramento" (Rep). Fairish $2,500. Last week, "Affair Trinidad" (Col) and "Yukon Gold" (Mono). $4,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 50-85)—"Walk East Beacon" (Col) and "Last Train Bombay" (Col). Nice $15,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Pirate Submarine" (Lip) (2d wk), $10,000.

Paramount (Wolfberg) (2,200; 50-85)—"Les Miserables" (20th). Fine $12,000 or better. Last week, "Full House" (20th), $13,500.

Tabor (Fox) (1,967; 50-85)—"Island of Desire" (UA) and "Fargo" (Mono), day-date with Webber. Fair $6,000. Last week, "Rose Bowl Story" (Mono) and "Wagons West" (Mono), big $9,000.

Webber (Fox) (50-85)—"Island of Desire" (UA) and "Fargo" (Mono). Fair $3,000. Last week, "Rose Bowl Story" (Mono) and "Wagons West" (Mono), $4,000.

ST. LOUIS

500 in 4 days. Last week, "Quiet Man" (Rep), strong $18,000.

Loew's (Loew) (3,172; 65-$1.20)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Mighty $32,000. Last week, "High Noon" (UA) and "Without Warning" (UA) (2d wk), neat $12,000.

Missouri (F&M) (3,500; 60-75)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Models, Inc." (Indie) (m.o.s). Fair $10,000. Last week, "Big Sky" (RKO) and "Full House" (20th), mild $8,000.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000; 90)—"Tales of Hoffmann" (UA) (2d wk). Good $3,500 after $4,000 initial stanza.

'Ring' Accoladed

"The Ring," a fistic drama turned out by the King Bros. for United Artists release, last week nabbed a citation from the Helms Athletic Foundation for "combining excitement and sportsmanship to a degree rarely found in a motion picture."

Foundation, a non-profit organization devoted to the betterment of sports, accoladed a film for the first time in handing laurels to "The Ring."

Rogers-Evans Bring Top Mr. & Mrs. Menu to Rodeo Field With N.Y. Bow

By LEONARD TRAUBE

Appearance of Roy Rogers and Dale Evans at this year's "World's Championship Rodeo" in Madison Square Garden gives the New York arena something to crow about in the Mr. and Mrs. vein. They make up an undoubted lure in the tandem formation although the stag end of the deal naturally figures as socko b.o. in his own giddap groove.

Miss Evans shares billing with her spouse in the chute and corral proceedings which opened last Wednesday (24)—she being the first femme to rate such stellar attention in the 27-year history of the Garden roundup. Season's recent preems of Rogers' TV and radio shows on NBC with their attendant hoopla served as additional hypo for the cowpoke classic which returns him to the Garden after an absence of seven years.

In the interim to 1950 the star berth was occupied by Gene Autry, who preceded Rogers pre-World War II (Autry hitching up as a sergeant). Autry's differences with the Garden hierarchy for last year's show brought a new deal. Autry giving way to the Lone Ranger (and Tonto) who headlined the first 12 days, and orchester Vaughn Monroe and his troupe for the last 14 days. That this setup didn't pan out seems inherent in the return to the orthodox Rogers name for this year's 26-day romp bridging 43 performances.

Although Rogers & Co. come forth with a more traditional routine than the '51 layout, the large overhead for his participation is negatively reflected in a generally downbeat presentation of the other non-contest acts of the circus persuasion. The budget took a supplementary beating in that this year's purse for the six competitive events is a solid $100,800 (entry fees added) against last year's $75,600. The Garden is of course exploiting the upped boodle to the hilt although it actually stems from the fact that the cowboys' union held out for and won the larger prize money in a duel with the management. The pot gives equal strength of $18,400 each for five events (bareback bronc riding, calf roping, saddle bronc riding, steer wrestling, bull riding), and $8,400 for the wild horse race which returns after a hiatus to make a spectacular if helter-skelter closer.

Rogers was programmed third but presented pre-intermission, it being discovered that the earlier skedding would not square with the time needed to set up and dismantle the ring curb for his eight Palomino Liberty horses. The formations that Rogers ringmasters are standard but are filliped by the running description and light patter of announcer Pete Logan, who is an all-around click in this niche, with continuity and ad libs lifting the show. Lib horse exercises are usually self-explanatory as per circus style, but here they would constitute a near-dead spot since there is no razzle-dazzle either in the workouts or the harnessing, only the Rogers presence focussing the main interest.

Rogers' second and final appearance is in the last half, three spots away from the finish, at a late 10:30. This brings out his entire company with a delay on Miss Evans' initial entry upon the scene serving as a teaser. Group includes the topper's pic-TV-radio regulars in Pat Brady with his Nellybelle jeep and Miss Evans astride on Buttermilk before dismounting for her arena stint. Rogers is paired with his steed Trigger, but the N. Y. debut of his German shepherd dog Bullet was somewhat offish opening night due to the canine's distaste for the Garden's dazzling spotlights trained from the upper strata—a fact which Rogers covered with commendable candor to provide a light inning.

Completing the cast are the Whippoorwills (5), consisting of four down yondermen and a femme who, with and without Rogers, pursue an alfalfa aria route that, curiously, is broken up by the entire troupe's vocal of the spiritual, "Peace in the Valley," which seems strangely out of character with the show despite its lofty intent.

Rogers works Trigger in a dance and surounds his chore with plugs for his networks shows and sponsor (Post Cereals). Miss Evans does a couple of songs, one of them segueing from "East Side, West Side" into a clever lyric covering "big bad Broadway" vis-a-vis her N. Y. coming-out. She shows considerable personality and bounce. Pat Brady's twangy singing and interlarded comedy are strictly haystack, more appropriate for a moppet mob and then highly questionable. Bowoff is from the corn—but good—shelf, with Rogers and Miss Evans circling the arena on their horses to handshake the kids stampeding down to the loge rails. It's a rouser. Rogers was also in a spotlighted spatter shooting stint with two firing irons, but this one needs more practice.

Relieving the competitive stanzas are a series of acts in addition to the Rogers spots, the grand entry flash and the mounted quadrille with eight couples led by Everett E. Colborn, longtime managing director of the rodeo, with Carolyn Colborn alongside him. Opener is Ken Boen with standard Old Gray Mare comedics. Bud Carlell & Rose, with whips and boomerangs, is a tame affair that could be strengthened somewhat if the duo would rotate for better viewing. The top act is a youngster, Jay Sisler, with two Australian shepherd dogs in acro stuff and a hilarious horse-stealing vignette that wraps up. Sisler's batting average will rise as he develops in the presentation department but the lad's okay as is.

On the glamor puss side, this year's Ranch Girls are real lookers who are good on the exploitation. They are Shirley Robinson (Arizona), Diana Destine Sandefer (New Mexico), Jo Ann Coyle (Oklahoma), Doneva Nell Shepard (Oregon), and Mary Frances James (Texas).

Traditional in the arena is the work of the clowns, George Mills, Bobby Clark and Billy Keen, spotted for the bull riding affray to take up the slack as the contestants are tossed off their wild Brahmas. A new-fangled weighted barrel with small wheels is inserted for the comedy element as the bulls charge the objective, encasing one of the buffoons, along with the traditional free-swinging dummy.

Although the kitty is way up thataway, there's a surprising paucity of big name top hands at this outing. (Some are now judges such as Carl Dossey, Eddie Curtis, Everett Bowman.) That, plus the fact that the stock was fresh from Texas, produced an unusual number of missouts in the competitions although even the experienced buckaroos bite the dust regularly. Missing in the exhibit portions are such hardies as the trick and fancy roping and ditto riding.

James Cimmeron leads the cowboy band snappily. Putting in his 23rd year as resident manager is Frank Moore, with another veteran, Fred Alvord, handling the arena secretary's duties. Show is scaled to $6 and runs to Oct. 19, with matinees on Wednesdays, Fridays, weekends and Oct. 13.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Sept. 26.

Georgia Gibbs, Ross Wyse, Jr., & June Mann, Schaller Bros. (2), Roy Douglas & Eddie, Little Willie, Jimmie Cameron, Archie Stone House Orch; "Beautiful but Broke" (Col).

On her first Toronto appearance, Georgia Gibbs is packing them into the Casino, particularly on that "Kiss of Fire" disclick. Dainty femme, with lots of pleasant personality, plus well-mannered patter, is expert in her mood changes ranging from her bouncy, finger-snapping opener, "I'm Gonna Live," her balladeering of "So Madly in Love," the shout-style "Birth of the Blues" and "Ballin' the Jack" to her smash "Kiss of Fire" for a rousing begoff.

Surrounding 55-minute bill is swift on pace and diversity, with Little Willie (Royce Gaines-El), probably the only Mohammedan tap-dancer in the biz, opening for agile and energetic terping, with neat heel and toe effects that earned enthusiastic customer response. Lad used to be with the Nat (King) Cole group but is now doing a single that whams over on personality and clever routines.

Ross Wyse, Jr., and June Mann, tall blonde and half-pint male, are also over big on their mutual mayhem and plenty of blue biz in his teaching her the fundamentals of adagio dancing, but act is funny and also rated a begoff; ditto the Schaller Brothers for their comedy trampoline act, and Roy Douglas for his clever ventro work, notably his double-voice telephone conversation and singing effects with the dummy. Jimmy Cameron, as m.c., is his usual amiable self and expertly skippers the bill, with all acts getting neat support from Archie Stone's pit band.

Music Hall, N. Y.

Leon Leonidoff's "Fall Fancies" with Will Mahoney (2), Ted & Flo Vallett, Nanci Crompton, Patricia Rayney, Glee Club, Rockettes, Corps de Ballet, Radio City Symphony Orch directed by Raymond Paige; "Because You're Mine" (M-G), reviewed in VARIETY Sept. 3, '52.

With the November payoff for the Presidential race in the offing, Leon Leonidoff has pitched part of the current Music Hall stage show to the election campaign for a topical and clever opening production scene. Spotted among the other usual Radio City extravaganzas, Will Mahoney and the juggling team of Ted & Flo Vallett hit solidly in their specialty turns.

Mahoney, vet vaude star who's recently been active in TV, is a natural for the Music Hall stage with his offbeat hoofology. Mahoney executes two numbers, a gloved boxing routine in which he and his femme partner wear bells on their feet and Mahoney's standard xylophone dancing bit, for excellent results.

The Valletts also click with their baton-juggling stint which is built into the Presidential campaign number. This production is a quasi-realistic takeoff on fall electioneering with huge posters of Eisenhower and Stevenson paraded on stage by two rooting sections. There's a public service pitch in the windup admonition to the audience to vote, via one of the Music Hall's tricky electrical setups.

Opening orchestral - glee club number has a religioso flavor, featuring cellist Joseph Tekula in "Kol Nidre," the Hebrew chant in the Yom Kippur services. It's done in perfect taste.

The Rockettes, in a "school days" production, once again demonstrate their flawless precision in a snappy hoofing routine which inevitably winds up with the whole line kicking in unison.

The ballet finale, "Symphony of the Birds," starts slowly in a fussy setting but builds into an eye-filling spectacle when danseuse Nanci Crompton comes in for her fancy pirouetting and entrechats.

Earle, Philly

Philadelphia, Sept. 27.

Duke Ellington & Orch (15); Manton Moreland & Bud Harris, Roll and Taps, Marian Caruso, Jimmy Grissom and Betty Roche; "Rose Bowl Story" (Mono).

Duke Ellington and his orchestar are back to reopen the Earle for the new season, and it is a strong selection. Although there are some new faces in the ensemble and a lot of new sounds, it is essentially an Ellington show, with the Duke dominating the proceedings musically and by his personality. Ellington emcees the show, bringing on the acts with florid wordage and getting them off with his repeated assurances to the customers "they love you ma-aadly."

In the musical sense the new Ellington aggregation veers toward the blast school, which is immediately noticeable with their opener "The Hawk Talks", and the solo-filled "VIPs' Boogie" and "Jam With Sam," a brace of numbers during which the Duke introduces virtually everyone in his brass and reed sections.

In solo bits Juan Tizol on trombone sets the melodic line for "Caravan," a number he wrote with the Duke, and Louis Bellson on drums makes for a slambang finale with the spotted role in a performance of his own composition "Skin Deep." For a chatty interlude the Duke does a street-corner version of Little Red Riding Hood called "Pretty and the Wolf," with the incidental backing of three men. The Duke also sat down to the piano and reminisced over song hits and standards he has written over the years.

Singers with the band are Johnny Grissom, a lad with a fine voice who was held down to one number, the plaintive "Come On Home"; and the very capable Betty Roche, who delivered "Take the A Train" and a chatty piece called "Please Somebody, Send That Lady's Husband Back to Me."

A last minute addition to the bill is Marian Caruso, local warbler familiar to air audiences and patrons at the Garden Terrace's ice show, where she sang with the hotel band. Miss Caruso clicked recently on records with her Devon waxing of "My Favorite Song" and the Earle booking was one of the rewards of the platter hit. With the backing of the Ellington band she sang "Sometimes I'm Happy" and "Favorite Song" agreeably enough, but needs more stage savvy for big house. Her routine was halved due to the sudden inclusion of the Duke's pianistics.

Two other acts break up the orchestral and vocal fare—Roll and Taps, whose name virtually describes the turn and whose artistic rhythmic clogging stops the show, and the team of Bud Harris and Manton Moreland, whose amusing bickering is always well received.

Palace, N. Y.

4 Skating Macks, Derby Wilson, Fisher & Marks, Mie & Matti, Guy Raymond, Herb & Betty Warner, Jay Marshall, Tex & Helen Williams; "Night Without Sleep" (20th), reviewed in current issue of VARIETY.

Current bill has several saving graces towards the close of the layout, namely in comedian-magico Jay Marshall and the refreshing young singing team of Herb & Betty Warner. Otherwise, it's pretty spotty.

The openers are the Skating Macks (4), three femmes and a guy who go through the standard roller stunts on the circular mat, but okay for the course.

Derby Wilson is doing tapstering in the second spot, mostly imitations of Bill Bailey doing imitations of Bill Robinson. The colored hoofer sports a derby the way Robinson used to, and he's doing the old Robinson routines, with proper credit, of course. But it doesn't diminish the fact that he's employing the tried-and-true in lieu of original material.

Mie & Matti are male-femme balancers who go over neatly.

Fisher & Marks are a male comedy duo reviewed more extensively under New Acts. They're third, followed by the standard Guy Raymond, eccentric comedian-hoofer, whose material is pretty tired, though the closing rubber-legs terps manage to inject some life into the act.

Herb & Betty Warner are fifth, and they're reviewed under New Acts, along with the closing Tex & Helen Williams, lariat-tossing and whip-cracking turn.

Jay Marshall is the bill's top act, and he deserves the next-to-closing spot. Marshall has a droll, insouciant humor surrounded by the comedy magic that wins laughs all the way. He tops it off with his ventro bit with the rabbit fashioned out of his gloved fist.

Jo Lombardi plays the show from the pit.

Seville, Montreal

Montreal, Sept. 27.

Ink Spots with Bill Kenny, Bette McLaurin, Stan Early, Ray Royce, Winters Sisters (2), Len Howard orch; "Traveling Saleswoman."

Under the new management of Theatre Amusements of Toronto and with Archie Laurie in the front office, the Seville continues to gather the best vauders for it's five-a-dayers and returns are near capacity every week with the scale at a dollar.

Current layout offers the Ink Spots for their second try in this house and as usual Bill Kenny is the featured vocalist. Team has changed personnel from last showing and newcomers work into act in okay fashion whenever they get a chance. Motivating factor as always with this group is Kenny who takes the lead in practically everything offered, some times to the detriment of overall vocalizing. His trick tenor, a natural in such a combo but overemphasis tends to be repetitious. Such items as "Sunnyside of the Street" (introing their new rhythm singer Ernie Brown) garners a solid reception. "Into Each Day" is a clicko Kenny ballad and the inevitable "If I Didn't Care" wows the payees for a cinch begoff.

Surrounding showcase for the Inkspots effort is just fair. Juggler Ray Royce is too busy injecting comedy gimmicks into his act to get the full effect of his Indian club routines, bike riding, etc. Too many misses and double-takes fail to be funny after awhile. The Winter Sisters who take the opening slot are attractive and their acro antics are hardly slick enough to get a house in the mood. It's not until they windup with a full-twisting somersault that they get the attention they rate.

Bette McLaurin is a tiny chirper with a hefty set of pipes that are put to work effectively on such songs as "All of Me" and "Lover" for plaudits. Lack of general showmanship is evident, however.

Stan Early as emcee and impressionist does a quick six minutes before the Inkspots to moderate mitting and Len Howard in the pit keeps show music up to par.

Newt.

Roxy, N. Y.

Mary Small, Al Bernie, Arnold Shoda, Romayne & Brent, Roxyettes, Robert Bouche Orch; "Somebody Loves Me" (Par), reviewed in VARIETY Aug. 20, '52.

This is the initial show under the regime of Arthur Knorr who stepped into the top production spot after Sammy Rauch's exit. No changes in format from previous stage presentations, however, have been introduced and the current layout is a good standard blend of variety and spectacle, including the ice sequences.

Vet songstress Mary Small headlines with sock impact. She's a dynamic stylist with considerable stage savvy and she can deliver in any genre, from novelty to ballad, with top selling power. For this stand, her songalog opens with "Learn To Lose," a cute item, and segues to the hits, "Wish You Were Here" and "You Belong To Me." She is also effective in a clever Billy Daniels takeoff on 'By Bye Baby."

Since the pic, "Somebody Loves Me," is a romantic saga of a husband and wife show biz team (Blossom Seeley & Benny Fields), Miss Small has a legitimate opening to work over the tunes of her husband, songwriter Vic Mizzy, who accomps her on piano in the pit. This sector of her turn may be too long, containing choruses of over half a dozen Mizzy items (most of them hits), but it's a good sentimental bit and Miss Small carries it off neatly.

Comedy spot is capably filled by Al Bernie. He's another vet performer with a smart line of patter and a surefire delivery. Bernie showcases a variety of dialects for his gags and hits with a nifty change of pace between the broad and pointed snappers. His carbon of Johnnie Ray on "Cry" gets him off to potent mitting.

Roxy's ice show features Arnold Shoda, whose ballet bladestering is tops in the business. Shoda, who plays regularly in this house, registers strongly with his dramatic style and fast pirouetting. Terry Brent & Phil Romayne, who also have been here before, are another topflight ice turn and hit with their adagio acrobatics. Ice line of four gals and four men adds good visual support. The Roxyettes are spotted in an okay opening production number where they demonstrate some eye-filling precision steps.

On opening day (24) of this show, the real-life protagonists of the pic, Miss Seeley and Fields, guested for a couple of tunes, Fields delivering "There's No Business Like Show Business" and Miss Seeley chanting "Somebody Loves Me." It was a nostalgic bit that scored with special impact because of their biopic on the screen. Milton Berle and George Jessel brought the pair on stage.

Robert Bouche, who replaced Paul Ash as maestro of the house, batons the show in approved style.

Herm.

Apollo, N. Y.

Ravens (5), Bill Bailey, Betty Carter, Earles (2), Johnny Hudgins, Duke Hampton Orch (12); "Desert Hawk" (U).

The current Apollo shindig amply meets the requirements of the house. The layout headed by Bill Bailey and the Ravens produces some moments in which sections of the crowds start yelling "Go, Go, Go," a sure sign that all is going well.

Bill Bailey, who has been preaching in a church in that Harlem neighborhood, has returned to the stage. Before Bailey (who's doubling at the Club 500 downtown) took to the cloth, he had been regarded as a logical successor to the late Bill Robinson. He still does an impression of the great dancer that has fidelity and sincerity. It's his best number. His gab is entertaining and he hits a top mitt.

The Ravens, four boys and an accompanist, are a top song turn. Their Mercury platters have done well for them. Their tunes are neatly designed with the bass supplying the backbone of this quartet. Setup calls for two mikes, one devoted exclusively to the lad with the basso. There's a strong vocal blend with this getup. Their entries encompass a wide variety and they hit it off well with "Beguine," a medley of standards and "Lookin' For My Baby."

Johnny Hudgins, also doubling from the Club 500, is a vet dancing comic. He works in blackface in a variety of slides. His topper is going into the audience and doing a bit of jitterbuging with a few pewholders. However, Hud-

FOUR STAR PLAYHOUSE

Director: Robert Florey
Writer: Larry Marcus
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8:30 p.m.
SINGER SEWING MACHINE CO.
CBS-TV, from N. Y.
(Young & Rubicam)

The Singer Sewing Machine Co. makes its videbut along the pix route with every expectation of success, if the preem entry is indicative of the series. Surrounding the Don Sharpe package are the trimmings and credits that ride the clicko route. First off, Charles Boyer lends his deft thesping to the initialer, aside from a production nod to the film and stage star. The French actor will make five appearances in original teleplays, alternating with Joel McCrea, Dick Powell and one other still to be pacted. "Four Star Playhouse" is on a skip-week basis with the "Amos 'n' Andy" show.

In presenting "My Wife Geraldine" as the first of the skein, attention was paid to the supporting cast, including such reliables as Una Merkel and veteran scene-stealer Porter Hall. While the story is not earth-shaking by any means, the Larry Marcus script is preciously nursed for continuous interest. Built on a romantic perch, it treats of Boyer, down on his luck, dreaming up a wife in order to land a job with employer Hall, who is consumed with the virtues of domestic life.

The complications that set in for Boyer, with Miss Merkel as manager of the bungalow colony in which he lives, form the basis for a series of nicely wrought situations in which the light comedy values receive neat accenting. That Boyer finally decides for continuing the marital myth as serving his mental setup better than actuality, is a good snapper and least telegraphed in the mostly flashback plot.

Hooked up with the series are some top Hollywood technicians including exec producer Felix Jackson ("Destry Rides Again," "100 Men and a Girl") and director Robert Florey of the Coast lots. Ralph Berger is the set disigner. Filming is at RKO-Pathe studios, with Official Films releasing.

Commercials are on film and, like the show itself, easy to take.

Red Skelton has switched from live to film this season, but what he should do is switch his format and, perhaps, his stable of writers. Comic, who had one of the brighter comedy shows on TV during his preem season last year, flubbed badly for his first time out in the 1952-53 campaign Sunday night (28). Show's fizzle could be attributed to the poor film quality, with a resultant lack of spontaneity, but even more important was the fact that the format and writing were off key. Skelton got along with this kind of stuff for the entire 1951-52 season, but this year definitely requires a change.

His lineup wasn't changed one iota from that of last year. Viewers, as a result, could call each turn, from his opening monolog, complete with stories of his son and daughter, through the overly-produced and "integrated" plug for Tide and reliance on his now-stock characters, including the punchy pug who's forever hearing bells go off and the perennial souse, Willy Lump-Lump. While these characters stood Skelton in good stead for years in radio, TV's intimacy makes them no longer welcome. In this case, familiarity definitely breeds contempt and it's time for Skelton and his scripters to bring forth some new material.

Film itself was fuzzy and displayed poor lighting. In addition, the editing was spotty, with the camera cuts too often jarring. And, while the studio laughter was yockful as ever, the way the switch to film knocked off Skelton's spontaneity—which, actually, is one of the comic's chief claims to fame—left little for some viewers even to chuckle about. Skelton himself, along with his crew, obviously tried hard and the skits were about on a par with those of last season, but the show failed to come off.

Under a deal set at the end of last season with Freeman Keyes and the Russel M. Seeds package outfit, Skelton's show is being aired this season at 7 p.m. It's a good Sunday night slot for him that should lead to top 10 ratings—but only if he can come up with the bright, sparkling type of comedy expected of him.

Pepsi-Cola, which had Faye Emerson's "Wonderful Town" on CBS-TV last season, is following the trend towards vidpix this year with a new series of quarter-hour dramas aired twice weekly on NBC-TV. Initial stanza, screened last night (Tues.), suffered from a weak story but production, camera work and other technical credits indicated the series will be among the better on TV this season. Thus, with good yarns in the future, "Short Short Drama" should win and hold a sizable audience.

Preem script was an original penned by Max Ehrlich, "Air Mail, Special Delivery," dealing with a young boy who wrote a letter to God to help save his mother, whom doctors had pronounced fatally ill. Postmaster Edgar Stehli, to whom he gave the letter for mailing, did not want to disillusion him so put the letter away in a drawer. Some time later, the lad rushed happily into the postoffice to tell Stehli his mother was getting better. Stehli then looked in the drawer but found that the letter had mysteriously disappeared.

Yarn could have been extremely maudlin but Ehrlich managed to steer away from the tear-jerking aspects. In so doing, however, he somehow lost most of the story's kick so that it had little punch when the "miracle" was revealed at the climax. Small cast did acceptable jobs. Ruth Woods, as Pepsi's "hostess" on the show, got the story rolling okay but that business of introing it by having people come to visit her in her apartment was artificial and did not come off. Miss Woods does an effective blurbing job on the Pepsi plugs.

NBC has been able to clear only eight stations for Pepsi in this Tuesday and Thursday evening slot, but the show will hit at least 14 other NBC outlets at other times.

Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald, inventors of the "Mr. & Mrs." radio format, have branched out on the celluloid circuit with this quarter-hour hausfrau lure being spot-booked around the country in 15 markets with top-bracket retailers lifting the tab. It's a hep invasion by the easy-talking pair into the service show field that has gone over so well with the femme daytime TV setsiders.

Opening canter (25) on the filmed WGN-TV ride, backed by Carson-Pirie-Scott, major Loop retailer, indicated that the format is grooved along the familiar pattern, with the duo tossing household hints and homemaking shortcuts at the gals. But the Fitzgeralds bring with them some plus ingredients that boost the package out of the mine-run category.

Besides their adroit patter that keeps the session moving along sprightly, they bring in a touch of hubby and wife byplay to lend some humor to a basically straight-from-the-shoulder format. In fact, their best segment was when Ed got himself all tangled up with a ball of string, while Pegeen was showing how packages could be tied more tightly by first soaking the twine. In short, it's a simple housewife helper, but with class.

Aside from the fact that the team will draw the ladies on their own merits, the local client gets generous treatment. Plus the opening and closing store idents, there were three internal blurbs and a generalized pitch by Mrs. F on the values of personal shopping service.

Film quality was only adequate.

15 Mins.; Thurs., 8:15 p.m.
CIO POLITICAL ACTION COMM.
WABD, N.Y.

Apparently with no axe to grind as to either candidate, the Political Action Committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations has prepared a 15-minute film containing nationwide "man-in-the-street" interviews with citizens of all ages and occupations who are asked: "Whom will you vote for, Eisenhower or Stevenson?" Tagged "People's Political Poll," it started on WABD, N.Y., Thursday (25).

For the opening installment poll conductor Bob Post quizzed people in Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Memphis and Salt Lake City. Reasons for the public's individual choices ranged from a Salt Lake City salesman's: "Stevenson is more liberal .. I like the way he appears on radio and TV" to a Philadelphia housewife's explanation: "I'm for Eisenhower because the cost of living is too high."

Throughout the interviews Post is completely impartial and competently handles his chores. Camerawork of Arthur Florman and sound are of good quality. PAC notes that its objective in presenting the program until Election Day is merely to stimulate the average citizen to get out and vote for the man of his choice. That's a commendable public service motive. WABD preem, incidentally, makes New York the 35th city to view the film series.

Here's a new attempt at low-cost vidpic programming which should pay off handsomely for all concerned. It's a quarter-hour one-man drama series, in which Hal Burdick does a standout job of maintaining audience interest with his yarn-spinning. With only one person in the cast and with a single basic set, the cost savings are obvious, and the fact that the show holds viewers should make it a good buy for spot purchasers around the country.

On the stanza caught (26), Burdick displayed a surefire system of telling a story. Cast as the night editor of an unidentified newspaper, he utilizes a story in his current edition as the peg on which to hang his yarn. Then, merely sitting at his desk or walking around the room, he weaves the tale, changing the pitch of his voice or using various dialects to differentiate among characters. Camera cuts are cued to speeches of the different roles he essays, which aids in the story-telling. On the show caught, he handed viewers an O'henryish tale about a con man out to cop the life savings of an old farm couple.

Show is currently being sponsored in five markets by the Regional Kaiser-Frazer dealers. Filmed and animated plugs are good.

$4,000,000 OLD PIX BONANZA

Most of 'Em on Film

Of the major television shows premiering for the season either last week or this week, majority of them are on film.

These include, among others, the Red Skelton show, which bowed Sunday (21); "Four Star Playhouse," which preemed last Thursday; "Cavalcade of America," which airs tonight (Wed.); "Our Miss Brooks," preeming Friday (3); the new "Ford Theatre," bowing in tomorrow (2); "Mr. and Mrs. North," hitting the vidpix circuit for the first time Friday (3); "Ozzie and Harriet" starts a vidpix series Friday (3) and the Eddie Mayehoff "Doc Corkle" comedy starts Sunday (5). "Death Valley Days" also preems within the next week on a spot basis in 63 markets.

Burns & Allen, until now a live presentation, goes film starting Oct. 9.

Flock of Vidpix Stanzas Set For WJZ-TV as Fall Billings Perk

In a major reprogramming surge, new WJZ-TV (N. Y.) program chief Paul Mowry will launch 11 stanzas on the ABC outlet in the next fortnight. Five of the airers are commercial.

Last night (Tues.) at 10:30-11 p.m. the station preemed "Dog Show of Champions," featuring Mrs. Sherman Hoyt, dog fancier, with fancier dogs and breeders. Tonight (Wed.) the new "March of Time" vidseries starts, backed by Miller beer. On Friday (3) "National Pro Football Highlights," another film series capsulizing the previous week's pro games, will start, moving into its permanent Thursday 10 p.m. berth on Oct. 9.

A weekly five-minute weather show, handled by Dorian St. George, starts for Bovril, via Hilton & Riggio, in the 7:10 spot Friday (3). On Sunday (5) the "Captain Midnight" vidpix will start in the 6-6:30 period, backed by Wander Co. (Ovaltine) through Grant.

On Monday (6) Johnny Olsen's "Homemaker's Jamboree" will take the 3:30-4 p.m. strip cross-the-board. Another new strip is a 10-minute news stanza with Taylor Grant, "First Edition," using Telenews clips and photos at 5:50 p.m.

Hartz Mountain Products will back "Pet Party" on WJZ-TV Saturdays at 5:45-6 p.m., starting Oct. 11, via Kenneth Rader agency.

Mowry, who replaced Hal Hough (now with WCBS-TV), is also shuffling the morning lineup. "Second Cup of Coffee," starring ex-film actor Eric Rhodes and Red Kramer, will be beamed in the 11-11:15 a.m. strip "Kitchen Capers," now in the 11:45-12:30 stretch, goes to 11:15 a.m. to 12 noon. "Midday Playhouse," now aired at 12:30 p.m., moves up to the noon hour.

Advance Patterns has also bought "Sew for Yourself," which will be beamed Tuesdays at 1-1:30 p.m., starting Oct. 14. Agency is Rand.

Cleve. Theatres, TV Bury Hatchet

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

NBC's television outlet WNBK, and two downtown theatres, RKO Palace and Telemagemont's Hipp, have buried the feuding medium hatchet for a series of promotional "back-scratching" ventures to hypo both visual and boxoffice interests.

Inspired by WNBK, the promotions mark the first major local TV-theatre wedding, and it is expected to pave the way for possible interchange of live-talent stage-and-television productions.

Hipp was the first to move into the major promotion venture with a tie-in on "High Noon." Under the agreement, the theatre, through newspaper ads and trailers, urged its audiences to participate in WNBK's Gary Cooper picture identification contest for series of prizes. WNBK, in return, sparked theatre plugs with week-long cuffo blurbs.

For the Palace, WNBK joined in an "Assignment-Paris" contest with across-the-board Mildred Funnell and Gloria Brown's afternoon "Hobby Shop" paying heavy attention to contest and picture. Like

Rasumny Pacted For Telepix Series Abroad

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Actor Mikhail Rasumny has been tapped to go to Europe for a new historical vidfilm series, titled "The Great Loves," which will be filmed in London and Italy for U.S. sponsorship. Victor Pahlen and Edgar G. Ulmer, producer and director of "The Pirates of Capri," current United Artists release in which Rasumny has a featured role, will produce, and have plans for a 39-week series.

Rasumny is under option to CBS-TV for a comedy-mystery vidfilm series titled "Tangiers," on which a pilot film was recently lensed in N.Y. Option expires Jan. 1 and the actor's European deal depends on whether CBS gets a sponsor for "Tangiers" and so goes ahead with the show.

New MOT Vidpic Series Gets 45 Market Spread

Tele edition of "March of Time," which preems within the next few days on 53 stations (including Montreal and Toronto) as a syndicated series, will be sponsored in 45 markets by Miller Hi-Life beer, via the Mathisson agency.

Miller had backed "March of Time Through the Years," which had used old MOT reels, in Milwaukee. Later, when MOT turned out "Crusade in the Pacific," it picked up that vidpix series for 23 markets.

New "MOT" series differs from the radio version in that it will have a completely factual, documentary approach, with no "reenacted" scenes, and will devote each half hour to one subject, according to MOT manager Arthur Murphy. Each feature will be given over to a country in the news, a personality, an issue or problem. Opening stanza, however, will be atypical, in that it will be a report on the state of the nation in

YOUNG'S YEN FOR PIX MARKED BY NEW PACT

CBS-TV's new contract with Alan Young underlines the comic's preference for working on film. Pact specifies that Young's projected show is to be on celluloid, except if a sponsor wants a live show Until July 1, 1953, the web will have the right to ask Young to do a fortnightly live stanza if the bankroller holds out for a non-film format.

Young flew into Gotham last week with his attorney, Sam Zagon, and set the pact, which put him on the CBS payroll. Terms give Young outright ownership of subsequent runs of the vidpix. A pilot film will be made shortly for the comic, whose last stint for CBS-TV was backed by Esso.

MPTV'S '52 BIZ 33% OVER 1951

Despite the fact that no recent batch of U. S.-made feature pix has been made available for video distribution, the Motion Pictures for Television outfit, prexied by Matty Fox, is moving into the home stretch for 1952 with a banner $4,000,000 in gross billings in sight. This represents a nearly 33% increase over the approximate $3,000,000 taken in by the firm during '51, when the same pix were already circling the video channels for the second and third year.

With the fact established that video viewers in practically all the nation's markets are feature pix-happy, as witness the spiraling ratings for the oldies, MPTV sees a continuing bonanza in the 1930-40-vintaged product for at least the next two years, by which time they will have reached the saturation grind stage. (MPTV is represented with its oldies in all but two or three of the TV markets in America.)

MPTV, which has practically exhausted its whole library of availabilities, with only a few of the indie-made productions still waiting to be taken off the shelf, is practically reconciled to the fact that there won't be any releases of major studio product for TV for another 18 months at least. This is based on the firm's exhaustive analysis and sizing up of the situation. Similarly, there is little likelihood of any of the "pay-as-you-see" feature pix presentations getting through the FCC pearly gates and on the video channels for at least another year, MPTV feels, despite recurring pressures put on the Government agency for an early approval of one or another of the pay devices.

Not generally known is that MPTV came close to grabbing off all the RKO product of the last 20 years in its tieup with a syndicate that was matching the bid of the successful Ralph Stolkin group for takeover of the Howard Hughes stock. Had the deal gone through, MPTV would have had clear sailing for years in the feature-pix-for-TV sweepstakes.

Wolfson to Vidpix

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Another picture writer-director jumped the fence to television when P. J. "Pinky" Wolfson signed to produce the Joan Davis series. "I Love Joan." He replaces Dick Mack, who resigned after completing the first four half-hour films.

NBC Setting Sights on Sandburg, Beerbohm, Churchill TV 'Profiles'

NBC has wrapped up the second in the ambitious series of half-hour public service TV presentations, which initially bowed some months back with the projection of the Bertrand Russell filmed installment on his 80th birthday. No. 2 in the series, designed to stimulate the imagination of American audiences, features Robert Frost. This one, filmed at the poet's home in Vermont, was produced for NBC-TV by Richard deRochemont, with a script by Bela Kornitzer, author of "American Fathers and Sons." Like a Russell film, the Frost program will get a Sunday afternoon slot, though no date has been set as yet.

Despite the current, widespread retrenchments around NBC, some additional coin has been earmarked for the project (originally incorporated into the now-abandoned "Operations Frontal Lobes") being supervised by news-special events chief Davidson Taylor, Jr. As result, Taylor has now set his sights on a cycle of world-acclaimed personalities that may translate it into TV's first distinguished "profile" series.

Carl Sandburg has already given his okay for an early half-hour "sitting" before the TV cameras to expound on his philosophy and beliefs. Frank Lloyd Wright, the architect has also agreed to do one.

Taylor is still confident of getting Prime Minister Winston Churchill for one of the series, despite a previous rejection. Meanwhile, Gioia Marconi, daughter of the late inventor, who is on Taylor's staff at NBC-TV, is currently in Italy exploring the possibilities of incorporating into the series such personalities as Max Beerbohm and Bernard Berenson (both now living in retirement in Italy).

In addition to network showcasing, NBC-TV is also planning for non-theatrical release and other subsidiary use of the filmed series.

The Bertrand Russell chapter won unanimous critical plaudits when originally shown.

Aladdin TV's 126G Suit Claims Pact Breached

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

Breach-of-contract suit for $126,000 was filed by Aladdin Television Productions against Lou Snader and the Snader Telescription organizations in Superior Court. Action charges the defendants with failure to go through with an agreement involving the distribution of 13 "Kid Magic" telefilms. Plaintiff declared the deal would have netted $126,000.

Named in the suit, in addition to Snader, are Alexander Bisno, Reuben Kaufman, Snader Productions, Inc., Snader Telescriptions Corp., and Snader Telescription Sales, Inc.

Pacific Borax's $2,750,000 Top Coin for Vidpic

The Pacific Borax-sponsored "Death Valley Days," the TV version of the radio show which ran for approximately 20 years, moves into the top spot for coin expended on a single 30-minute once-a-week vidpic spot showcase. All told it is costing the client approximately $2,750,000 in time and talent costs on a 52-week basis for the 30-minute spread in practically every TV market in the country.

Show, which officially preems on film this week, has a 63-market spot sale identification, also believed to represent a new high. Because of the radio show's track record, TV stations were anxious to grab off the billings in anticipation of a long-running stanza, and in return allocating for the most part choice time slots.

Pacific Borax is spending $360,000 on time costs alone for the initial 13-week cycle. In addition each stanza carries a budget in excess of $25,000.

McCann-Erickson is the agency on the account.

Schlitz, CBS-TV Set New Series

Schlitz beer is setting a new deal for its "Playhouse of Stars" on CBS-TV for the fall, with pact expected to be signed later this week. New production outfit will be used, with budget upped considerably and more big names starred in the half-hour vidpic dramas.

Current series, with Irene Dunne as narrator, comprises a group of pix turned out by Edward Lewis. This was summer fare and the new group, which will start next month, will have a more expensive layout.

CARMEL MYERS PREPS VIDPIX, RADIO SHOWS

Former silent screen star Carmel Myers, who recently set plans for her own indie package outfit, has three shows now underway, headed by "Cradle of Stars," a vidfilm series. Pilot was lensed last week, with Gregory Ratoff directing and George Stoetzel as cameraman. Show, scripted by Robert St. Audrey, is a talent showcasing, localled in Miss Myers' Park Avenue, N.Y., home.

Former actress, who's the wife of Paramount distribution chief A. W. Schwalberg, also purchased rights recently to a collection of the late Mark Hellinger's stories and has waxed a half-hour radio series titled "Mark Hellinger Tales." Edward Arnold stars as narrator, with Sherman Marks directing. Third show planned by Miss Myers is a quarter-hour radio show co-starring Blossom Seeley and Benny Fields (Mr. and Mrs.).

22,000,000 Phonos of All Types Used 186,000,000 Disks In '51

By J. B. ELLIOTT

(V. P., RCA Victor Consumer Products)

"Music You Want When You Want It" is widely known as an RCA Victor slogan—but it is more than that. It is the explanation of the phonograph industry's past success and the assurance of its future.

In the half-century since Eldridge R. Johnson created the industry by "selling" the American public on the talking machine as a home entertainment instrument, this industry has been beset by three major economic depressions, two world wars, and the rise of three giant competing entertainment media—films, radio and television.

To those who know the romantic history of the business, its record of repeated triumphs over competition and economic crisis is assurance enough that you can't keep a good business down.

This is not only a good business, but one whose product has become an integral part of the nation's cultural life and entertainment. The phonograph has achieved this status by providing for more than 50 years of service offered by no other entertainment media—a service which gives the consumer an unlimited choice of musical selections, artists, and listening time. It is the only medium which provides the music lover with the music he wants when he wants it.

Equally important, the medium continues to offer more and more value for the consumer dollar. Continuous research has produced phonographs and records to a new high level of technical development and at the same time lower cost to the consumer. Artistically the medium offered the nation's music lovers a greater variety of musical selections and talent than ever before. Popular recognition of this increasing value is reflected by the tremendous postwar growth of the medium.

Today, the record and instrument business is bigger and more profitable to dealers than ever before, in its long history. Much of its increasing prosperity stems from the influence of supposedly competing entertainment media. The movies, the radio, and television, reaching tremendous national audiences, have served to create a demand for all types of musical selections and the talents of numerous singers, instrumentalists, and orchestral organizations. This demand can be served only by phonograph records.

Sales Figures

Those who understand the business know these facts. For those who don't, sales figures tell the same story.

Last year, for example, the nation's record dealers sold more than 186,000,000 records of all types. The vast amount of recorded music this figure represents is increased by the inclusion of numerous 33⅓ rpm disks, some of which are equivalent to approximately five of the 45 or 78 rpm types.

The increase in home phonograph sales is equally revealing. Available figures disclose that the number of record-playing instruments in American homes has nearly tripled since the end of the war. As of Jan. 1, 1952, there were nearly 22,000,000 phonographs of all types in use. In 1946, there were only 8,000,000.

These figures are more eloquent than any word description of the sales strength of the phonograph and record industry. They show that the record and instrument business today is a bigger business than it ever was, even in the days when it was virtually the only home entertainment medium available to the public.

Today, the general public is more music-conscious than ever before, thanks in large measure to the tremendous promotion given new and old musical selections by pix, radio, and TV. Then, too, dramatic technical advances in the recording art and reproducing equipment have focused national attention on the phonograph.

We at RCA Victor know—and sales figures prove the point—that the introduction of the 45 rpm system in 1949 served as a stimulant to the record and phonograph business in general. Public interest in this new development generally increased store traffic and led to sales of both the new system and conventional types of phonographs and records.

The 45 rpm system has been commercially available only since April, 1949. By the beginning of 1952, however, there were in use in American homes more than 8,000,000 instruments equipped to play the new 45 rpm playing instruments as there were phonographs in use at the beginning of the postwar period.

Today, the music we want when we want it is enhanced by greater fidelity, convenience, and economy than ever before. These are the advantages which assure the future of the phonograph industry.

'Preacher and Bear'

British customers have always taken to American humor better than Yanks cotton to the John Bull brand.

In early years of this century, Columbia and Edison records of U. S. origin were also sold in Britain, supplementing others made in the British Isles for home trade. The Gramophone Co. also imported many popular Victor recordings.

One of these was Arthur Collins' Victor waxing of "The Preacher and the Bear," which came out in 1905. Collins waxed the song for all companies, and it appears to rate as the all-time, oldtime pop record. Majority of elderly persons, recalling early experiences with the phonograph, will mention "Preacher and the Bear" as the platter (or cylinder) they remember most vividly.

At any rate, Gramophone thought it worth importing. But, fearful that the British public wouldn't understand the blackface dialect and would be puzzled by the humor embodied in the story of the Negro preacher who was treed by a grizzly after going hunting on Sunday, each record was accompanied by an explanatory leaflet—so the purchaser would know when to laugh!

Coin Machine Biz Grows Up

By JAMES J. LENNON

(Coin Operators Sales Manager)

The coin machine industry now stands on the threshold of what may well be the most profitable period in its history. Several outstanding developments have hypoed the progress and national acceptance of the jukeboxes since the inception of the automatic coin machine in 1934. One of the latest has been the introduction of the 100-play machine. Equally important is the introduction of the new speed 45 rpm into these machines which offers exceptionally strong service advantages. These advantages inevitably make the 45's the coin machine system of the near future.

As an economical factor in servicing of the jukeboxes, the 45's represent one of the most important strides in the industry and one which has a permanent basic value. Such attractions as the compactness and simplicity of the "45" equipment, the non-breakable feature of the 45 rpm disks, and the overall advantages of the small, wafer-thin records in storing, handling and shipping, have a proven value, particularly adaptable to the coin ops' needs.

The 550,000 jukeboxes throughout the country use an average of 35 records per machine and it takes 19,250,000 records to fill these machines only once. With an estimated total 50,000,000 records used since their inception, coin machines represent the greatest single disk market in the country. Their continuously growing adaptation to the 45 rpm speed is vitally important both to the promotion of 45's and to the future of the coin ops' business.

The new model machines, with their 100 and more disk choices are a far cry from the first Edison "coin machine" back in 1880 when listeners first put their money in a slot to hear screeching, parrot-like noises through a speaking tube. The business-like operation and efficiency which now characterize the industry also is a far cry from the early haphazard merchandising methods once typical of the industry. Closer attention now is paid to frequent servicing of the coin machines, with thorough, systematic checkups assuring the customers of the latest hits and the coin ops the maximum of plays. The formation of the Coin Operators' Association, and of the national association, Music Operators of America, Inc., publication of trade magazines, a strong basic economic structure, now have made the coin machines a growing "small business" with the operators typical "small business men."

For All Tastes

Today the top jukebox hits represent all tastes. They range from country-music favorites through the current Latin-American vogue with "Delicado," "Kiss of Fire" and "Blue Tango," to the show tune, "Wish You Were Here," and the sweetly sentimental "Auf Wiederseh'n Sweetheart." The jukeboxes occasionally have been instrumental in the making of new artists and also in keeping the established artists of calibre in the foreground.

The unfreezing order for 2,000 more television stations by the Government is also expected to herald a new era of expansion for the industry. The new TV medium will hypo a new interest in records. The big TV audiences will become increasingly aware of the new songs and new artists. Stimulated by seeing them on television, the public will want to hear these new artists again and again on records. Similar to the new popularity of radio in 1934, which brought about a great revival of interest in popular music, now the only way the public can hear their new favorites as much as they want, will be to play them again and again on phonographs at home or jukeboxes in public.

With the new television era, the introduction of the 45's to coin ops and the new 100-selection machines, the industry is in a new period of expansion with far-reaching results.

Old A&R Men Never Lie, They Just Fake Away

It's a great song but I have no one to do it with.

I can't use it, but it would be great for Como or Nat Cole.

Don't show me 10 songs—which one is your plug song?

Tear up all the other copies, I must have an exclusive on this (six songs at six companies)

I'll give you a great record with a new artist we just signed—it'll make the song and the artist.

Now all you have to do is order 3,000 vinies and take 10 ads.

We made a great record for you, but I don't think we can get it out 'til 1967.

If this isn't a smash record, I'm going out of the business.

Would you be willing to go far half the expense of the date—for three trombones . . . for two trumpets . . . for one French horn?

I did all I could but he just didn't go for the song.

We're sending out 5,000 disk-jockey records, but why don't you buy some?

The record is already over half a million and it's just starting (statement time shows the record went about 5,000.)

Had to take your song out, just got a flash on a "sleeper" breaking in Manitoba.

"Why don't you show me a class ballad?" (when you have a real cornball).

"Why don't you show me a cornball tune?" (When you have a class ballad).

$500,000,000 Music Biz

"What hath God wrought" was Samuel Finley Breese Morse's historic exclamation when he invented the telephone—i.e. before Don Ameche did it for Zanuck. Less dramatic and probably unprophetic was Thomas Alva Edison's recitative, "Mary had a little lamb," when the first phonograph recording was made in 1877. Morse's aphorism might well be applied to the record business today.

American know-how and economic savvy have moved the "screechbox" into what is estimated to be at least a $200,000,000 gross annual business. There is no question that, by the nature of things, with recorded music in all its forms, and sparking the many contiguous aspects attendant thereto—ballrooms, theatres, niteries, Hollywood filmusicals, ASCAP, BMI, et cetera—that the overall music reaches a $500,000,000 annual mark.

This is the Diamond Jubilee of Edison's invention and the Golden Anniversary of RCA Victor's half-century of progress, but this special number of VARIETY—a show biz first in many respects—reflects a mass entertainment industry that exceeds such time-honored boxoffice institutions as sports and the theatre in grossing power, and is right up there with Hollywood and the networks as a volume business. It may be said that Records and Phonographs now constitute a cradle and fountainhead for almost every aspect of Show Biz.

The universality of music is such that, in its modern under-$1 "production," it can be packaged around the world. Maybe the future may even see that package reduced to something as space-saving as tape-recording, or whatever else it is that perhaps General Sarnoff hints at in his article. But it is also true, as RCA prexy Frank M. Folsom so aptly puts it, now that the industry has charted its course and has achieved such signal results in raising the American cultural standard, the industry's prime obligation is to maintain standard and preserve quality.

Call it this merchandising skill, obligation to your public, hallmark of quality, call it anything—or also let's just call it showmanship.

"It's in the groove" is the best answer to everything.

Shakespeare said it with his nifty about "all the world's a stage." Today all the world's a big show, and salesmanship is only another word for showmanship.

It was show-wise for the industry to dramatize the record industry with the now historic "battle of the speeds." What it did was to upset the status quo and revitalize an industry whose status was too static. It needed a hypo. The hassle about 78s or 45s or 33s did it. It put the business before the public with a resonance not to be found in any echo chamber. What Berliner did to improve on Edison; and Eldridge R. Johnson, in the pioneer Victor Talking Machine Co. days, did to improve on Emile Berliner, Sarnoff-Folsom did to hypo the modern record business.

In the same manner of progression, a new showmanship has come into the industry. Just as Johnson gave Victor stature with his daring signaturing of Caruso (and later the greats of the longhair circuit), and thus took the home phonograph out of the novelty and "toy" category into an instrument of classical interpretation, so have the artistic production brains of the industry advanced in recent years. Paralleling that has been the development of merchandising and exploitation values. A phonograph record today is a carefully planned production. As much thinking goes into that 2½-3 minutes of waxed musical "production" as in a larger project because the end results reach an audience and have an effect on a cross-section perhaps far in excess of a book, play or film.'

Just as the to-do about the "speeds," so, too, has the recent concept of echo chambers, freak sound effects, vigorous vocal pyrotechnics and wierd "new sounds" have impact on the paying public. Just as TV's inroad on Hollywood has resulted in a challenge to produce improved quality film product, all the intra- and outer-trade kidding about whistles, cracking of whips, cracking of knuckles, clacking of bones, handclappings, whiplash noises and echo chambers dramatized anew the wide scope for new sound values on vinylite and wax.

For the first time, as a matter of trade journalism, there is reflected herein, through the 75-year celebration of Edison's invention and the 50th milestone in Victor annals, a comprehensive saga of a new industry that has come a long way. Focused around Victor's trademark, none the less the same holds for every diskery in the business. The statistics are staggering; the information revealing. The ratio of the new (almost) 6,000,000 all-speed players against the 16,000,000 "old school" 78s is vital, and particularly so when it is footnoted that the 6,000,000 new players do 80% of all the records sold nowadays. These are the most active machines. The orthodox yesteryear 78 rpm equipments are only the casual buyers of "must want" platters. The new speeds create the store traffic. And it's because of that store traffic—once you get 'em in they'll buy something else also—that every diskery needs that current pop hit, or else. It's these hot 'faves that spark the rest of the catalog and give accent to this or that dealer. The public, more show-wise than ever before, no longer buys the brand—it buys the interpretation. Labels from the Ozarks and left field wind up just as often on the bestsellers as the majors. The 550,000 jukeboxes in the U. S. don't care for the label as much as for the unique styling of this or that platter.

The disk jockey looms potently and importantly. He can "lay on" an artist and send him from $75 to $7,500 and $10,000 a week, as in the case of Johnnie Ray—and also can destroy a personality just as fast by laying off.

The development and the legends of the biz have been generously traced in this issue both by RCA and this paper's staffers, and notably by diskologist Jim Walsh whose rich fund of phono lore is generously spotted throughout this edition. As with most enterprises, not always do the pioneers enjoy the fullest fruits of their labors. Opportunists come along and frequently improve on the labor pains of the early adventurers. Victor has been one company which has both pioneered and prospered with the progression of time. The phonograph and record business is rich enough for many to flourish. The intrinsic popular price of the basic commodity is sufficiently appealing to place no embargo on any company. There is no ceiling on talent—and there is no ceiling on 1,000,000-copy bestsellers. Fortunately the disk biz has had a generous portion of these of late. Abel.

There's Nothing More Permanent Than Change

The Constantly Improved Electronic Recording Techniques Fully Attest to That

From Caruso to Toscanini

By ALAN KAYES
(Commercial Manager, Red Seal Records)

Few books for diskophiles offer data which highlights the development of the recording art as effectively as a complete set of RCA Victor catalogs. Side by side they embrace a period of approximately 50 years of recording activity. Any one volume, chosen at random, is a virtual Who's Who in Music for the period it represents.

Alan Kayes

Equally fascinating is the recording data in RCA Victor's Camden headquarters, where card index and recording sheets serve as ready reference guides to thousands of masters stored in the company's vaults.

The catalogs, the recording data ~~and the original masters are the~~ triangular base of the disk pyramid built by Eldrigde R. Johnson, founder of the Victor Talking Machine Co., and its successor, RCA Victor. What gives the pyramid its permanence and solid strength are the artists—in Johnson's time as today, the box ofice titans of the music world.

Johnson believed that only great musical talent could transform the phonograph record and player from a toy to the greatest medium of home entertainment this country had known up to that time. Caruso was willing to lead the parade of great artists who proved the Johnson theory. Caruso accepted outright payment for his first recording efforts for Victor in 1903. Thereafter he expressed a preference for royalties His business acumen was as sound as his artistic judgment.

The artist and his estate have received more than $3,500,000 in royalties to date. In 1909 Caruos drew up his own contract with Victor—a sketch of himself and a handwritten commitment to record only for the Victor company for life. In the same year Johnson was head of a multimillion rapidly expanding business, built on his conviction that the phonograph record could be a great medium of home entertainment if the boxoffice names of the musical world could be persuaded to make records.

Symbol of Artistry

Through Caruso, Johnson achieved his objective in one quick move. Thereafter the Victor Red Seal label became identified in the public mind with great names and superb artistry. Caruso's colleagues at the Metropolitan Opera were soon singing into acoustic horns in a small studio in Carnegie Hall. John McCormack made his first American records, quickly followed by instrumental virtuosi—Elman, Kreisler and Zimbalist, Rachmaninoff, Paderewski, Rosenthal and Lhevinne. The Carnegie Hall debut of 16-year-old Jascha Heifetz was followed shortly thereafter by his debut on Red Seal records. In 1916, the year before Heifetz's American debut, the Boston Symphony made its first Victor records with Karl Muck on the podium. In 1921 Toscanini, no stranger to American operatic and symphony audiences, but reportedly averse to mechanical music, made his first records for Victor. Like many of his colleagues, he has never recorded for any other phonograph label.

Within a decade thereafter the RCA Victor Red Seal roster had become the Blue Book of world musical talent that it has remained ever since. A group portrait in oil, used for national magazine advertising in the mid-'30s showed, among others, pianists Vladimir Horowitz, Jose Itrubi, Artur Rubinstein, Rachmaninoff and Paderewski. The violinsts included Elman, Heifetz, Kreisler, Menuhin and Zimbalist. Among the conductors were Koussevitzky, Stokowski and Toscanini. Opera stars included Flagstad, Tibbett, John Charles Thomas, Gladys Swarthout and a number of equally famous Metropolitan Opera colleagues. Show business says beware the fickle public. But the record business is unquestionably a facet of show business and sales of classical records reveal that the public is remarkably consistent and loyal in its buying habits. Artists who were top sellers on disks one, two or three decades ago continue to dominate in today's market.

The unique artistry of a Caruso, who led the parade 50 years ago, or the preeminence of an octogenarian Toscanini, who heads the parade today after more than 30 years of disk making, are adequate proof without laboring the point.

For 50 years and more, from Caruso to Toscanini, the public has remained loyal to a label which has symbolized the world's greatest artist performing the music you want when you want it. That's a hard combination to beat, fickle public or no.

Couldn't Equal Victor Trademark

One thing that no other platter-maker ever has been able to do is find a trademark with the appeal of "Nipper," the familiar Victor dog listening to the hand-cranked machine with the little brass horn.

At least one other firm tried the animal approach. The Lyraphone Co., makers of Lyric records around 1918-20, showed a white cat sitting on a record, with the slogan, "Never scratches." The Zonophone Co., controlled by Victor, for several years used a chubby baby boy listening to a Zonophone machine, with a broad smile on his face.

Columbia's trademark was a musical note, with the wording, "Note the notes." Edison at one time used a picture of an old couple listening to a cylinder machine (the old gent had his hand cupped to his ears to hear better), but the trademark was a photo of Thomas A. Edison.

Perhaps the most successful approach to Victor's dog was the Pathe red rooster, still familiar in the movies.

By Brig. General DAVID SARNOFF
(Chairman of the Board of RCA)

With the advent of a new invention the question naturally arises, What is its future? It is axiomatic throughout the history of invention that a new instrument survives as long as it can perform a service that no other instrument can do as well or as inexpensively. Also, inventions must keep pace with progress through improvements and be able to meet new competition.

Gen. David Sarnoff

There are many illustrations of this observation—the horse and buggy and the automobile; the cable and wireless; radio broadcasting and television; and, of course, radio and the phonograph.

In the 1920s it was argued that people would not go to a movie that would make a lot of noise and bellow through an amplifier and disturb the slumber of those who enjoyed the silent movies. That, they said, was a preposterous idea! The ~~very virtue of the silent picture, they contended, was its~~ silence! And then—in 1927—came Warner Bros. with the "Jazz Singer" and Al Jolson. Almost over night a new industry was born; the silent actor became vocal, the silent picture was given an electronic tongue. Result? A new and greater motion picture industry.

When the "radio music box" appeared in 1920 and the waves of radio began to wash upon the beach of entertainment, some believed that the phonograph would be washed up on the sands of time as a derelict. But there were those who thought differently. They looked upon radio as a fad and a passing fancy. They argued that radio could never compete with the phonograph in tonal quality or artistry. I remember when the Victor Talking Machine Co.—and those who founded it did a great job in their day—could not understand how people would sit at home and listen to music that someone else selected for them to hear. They contended that music on the air would be infested with static; they rated the "radio music box" and radio broadcasting as a mere toy. Result? Not many years passed before RCA acquired the Victor Talking Machine Co.; the little terrier "listening to His Master's Voice" changed its master, and a greater phonograph industry was built.

Radio electronized the phonograph and greatly revived its popularity and the business. Although the Victor Talking Machine Co. passed into radio hands, more phonograph records are made and sold today than ever before. And the phonograph, through its magic association with electronics, has kept pace with progress. It has successfully met the challenges of radio and television. The instrument itself is not only improved, but electronics has revolutionized the techniques of recording so that there is no comparison between a record of the 1925 vintage and those of 1952.

Revitalized Masters

In its association with radio and electronics the phonograph has been imbued with the modern spirit. Today, it bears no resemblance in appearance or performance to the hand-wound instruments that once reproduced, through large tin horns, such voices of distinction as Caruso, McCormack, Gluck, Chaliapin and many others. Electronics has revitalized these famous voices and has re-recorded them for the "Treasury of Immortal Performances." No symphony orchestra presents too great a challenge to modern recording, as evidenced by the magnificent music recorded by maestro Arturo Toscanini directing the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Today the phonograph has more than one speed—the turntables revolves at 78, 33⅓ and 45 rpm. Nevertheless, in 1949, when the "45" introduced the quickest record-changer ever devised, featuring small unbreakable disks, the cry went up in some quarters that the public, as well as the industry, were being confused. It was apparent that there were still some within the industry who had not learned the lessons of the past. They resisted change. They would cling to the old—the 78.

Yet this development of the "45" represented "the greatest advance in 50 years of recorded music." It set a new standard of musical enjoyment in the phonograph field. Up to now approximately 175,000,000 "45" disks have been produced by the phonograph industry as a whole. New "EP"—or "Extended Play" "45" records—recently introduced by RCA Victor, play up to eight minutes to a side or a total of 16 minutes for each disk. They are the same size and operate on the same turntables at the same speed as standard 45-rpm records.

The phonograph is by no means restricted to home entertainment or to the popular role it plays in radio through disk jockeys and broadcast concerts. Along with electronic recording it links the present and the future with posterity by recording historic voices and messages. For example, President Roosevelt's "Day of Infamy" address to Congress asking for a declaration of war upon Japan; Prime Minister Churchill's wartime messages to the Commonwealth; and long to be remembered is King Edward VIII's abdication, all of which were recorded as they were broadcast. Had the phonograph been available in Lincoln's day his delivery of his Gettysburg speech would have made an historic disk; also Washington's Farewell to his troops as well as all Presidential inaugural addresses, in the voices of the Presidents, would have been preserved for all time.

Today the usefulness of the phonograph both as an instrument for the home and in portable form provides convincing evidence of a promising future that will be much greater than its past. But those in whose hands its destiny rests must be alert to new developments in science that will continually improve it as a musical instrument and as a service to the public.

Because of its alliance with science, the phonograph will change just as radio and television designs change from time to time And as long as the phonograph can perform a distinctive service that no other instrument provides, i.e., reproduce "Music You Want When You Want It," it will continue to thrive.

Fully aware of the potentialities and promises of electronics, it is safe to assume that the phonograph of 25 years hence will be an entirely different machine as compared with the finest instruments of today. New styles of instruments with new types of records will make music truer and truer to life as scientists and artists work together to provide the public with the best that human ingenuity can achieve.

Disks Most Directly Upped America's Cultural Tastes; Now Must Preserve Quality

By FRANK M. FOLSOM
(President, Radio Corp. of America)

With the completion of 75 years of phonograph history, all of us concerned with records should consider three vital questions: where we are; how we got there; where we're going.

Frank M. Folsom

One thing is clear—the industry has enjoyed a healthy growth, with records now the mainspring of the entire music business.

There are nearly 22,000,000 record players in American homes, and more are going into homes every day. Records have become the backbone of radio programs. They provide entertainment, instruction and education for children and adults alike. Recordings of every type, in every language, are available throughout the world.

Many of the artists now featured on radio and television shows got their start through records. Personalities realize the importance of records in building top show names.

The record business did not always enjoy such an important status, however. We might have very little to celebrate on this anniversary if, at the turn of the century, some changes had not been made in the small machine which was in use at that time.

Those changes resulted in the introduction of quality. Records had been more noise and scratch than music. The artists who performed on them were, for the most part, mediocre and unknown. People who bought them did so more from curiosity than to enjoy good music.

Greater quality technically, through Emile Berliner's and Elridge R. Johnson's early patents, and artistically, as represented by the signing of Enrico Caruso, was the keystone on which the whole new home entertainment field was built. Steady improvements in that main ingredient have kept the industry alive and growing.

More recently, records have played their part in the building of a vast appetite for serious music in America. For exampie, during the past 10 days more people have been going to concerts than ever before. The public demand for artists' personal appearances has increased tremendously. During the last decade the number of symphony orchestras in the United States has nearly doubled. All these are indications that America is reaching cultural maturity.

This great growth of interest in music, while offering an encouraging new market for records, at the time presents the record industry with its greatest challenge. Concerts, movies, radio, television and records are providing a musical education for more and more people, with the result that there is a demand for more and better records.

More Exacting Tastes

People who have grown to know and love music have developed exacting tastes. They don't want just any music because much of the appeal of music lies in the perfection of its performance. Music lovers know what to expect in the execution of an aria or a concerto or a symphony. Those who attend a concert performance by a great orchestra and conductor cannot be expected to accept anything less in a phonograph recording of that same music.

Artistically, the position of RCA Victor has never been challenged. Since Caruso first sang into the recording horn 50 years ago, it has always been true that "the world's greatest artists are on Victor records." The names of Toscanini and Horowitz and Heifetz and all the other musical leaders are as much a part of Victor as the trademark "His Master's Voice."

Recorded music is a unique combination of science and art. An outstanding artistic performance, whether in the popular or classical field, must go hand in hand with outstanding technical production in order to achieve perfection in recorded music.

The coming of the new speeds four years ago brought about a revolution in the industry. Far from confusing and frightening the buying public, as many prophesied, the new speeds provided the necessary technical advancements to spark a whole new interest in records as a medium of home entertainment. Something better was offered and people wanted it.

With the enthusiasm now being shown for more and better record merchandise, it would be impossible to foresee anything but continued growth for the industry.

But in our eagerness to sell that market, let us not forget that quality has been and must always be the main ingredient in our product.

No Plugs For The Opposition

'Victrola' Gets the Works But No Qualms About Some Pretty Frank Commercials on Platters

By J. W. JEFFERSON

Decades ago, the record industry was a cutthroat business with everybody trying to knife the opposition. Nowadays the Record Industry Association of America is working not only to solve trade problems, such as heavy taxation and what to do about all these different speeds, but also to establish uniformity in recording techniques and give industry gilt-edged public relations.

This brotherly love must give a laugh to the few oldtimers still buzzing around the business. In the old days the different companies did everything in their considerable power to make sure the opposition didn't get free publicity. That went double for blurbs on platters.

Back in 1909, George Whiting, Irving Berlin and Ted Snyder tossed up a hit, "My Wife's Gone to the Country (Hurrah! Hurrah!)" Third stanza tells of how "Mr. Brown" was so happy at his wife's having high-tailed to the hinterlands that he made a record proclaiming his joy. Every evening thereafter "the neighbors heard the same old tune on Brownie's gramophone"

Forty odd years ago Edison and Columbia made cylinder phonographs on which home recording could be done. but Victor's disk apparatus lacked home recording feature. So the Columbia and Edison records included that third verse. but Victor didn't. The recording artists, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, skipped the reference to Mr. Brown (no doubt under orders), thus giving Victor a short platter.

Getting Around 'Victrola'

But more often than not, it was other companies who suppressed Victor references. When the Victrola was introduced in 1906 as the first talking machine with an internal amplifying system, instead of a big external morning glory horn, it became the standard of comparison. Housewives who liked elegant furniture considered it as much of an improvement over the big-horn "talker" as an inside bathroom was over an outside Chic Sale. The trade name became so well known that millions of citizens, thinking "Victrola" more swanky than "phonograph" or "talking machine," applied the name to any sort of sound reproducing device, regardless of who made it, and thus caused Victor mingled pride and anguish.

Victor got a big musical plug in 1914 when Grant Clarke and Maurice Abrahams wrote "They Start the Victrola (And Go Dancing Around the Floor)." Opus cashed in on then current craze for terping at home to canned music. Victor had its most popular comedian, Billy Murray, record the number. But did Edison and Columbia touch it? No! Murray had a contract making him exclusive to Victor for disks and to Edison for cylinders. It's likely Edison officials gave him some dirty looks for recording that Victrola song.

In 1918 the late Louis J. Winsch made a Pathe record of a probably written-to-order ditty, "At Home With My Pathephone." It was not recorded by any other company. Nor did Columbia's rival disturb its monopoly of "The Columbia Phonograph Company March."

'Uncle Josh Buys a Victroly'

Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh" talking specialties about the joskins, who lived in the New England hamlet of "Punkin Center," were among the biggest sellers in record history. Usually, Stewart would make each of his skits for all the companies, but when he thought up "Uncle Josh Buys a Victrola" in 1919, it found no takers except Victor. And when another specialist in red-brush humor, Charles Ross Taggart, came through with "Uncle Zed Buys a Graphophone" he had no chance of recording it for anybody other than Columbia, whose instruments were known as "graphophones" and "grafanolas." (Oddly enough, while the pseudo-cultured made a generic use of "Victrola," the average illiterate or semi-literate American called every kind of reproducing device a "graphophone." Those who knew what they were talking about preferred "phonograph." "Victrola" never caught on in Great Britain, where a disk instrument has always been a "gramophone."

More Victrola Substitutions

In 1918 Harry DeCosta wrote "That Soothing Serenade," with the line, "Now my Victrola plays all day that melody through and through." Henry Burr sang it for Victor, but nearly every other company said, "No, thanks." Burr did record the song for Pathe under his real name of Harry McClaskey, but a substitute word was found for "Victrola."

Ballard Macdonald and Nat Vincent wrote "My Old New Jersey Home" for the 1921 production of "The Rose Girl." When Murray sang it for Victor he retained "on the windmill there's a big Victrola shown." But Jack Norworth, pacted exclusively to Pathe, changed it to "and the windmill represents a Pathephone."

P. G. Wodehouse and Jerome Kern came through with "Nesting Time in Flatbush" as one of the numbers in the 1917 musicomedy, "Oh, Boy!" The second chorus on the Victor said, "The neighbors play Victrolas there each night till after three." On Edison it became, "The neighbors play 'Poor Butterfly'."

The MacDowell Sisters made an Edison disk of Marion Sunshine and Henry Marshall's "Baby Sister Blues." What to do about "Ma says, 'Stay home and play your Victrola'?" They changed it to "Ma says, 'Stay home and play your Edisonola"—which was ludicrous since Thomas A. Edison, Inc., always referred to its instrument as "the New Edison" and poked fun at machines with names ending in -ola. The Duncan Sisters recorded the same tune for Victor and, of course, said "Victrola."

Goodbye, Amb'rola!

In 1926, Billy Jones, tenor of the Happiness Boys duo, sang for Edison a German dialect song, "Schultz Is Back Again With His Boom-Boom-Boom." The second verse began, "It's goodbye, my Victrola, and farewell, radio." Jones got by with changing Victrola to "Amb'rola." That put him as close as the rhythm would permit to "Amberola," name of the Edison cylinder machine which had become almost obsolete.

One freelance. a really slick performer was Billy Williams. The Australian comedian recorded for every company in England before his death in 1915, and was one of three Billy Williamses to become popular on records. There was a singer of "coon songs" by that name in the '90s, and, of course, there is the present-day Negro vocalist. "The Man in the Velvet Suit" was probably the most popular recording artist during his lifetime that the British Empire has known. Often he wrote his own songs. One he called "Let's Have a Song Upon the Phonograph" when he made it for Edison. Afterwards, "phonograph" became "graphophone," "gramophone" or "zonophone," depending on the company he was singing for.

Slipping in the Blurbs

Hucksters of 1952 may be surprised that incidental advertising used to be sneaked into platters and "rollers." In 1916 Edison made "Christmas Morning With the Kiddies," a "descriptive specialty" depicting youngsters trying out their toys. After a few performances on toy instruments, "Mama" says: "Now let's hear Daddy's gift to us—a wonderful New Edison Diamond Disk phonograph!" Thereupon you hear a New Edison playing a snatch of "Joy to the World." And 10 years later, when Edison brought out a vertical-cut record playing 20 minutes to a side, Al Campbell and Jack Kaufman gave it a plug on their waxing of "Why Did Dr. Jekyll-Hyde?" by pretending they were at a show with a 40-minute intermission. "That," Jack said, "will just give us time to go home and play that new 40-minute record of Thomas Edison's."

There were even frankly sponsored advertising records in the '90s. The same Al Campbell once recalled that he made cylinders around 1896 for Ike Norcross, a pioneer New York phonograph man, which began with a spoken announcement to this effect:

"Good morning. Have you had your Quaker Oats? Then you will enjoy hearing Mr. A. C. Campbell sing 'The School Playground'."

Penchant for Clowning

No other opera singer has had the same perennial appeal to the public imagination as Enrico Caruso, now dead more than 31 years. True, sales of the tenor's Victor waxings slowed to a trickle a few years ago but they came back strong last year after release of "Great Caruso" flicker starring Mario Lanza

Most people know Caruso was quite a comic and frequently upset the gravity of his Met associates by mugging during supposedly tragic scenes. But few know that the singer was an admirer of such comedians as Harry Lauder and Billy Murray. N. Y. Daily Mirror editor Jack Lait, who knew him well, says Caruso was particularly fond of pop tunes, particularly of sob ballad variety, and his rendition of such things as 'The Curse of an Aching Heart' was something to remember always. Moreover, tenor took attitude that the pop songs he liked were superior musically to most operatic arias he sang.

One source says tenor relished close-harmony effects of American and Peerless Quartets and other recording ensembles, and that after a rugged session at the Met, he, Antonio Scotti and some of their opera cronies would gather around a piano and harmonize on such ditties as "I'm Alabama Bound" (not the later "Alabamy Bound") and "Waitin' for the Robert E. Lee." Caruso's plattering of "Over There" did well during World War 1.

On one occasion at least Caruso sang bass. During a production of "La Boheme," Andrea de Segurola's voice gave out, and Caruso, turning back to audience, substituted. For the fun of it, Caruso recorded the bass solo, but it wasn't issued until New York classical disk jock, Wally Butterworth, got permission to put it on market about four years ago.

Caruso's $3,500,000 Royalties All-Time Victor Topper

Enrico Caruso—31 years after his death—still rates as one of RCA Victor's top bestselling artists.

Nearly 1,000,000 Caruso records have been sold since the introduction last year of RCA Victor's first "Treasury of Immortal Performances," and have since doubled that total.

The total royalties earned by Caruso's records, both during his lifetime and since his death, represent the largest single royalty figure accrued by any artist in RCA Victor's history. The total, $3,500,000, covers the year [illegible] through November, 1951, and is split almost evenly between the period in which he was alive and the 30 years since his death.

No other artist in RCA Victor's history has continued to remain so popular over such a long period of time, or has had such a sharp increase in popularity in one year—that year the 30th since his death.

From the fall of 1903, when he made his first recordings in the U. S., until his death in 1921, Caruso recorded exclusively for Victor. He received $4,000 for the first 10 records he made under the Victor label, and $10,000 for the next 10.

Prior to 1903, he had done some recordings for the Gramophone Co. of London in Milan, the Zonophone Co., and the Anglo-Italian Commerce Co. of Genoa. However, years later, upon being asked to write his autobiography, Caruso replied: "My Victor records shall be my biography."

While living, Caruso earned $2,000,000 in record royalties; since his death more than $1,500,000 has been paid into his estate by RCA Victor.

The history of the phonograph industry is closely linked with Caruso's career. Ever since he first put his golden voice on wax in 1903, giving the infant phonograph industry the prestige it so badly needed, all the world's great musical performances have been recorded.

Last year, RCA Victor re-released some of the works of former standout artists in albums called a "Treasury of Immortal Performances." They included more of Caruso's records than any other artist. Public reaction to the albums was overwhelming. Of the Caruso records alone, nearly 1,000,000 have been sold. This figure puts him easily among the top popular favorites of today or any day.

As a result of the extraordinary sales of the Caruso recordings in the "First Treasury," RCA Victor's "Second Treasury" featured a complete album of "Caruso In Opera and Song."

Of Temperamental Disk Artists And Even More So Canary Birds

In 1907, records were used for the first time in a political campaign. William Jennings Bryan and President William H. Taft expressed their political views on wax. Record stores used such advertising as Taft's "Go In and Hear Mr. Bryan's Answer to My Speech, and Hear My Other Arguments on the Issues of the Campaign" on behalf of each party. This was the early forerunner of the later-day radio and TV campaign broadcasting.

One of the first actresses to transcribe her words for posterity was Mme. Ellen Terry, who was so old at the time she couldn't stand for long and had to be propped up on a chair.

John McCormack's early recordings made history, not only by vocal standards but because he was the only singer who had such an even tone that he didn't have to be moved back and forth before the recording horn to keep his peak notes from shattering the recording system.

When the famous husky-lunged Wagnerian singer Johanna Gadski first recorded, the engineers had to put their fingers on the recording needle to keep it from vibrating so it wouldn't ruin the wax impression.

Arturo Toscanini issued an ultimatum in 1931 that he wouldn't conduct his orchestra any more for the sole purpose of making records because stopping every four and one-half minutes in a symphony destroyed his mood. Necessity being the mother of invention, RCA Victor engineers then proceeded to perfect a method of recording directly from a concert hall during a performance.

When Caruso recorded the famous "Quartette" from Rigoletto with Galli-Curci, Perini and DeLucca, his voice boomed out over all the rest. Finally an even balance was obtained for the recording horn by backing Caruso against the far wall of the studio, some five or six yards away from the horn and far behind the other principals.

Birds Give It to Victor

Two of the most temperamental artists ever to record were a pair of canary birds hired to provide an obligato for a "Blue Danube Waltz" recording. The birds refused to perform until the studio lights were dimmed, the microphone draped and their cage three-quarters screened.

Pianist Vladimir de Pachmann couldn't record without an audience, so when he made his first disks at Victor's Camden studio, office boys, secretaries and other help not busy in the studio at the time were rounded up to provide the proper atmosphere.

Emma Calve, apparently expecting to see plenty of gold and glitter when she arrived at her first session, was frightened by the utilitarian aspect of the studio. Swearing that she was afraid to enter for fear of being robbed, she wouldn't set foot in the studio until the treasurer arrived with a certified check, and she was paid in advance.

Humorist Cal Stewart ("Uncle Josh") once fainted during a recording session. When he came to, he asked what time it was. When told "one o'clock" he exclaimed, "That's the first time in my life I failed to wind my watch at 12 o'clock."

When Chauncey Olcott, one of the most popular singers of his time and composer of "My Wild Irish Rose," came to record he was so nervous he broke down and couldn't sing. Taking his hat and coat, he walked out and never returned.

Probably the best known anecdote about the old recording days is the story about the time Caruso and Geraldine Farrar waxed the love duet from "Madame Butterfly." The day was hot and humid, and Caruso took time out between "takes" for a "quick one." When he returned and sang the introductory bars, Farrar is supposed to have thrilled, in perfect accord with the music, "Oh, you've had a highball!" Caruso, still singing also in perfect time, replied, "I've had two highballs." Authorities are still in dispute over whether the record was ever released commercially.

When Marconi Became A Columbia 'Expert'

In the early years of this century the world was agog at the news that a young Italian, Guglielmo Marconi, had invented the "wireless telegraph." It occurred to Columbia that engaging Marconi to work with staff engineers in perfecting the phonograph and record would be a 10-strike. So, in the summer of 1906, with much fanfare, Marconi became associated with Columbia.

The news inspired some unidentified scribbler, who didn't care for the phonograph music of nearly half a century since, to write the following:

"Say, Mr. Marconi, get busy, please,
Give us a tip—set our minds at ease.
They say you've hitched up with the Columbia staff,
And soon we'll hear your improved phonograph.
Will it be noiseless, and screechless, and scratchless?
Raspless, and gaspless, and hornless and brassless?
If so, G. Marconi, to thee be the praise
From morning till night, till the end of our days.

You've done some great stunts, flashing news 'cross the sea,
But say, hully gee! that ain't one, two, three
To what you'll be, when you perfect your idee
And land in every home,
Your Noiseless,
Screechless,
Scratchless,
Raspless,
Gaspless,
Hornless,
Brassless
GRAPH-O-PHONE!"

Marconi didn't stay long with Columbia. There is no evidence of his contributing anything worthwhile to the company's research, but a new type of record, not designed by him, was called the Marconi in his honor. It was a single-sided, semi-flexible platter, unbreakable but which had to be played with a special gold-pointed needle. When Marconi quit, Columbia abandoned his namesake record, which most people tried to spin with a steel needle to its utter ruin.

The Expanding Repertoire

RCA Victor Artists & Repertoire Chief's Hep Appraisal of Creative Values

By GEORGE R. MAREK

(Director of Artists & Repertoire)

The Independence Celebration Committee of the City of Boston managed to raise a round $100,000 as Johann Strauss' fee. The sum was his for coming to conduct several "Monster Concerts" and for playing his "Blue Danube Waltz" next to the Charles River. The "Monster Concerts" were an enormous success, and the Boston ladies demanded snips from Johann Strauss' black locks as souvenirs. Strauss' valet did a thriving business selling such locks. Unfortunately, it became known that this gentleman's gentleman clipped the curls from his master's Newfoundland dog.

G. R. Marek

Johann Strauss' visit occurred in the year in which Edison announced the invention of a machine which was "an attempt to record automatically the speech of a very rapid speaker." It turned out that what Edison thought it would be was the one thing it isn't: the use of the phonograph for the spoken word is extremely limited. Very few spoken records have been successful. But to the "Blue Danube"—which became over the course of years probably the best-selling single record—Edison's invention has done fantastic justice. "Blue Danube" recordings have been heard by many more people than could be squeezed into the biggest "Monster Concert."

What is good repertoire? What makes for a successful record? Our present catalog lists as its first listing "A Granada," sung by Caruso, and comes to an end with "Zonky," played by McKinney's Cotton Pickers. Within that "A" and "Z" there is to be found the most diverse music. The records have only one characteristic in common. Any one of them is capable of being played a number of times. Whenever we discuss whether an idea is suitable for recording I ask myself: "How will it sound the sixth time?" Records still represent a substantial sum of money to most people. Records differ from a television program or a film. Record buyers want something they can enjoy more than once. This is obviously true of classical music; it is also true of a transitory pop song.

The new speeds (which offer more music for less money) and tape-recording (which facilitates the making of a record) have helped to make the classical repertoire grow like a forest fire. Actually, the recorded repertoire today is bigger than the "live" concert repertoire, an astonishing phenomenon! An artist hesitates to play in a concert some of the music he is asked to commit to tape. You do not very often hear the Bartok Violin Sonatas in Carnegie Hall, nor Poulenc's Mass in G, nor Nielsen's Symphony No. 4. But these examples of modern music are all available on records.

The same would be true of old music. It is a rare concert which includes any music by Palestrina, Cesti, Vivaldi, Frescobaldi or Gabrieli. Yet these great early Italian composers now find their voice on a disk which Stokowski has just recorded. Compare the available records of operas with available stage productions. Few managers can stray off the beaten path in stage productions of operas, since operatic production requires costly scenic investiture and costly rehearsals. I have never seen a performance of Mozart's "Idomeneo" in America, nor one of Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas." But I can listen to them and a dozen other "unusual" operas on records.

Longhair Hit Parade

This is not to say that the "Blue Danube Waltz" and the old favorites have lost ground. "Blue Danube" is still a best seller, and so is Beethoven's Fifth and "Clair de Lune" and "Liebestraum" and "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life." So are the Polonaise in A Flat and Schubert's "Ave Maria" and the "Nutcracker Suite" and the "Moonlight Sonata." "Traviata," "La Boheme," "Aida," "Carmen"—any one of the "boxoffice" operas—will outsell "Dido and Aeneas" 40-1. Fortunately, there are always new music lovers who wish to hear this appealing music.

A market is a parade. New people are always joining and others departing. What we snobbishly call the warhorses will keep on riding accoutered in glory and popular fame. Isn't this as it should be? Isn't—by and large—the most popular music the greatest music? There is always a good reason for endurance and an excellent reason for immortality.

I believe that the first duty of a record company is to bring to the public this popular repertoire in recordings of ever-increasing excellence. There is no such thing as an "ultimate" recording. I believe that the repertoire must be expanded vertically—in new recordings of the masterpieces, the beloved melodies, the charming operettas—as well as horizontally.

To be honest, I don't believe that all of the little-known operas and tone poems that are being hurriedly brought to tape now are worth recording, or that the public's interest is best served by such plethora. Still, poking in the musical attic is always diverting. Widening the repertoire is always a fascinating challenge. Here is where you get some pleasant surprises—and some disappointments. We have never been able to sell in any great quantities recordings of Schubert Songs in their original versions. We have had little luck with the popularization of quartet music. On the other hand, there is "La Mer," Debussy's glittering tribute to the sea which, beautiful as it is, is certainly not easy music. Last December we released a recording by Toscanini of which in six months we have sold some 22,000 albums. It is a case of "La Mer" the merrier.

The Artist's Impact

Just as the recorded repertoire no longer follows the live repertoire entirely, so is it no longer true that an artist's record sales are dependent on his personal appearances. That used to be an axiom of the business, and it is undoubtedly a fact that record sales are helped by concertizing. Yet within the last two years we have brought forth recordings of the past and, in addition to the perenially popular Caruso, the recording by Rachmaninoff, John McCormack, Rosa Ponselle and Chaliapin have again become important repertoire. So have Glenn Miller, Fats Waller and Russ Columbo. In Pop Music today we have artists who achieve enormous initial success on recordings and only after they are a success by ear alone does the public want to see and hear them in person. There are even certain artists who are big record sellers but do not draw in personal appearances. Recently the producer of "Wish You Were Here" attributed some of the success of the show (after a shaky start) to the popularity of Eddie Fisher's recording of the title song. People hear this record—and some of them then go to the boxoffice.

How about the future? Surely the repertoire will continue to widen. Surely reproduced music will continue to be improved in sound. New packages and products will be developed in the next 75 years to give new impetus and excitement to the business, and these, I believe, will attempt to give the consumer still more music for less money. (Our latest record, the 45 EP, offers the public 16 minutes of recorded music for $1.50 on Red Seal and $1.40 on Pop. This is quite a reduction from the Quartet from "Rigoletto" (5 minutes) which we sold as a one-sided record for $3.50 in 1917!)

Eventually it may be possible to produce records cheaply enough so that people could buy them as casually as they pick up a magazine. Then you might buy a recording of some timely gags by whoever will be the Bob Hope of 1975 (probably Bob Hope), play it once, and discard it. Or you might get a recording of the speech of the Presidential candidate, just to hear again what promises he made the day before. The use of records for home instruction may increase: cooking instructions, diet hints, home exercises, courses in spoken salesmanship, parlor games, dancing lessons, language lessons, etc. And you might be able to get a recording of the uncut "Hamlet," hook it up to your film projector and see and hear Shakespeare at your leisure and as often as you want.

If that happens, Edison's original plan will have been fulfilled.

8,000,000 45 RPM AND 7,000,000 LP TURNTABLES SPELL OUT OVER $200,000,000 DISK BIZ

By P. A. BARKMEIER

(V. P., RCA Victor Record Dept.)

More than $200,000,000 worth of records of all sizes, speeds, and classifications was sold by the nation's record dealers during 1951.

Paul A. Barkmeier

During that single year, the public purchased more records than were bought during the eight-year period that preceded World War II. In the past three years, dealers have sold more phonograph records than were sold during the last 13 years before the war.

This tremendous record-market expansion and the tremendous merchandising opportunities it offers dealers are direct results of the development of the present new-speed market and more progressive merchandising techniques. Throughout the history of the record business, technical advances have been folowed by market expansion.

Eldridge R. Johnson's establishment of the first mass market for records at the turn of the century was made possible by this national response to technical improvement. Johnson's skill as a designer and a machinist quickly resulted in a much improved product. His invention of the phonograph's first constant speed motor was excellent to satisfactory music reproduction. By merchandising the technical improvements to the public he converted a toy-like device into something the public wanted. For the first time, the American householder saw the phonograph as a serious musical instrument for home entertainment, and a new industry was launched.

Today, the situation is somewhat similar. The coming of 45 rpm and 33⅓ rpm records has given dealers that "something better" which is attractive to customers.

Since the potential record market is keyed to the number of phonographs in use, the magnitude of today's record market is indicated by the tremendous increase in new-speed playing facilities.

Salient Statistics

On Jan. 1, 1950, according to published statistics, there were in use approximately 800,000 instruments capable of playing 45 rpm and 1,500,000 instruments capable of playing 33⅓ rpm disks. By Jan. 1 of the following year, the in-use figures had jumped to more than 5,000,000 for 45 rpm and more than 4,000,000 for 33⅓ rpm. By Jan. 1, 1952, there were in use more than 8,000,000 turntables capable of playing 45 rpm and nearly 7,000,000 capable of playing 33⅓ rpm disks. These figures include the three-speed home phonograph machine now in use.

In the three years that the new-speed instruments have been on the market, dealers have sold as many of these types as there were phonographs in use in 1946.

The outlook for the future is equally promising. Today, the record dealer has more sales opportunities than at any time in the history of the industry. He has:

1. A new high level of turntable distribution—approximately 22,000,000 record-playing instruments of all types currently in use.
2. The new-speed records, which represent significant technical advances, offering the record-buyer unprecedented listening, operating, and handling advantages.
3. More value for the record purchasers dollar—a superior record technically and artistically, at lower prices than the conventional shellac disk.
4. National promotion of musical selections, artists, and orchestras by radio, television, and the movies.
5. Powerful merchandising aids to help him capitalize on the first three factors.

Given this mass distribution of turntables, modern and highly salable merchandise, and the merchandising support of radio, television, and the movies, the record industry is today more firmly intrenched in the American home than it was during those years when it stood alone in the field of home entertainment.

Edison Finally Makes a Record; Inventor's Fan Mail

By G. FENN GRACE

While Thomas A. Edison's recitation of "Mary Had a Little Lamb" was the first words ever spoken into a phonograph, for many years the inventor wouldn't make a record for public sale, although the public clamored for one.

The National Phonograph Co., which marketed Edison cylinder records and machines, for years published a small fan mag, The Phonogram. Letters were constantly published from devout admirers of the man who made recorded music possible, asking that he make a "roller" on some subject such as "How I Invented the Phonograph." Edison always refused. Meanwhile, some patrons consoled themselves with belief that he did the spoken announcements at the beginning of the records. (He didn't. They were by one of Edison's staff artists, comedian Ed Meeker.)

But finally, shortly after the first World War ended, Mr. Edison did consent to become an Edison recording artist. He spoke a brief address, "Let Us Not Forget—a Message to the American People," which was a plea for continued cooperation and harmony among the Allied nations, and it sold well on both Diamond Disks and Blue Amberol cylinders.

Much of Edison's fan mail was reprinted in Phonogram and at this date makes hilarious reading. Beyond doubt the miracle of sound reproduction inspired some of the world's worst "poetry." Consider "The Edison Phonograph;" in the Phonogram for September, 1904:

"As I walked through the town on a fine summer eve,
I heard such sweet music, you could hardly believe.
It was playing 'Sweet Home' and 'A Home Over There,'
And 'The Last Rose of Summer' on the cool evening air.
"Yes, I stopped and listened, and would you believe
'My Old Kentucky Home' floated out on the breeze.
Then the chime bells they echoed this beautiful song,
'The Old Lights of London' so powerful and strong . . .
"I inquired of the passers-by, 'What instrument is this?'
They said, 'It's the Edison, and one of the best.'
It played 'Rock of Ages' so solemn and sweet,
And the song called 'Old Hundred' as the pastor he preached . . .
Then I listened again, when a dialog came,
'Won't you let me in, Hannah, from out of the rain?'
Then the old-fashioned farmer, from Squashtown, you know,
He set us all laughing till we lost off two toes!
'My Old New Hampshire Home' then entirely got loose,
And the tears from my eyelids dropped into my boots,
When I thought of the days of my childhood once more,
Before the Edison phonograph entered my door."

Plaudits

On the other hand, sometimes a reasonably literate tribute of appreciation came in. A young woman, Ellie Wemyss, from far-off Australia, was so happy when she received a home recording which her brother in Chicago had made on an Edison cylinder machine that she sent the inventor a long poem, of which the first and last stanzas are typical:

A voice from far across the sea!
We hear each word and tone!
'Tis not a mere machine—'tis he!
Himself! His voice—his own! . . .
God cherish that great life of thine!
God guard and bless it still,
That you may give more gifts divine,
And all His work fulfill!

And the following, in December, 1905, from a Michigan farmer, who had written in September, wasn't bad:

"We have a Home phonograph and we may, in view of the following, be excused for this one luxury. I am today out in the cornfield, cutting corn. The sun kisses the gray corn tassels and the ears tickle my ribs as I work. In an end shock I stick a long stalk in the top as a mark to show me the shock. In the shade a good cold grainy watermelon reposes. Across the lane my boy follows a wheat drill over the soft earth in his bare feet. The crows are flying toward the nearest wood and the robins are gathering for their journey south. The air is still and it makes a fellow sweat. But I know when the yellow corn is cribbed, and the storm is howling, and the great white billows lay along our roads and fences, while a big mound buries our mail box at the front gate, and we can't get to town (we are a family of 11; eight children, youngest two; grandpa, 90), and when the windows are covered with thick frost we will listen to 'Blue Danube' and thank Edison for his phonograph."

TV Helps, Not Hinders Disk Biz

Television has been a boon instead of a bane to the phonograph record business, according to L. W. Kanaga, RCA Victor record sales and merchandise manager. He cites four points to show that television benefits the record business:

1. Record sales in the older, more saturated television areas have outstripped non-TV areas by a wide margin.
2. The medium of television makes music and recording artists better known and, therefore, stimulates interest in them.
3. Television keeps people at home and thus affords a greater opportunity for playing records.
4. Many homes formerly without record players have acquired them in combination with television sets.

Only Records Afford That Unique Interpretation

By DAVE KAPP

(Manager Popular Artists & Repertoire)

When radio began its temporary replacement of the parlor phonograph as a feature of the American home some years ago, few prophets had the vision to foresee that the record players would return to the scene, stronger than ever, and join radio in a flourishing partnership.

Dave Kapp

In their first flush of excitement, radio fans prematurely relegated records to the heap, but in the long run radio proved to be a potent hypo for the recording industry.

With this plus the aid of major technical improvements, recording and record manufacturing have skyrocketed into a major industry which, during 1951 for example, sold more than $200,000,000 worth of platters over retail counters and into the coin machines.

Without the competition of radio, records might have continued to provide merely faithful transcriptions of established hit songs, sung exactly as introduced by top vaudeville, night club, and musical comedy personalities. When radio began to bring these same performances into homes at no cost, records had to sing a different tune to attract a paying public.

How the record industry rose to this challenge is one of the entertainment world's most inspiring sagas. It soon was found that with all its exciting advantages, radio was limited by programming requirements which still left room for the wax medium. Every week, on radio, the songs had to be arranged to suit the same orchestras, and they had to be proven hits to be programmed. The record industry discovered that its relative flexibility and opportunity for experimentation opened an avenue for survival—and even for growth. With radio concentrating on proven product, the record men could try out new talent and fresh material.

Basing its fight for existence in the middle '30s on the "replayability" of records, as opposed to radio's "one-shot" offerings, the record industry developed an entirely new philosophy, stressing its unlimited opportunity to "create" and to provide "continuous performance" in the home. The record men then branched out as creative composers and arrangers as well as talent scouts. The challenge to mold something that the public would pay for in competition with something it could get free, offered an exciting incentive.

Real Starmakers

In rising to the challenge, records also made a strong contribution to radio, because many of the artists who became established favorites on the phonographs went on to further their careers on the airwaves. In the past 20 years, no other medium has come anywhere near the phonograph record as a starmaker.

Perry Como's "Till the End of Time" led to "Prisoner of Love" and the long string of recorded favorites that have made him the big name that he is in music today.

It was the record of "There I've Said It Again" that started Vaughn Monroe on his successful career. Dinah Shore skyrocketed with "Yes, My Darling Daughter," Tommy Dorsey with "Marie," Artie Shaw with "Begin the Beguine," and Glenn Miller with "In the Mood" and many others.

The rise of Eddie Fisher is another case in point. His early record hits first brought him national fame and he has followed them with an exceptional succession of smash waxings. Although Tony Martin has a tremendous nightclub and theatre following, it took his "There's No Tomorrow" to propel him to an all-time high.

And the parade of new record personalities continues. The teen-age Bell Sisters have become the biggest new sister act in show biz solely on the basis of their recordings. June Valli's recent "Strange Sensation" was a prime factor in her being signed for the new Hit Parade television show. Sunny Gale, the "'Wheel of Fortune' Girl," is continuing her rapid rise on disks. Then there are the successes of the Ralph Flanagan, Buddy Morrow, and Sauter-Finegan orchestras, none of which would have been possible without their first recordings.

The recording industry now ranks second to none in the creation of new music personalities for the same market. With an improved product and a tremendous market of more than 20,000,000 turntables in use, the phonograph record industry looks forward to an even greater future as a maker of hits and a builder of stars.

New Record Business Geared To Lowprice High Quality Product

By LARRY KANAGA

(RCA Victor Records Sales Manager)

The wise shopper who patronizes the thrift marts and bargain basements to get the most for his money in this era of spiraling costs and prices can find one of the best buys on the market today in his nearest record store.

It is a proven fact that the record industry is one of the few businesses honestly able to say that it is giving the customer a better value today than it did four or even 40 years ago.

If the purchasing power of the record buyer's dollar were to be measured by the pound alone, yesterday's opera fan staggering home with 14 shellac discs of a complete 78 rpm "Il Travatore" would be the winner. But now your opera fan gets all of the Verdi masterpiece on two vinylite LP disks or nine featherweight, 7-inch 45 rpm records in high fidelity. "New Orthophonic" sound at approximately half the 1939 price of the old opera. The customer of 1912 also thought he had a bargain with a single-faced record of such top opera stars as Caruso singing the Sextette from "Lucia" for $7. Now he not only can get the Sextette but nine other arias from the same opera on LP or 45 for even less than his pre-World I predecessor paid for the Sextette alone.

This new bargain value in recorded music is the principal reason why more disks have been sold in the past three years than in the whole 13 year span before the war. Today more money is spent in the U. S. on records alone per year than for all of the airline tickets purchased annually; more than for all of the boxoffice receipts of the legitimate theatres, operas and concerts. There also is more spent for the vinylite platters in 12 months than for all the yearly take of the professional football, baseball, hockey and racetrack receipts combined.

The record industry once was a comparatively simple operation. In 1951, however, it reached a $200,000,000 annual gross. This business volume combined with the tremendous increase in repertoire and new improvement of product has made it necessary to revise and streamline the basic sales and merchandise structure to keep pace with opportunity.

At RCA Victor we have done this by means of a greatly intensified field sales program designed to more thoroughly exploit the new markets opened up by the introduction of the new speeds. This includes frequent and more intensive contact with the markets through distributor-dealer meetings in all territories, a greatly augmented selection of merchandise and promotion aids, and even a basic training program for record store personnel which, more than ever before, accents the importance of the familiar sales slogan, "Know Your Product."

This new field program is also geared to the fact that the record dealer today doesn't run one business—he runs six! Each of the popular, classical, kiddies,' country & western, rhythm & blues, and international classifications demand individualized attention and, with the new speed sales techniques and merchandising aids devised for each, a thorough knowledge of the product is more important than ever. The record counterman who does not know his product today is not only out of step with the forward march of the industry, but he is actually bottlenecking the new areas of potential profit represented by the 22,000,000,000 record playing instruments of all types in use today.

One of the biggest sales opportunities now open to the alert record dealer is the standard 78 rpm customer. Although millions of new-speed phonographs have been sold at a very low cost, many 78 rpm purchasers still do not know all their merits. If the sales person thoroughly knows his new product and also knows the likes and dislikes of his customer, every 78 rpm purchase presents a challenge for him to acquaint the customer with the new speeds.

The new RCA Victor Bluebird line of classics is another example of a product whose advantages only can be exploited if a sales person knows what he is talking about. The sales person also must know how much the customer saves and be able to demonstrate the desirable features of the new Extended Play 45's.

In the operatic field every dealer realizes that being able to spot and play a well-known selection from an opera album can materially increase sales of that opera. Today the record store personnel must be familiar with an infinitely larger selection of operas than ever before to successfully promote this type of repertoire. In the children's record field as well, store personnel must know all the advantages of the dollar children's record over the low-price kiddies' repertoire. He must also familiarize himself with all the innovations of such a new development as our Kiddies' "six-in-one" line which has six distinctly different saleable features.

It is also not enough now for the salesman just to know his product. He must listen to his customer so that he can get to know his preferences and then successfully introduce him to the type of new product best suited to his taste. This means that there is a greater difference now than ever before between an order-taker and a salesman. The salesman who knows his product and who knows his customer, is the salesman who will bring alive the slogan "more music for less money," and spell it out where it counts—on the cash register. Such selling also creates the satisfied customer who will buy more high quality product, more often, to make the forthcoming seasons the biggest in the 75-year history of the phonograph industry.

Artists Take Their Recording Very Seriously Nowadays

By MANIE SACKS

(Talent Coordinator, RCA-NBC)

The current universal show business recognition of the disk as a key factor in the star-making and star-maintaining process has had its inevitable impact on the development of healthy talent relations in the record industry. That impact includes some negative aspects, such as the complaints from the vocalist who has failed to come up with a hit side over a period of months; but, on the whole, there's been a steady improvement in the relations of the artist to his label.

The record company, of course, has always been interested in making the hit sides. That's their business, their bread and butter. The same attitude, however, did not always exist on the part of some name artists who once tended to neglect their disk assignments for other entertainment media, such as films and radio. That sluffoff approach has long gone by the boards since the boxoffice power of disks has been demonstrated so clearly and repeatedly.

Nowadays, top artists pitch, side-by-side with the companies, to find and make that all-important hit side. No longer do artists walk into the studio a couple of minutes before cutting time to glance over their assigned tunes. Good records can't be produced that way anymore and when they are, it's accidental.

Today, hits are generated by careful preparation, planning and production detail. It's like a Broadway legitimate show that's going on the boards. Every phase of the show's personnel, from producer and director through the cast to the backstage grip, has to map out his function as the show takes shape. The same goes for the disk-making process and you don't have to draw any pictures for the vocalist today to make him understand the necessity of collaborating in every detail with the artist & repertoire chief, the musical director and the arranger. On the contrary, the disk artist is right on the ball these days only because records are so essential to his marquee status.

Show Biz Phenomenon

The power of disks is a show business phenomenon. No other entertainment medium has equalled the capacity of records to create stars out of unknowns so quickly or to maintain and entrench the position of established stars so solidly. Even video, for all its spectacular growth and influence, has as yet failed to produce anywhere near as many new stars as have disks over the past few years. Martin & Lewis can be credited as video products, and that's about all, while the disk has created such names as Eddie Fisher, Johnnie Ray, Les Paul & Mary Ford, Ralph Flanagan, among the new bandleaders, and a flock of others.

The source of the disk's power to create or maintain or enhance star values can probably be found in its repetitive use. An outstanding song interpretation on records initially gets a tremendous audience through the disk jockey. That audience runs into the millions and it is exposed to the same song and the same artist many times a day until it sinks deeply into the public consciousness.

Even more importantly, the disk is played on the home phonograph for the family and friends. A record that sells 1,000,000 copies can safely be estimated to reach 10 or 12 times that number of persons in the course of its being played over the home machine. That imprint for the artist is direct, intimate and immediate and no other medium can duplicate the power of disks in this respect.

There's the case of Eddie Fisher, for example. Although he's been serving in the U. S. Army for the past year, he still ranks as one of the most popular male singers exclusively through the series of hit sides he's made for RCA Victor. The Fisher saga is a remarkable, yet typical, example of what the record industry has accomplished in the past few years in the way of bringing new faces to the old business of disking.

ASCAP and BMI Prexies' Views on Music And Its Recorded Manifestations

By OTTO A. HARBACH
(President, ASCAP)

Before I discuss what the advent of the phonograph record and talking machine has meant to the publisher and writer of songs, I want to tell you about a trip I once took in a small motor boat through Hell's Gate.

Otto A. Harbach

Hell's Gate is that spot in the East River where the tides of Long Island Sound get mixed up with the currents of the river as they meet head on the tide coming up or returning to New York Bay. It was then I found out why this is called Hell's Gate. My steering apparatus seemed to have fallen apart. I steered south and found myself going west and vice versa. Sometimes as though in a paroxysm of frustration I found my boat standing in one spot, not still, but seemingly possessed of a mad desire to waltz. Needless to say, by a system of trial by error, I eventually got out of the mixed up currents.

But what has this to do with phonograph records and talking machines?

Today, as president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP), I am trying to help steer a boat through waters where conflicting tides and currents make Hell's Gate seem a dreaming mill pond. And it's all because 75 years ago someone invented a process whereby the vibrations of sound could be imprisoned in wax, later to be released and made audible by simply reversing the process.

At that time it meant nothing to me as I was only four years old and my interest in music was confined to my mother's voice. She always sang as she worked.

But 30 years later I became conscious of phonograph records in a definite way.

My first musical play, "Three Twins," had been produced on Broadway. The day after the opening, at Mrs. Dinkelspiel's boarding house on 56th St., I heard a song from the play coming from a tin horn that had emblazoned upon it another horn and a little white dog listening to "His Master's Voice."

(In passing, I would like to congratulate whoever was responsible for that trademark. To me it is one of the most eloquent and effective slogans ever invented by the advertising fraternity.)

Little did I think that 45 years later I would be referring to that incident in an article for the voice of the entertainment industry—VARIETY.

For the sake of brevity, let us leave Mrs. Dinkelspiel and shift the scene to a music shop on Broadway near 44th street.

I was standing at the counter, spellbound by a sight that has gladdened the heart of every songwriting novice, Viz., some copies of a song I had written with Karl Hoschna. By a strange coincidence the song was entitled "Every Little Movement." I say that because I am going to discuss a lot of "little movements" that have grown into tremendous movements that have turned the music business of America upside down and inside out.

For the sake of clarity, I will take some liberty in describing the scene that took place at the counter. First I will enlarge the cast of characters to include beside myself ("the writer"), a piano manufacturer, a music teacher, the owner of a vaudeville theatre, a vaudeville singer and a music publisher and, what is most important, a customer. Let's listen a moment:

CUSTOMER: I want to buy a song.

SALESMAN: Name it.

CUSTOMER: (Pointing to "Every Little Movement".) That one. (The publisher and I exchange a happy glance.)

SALESMAN: But why do you want that particular song?

CUSTOMER: I heard Miss Bing sing it last night at Bong's Variety Theatre. (The singer and the variety manager exchange a happy glance.)

SALESMAN: Do you have a piano at home?

CUSTOMER: No, but I'm about to buy one. (The piano-maker smiles happily.)

SALESMAN: Can you play the piano?

CUSTOMER: No, but I'm going to learn. (The music teacher is elated.)

SALESMAN: I can save you an awful lot of expense and trouble.

CUSTOMER: How?

SALESMAN: See this little machine?

CUSTOMER: Yes, it's a talking machine.

SALESMAN: It will cost you a lot less than a piano. (The piano-maker looks worried.) And let me tell you how you can save all that trouble of learning to play. (The smile on the music teacher's face fades away.) See this disk?

CUSTOMER: Yes.

SALESMAN: All you have to do is to place this disk on the machine and out of this horn will come a voice accompanied by not only a piano, but an orchestra, just as you heard it last night at the Bong's Variety Theatre. And another thing, after this, whenever you want to learn whether or not you like a song, come in here and I will play it for you. You can save the expense of going to vaudeville. (At this point the manager and the vaudevillian exchange a glance of consternation.)

CUSTOMER: I think I will take your advice. I'll buy the machine and I may as well listen to some other songs while I'm here.

(The piano maker, the music teacher, the vaudeville manager and his performer leave the shop all worried, as they sense a coming catastrophe. The publisher goes over to the writer. They also look worried.)

SALESMAN: What's eating you two?

PUBLISHER: I just lost the sale of a song.

SALESMAN: But you'll get something out of the record sale, won't you?

PUBLISHER: Sure, 1c. The profit on my printed copy would have meant many times that.

SALESMAN: And you Mr. Writer, why are you worried?

WRITER: You have just nicked me for 3c.

SALESMAN: How come?

WRITER: If you had sold that song sheet, by agreement with my publisher, I would have received 3c.

SALESMAN: Don't you get something from the sale of the record?

WRITER: Yes, by an act of congress I am not allowed more than ½ of one cent.

SALESMAN: Well what do you know?

That scene played thousands of times in thousands of songshops all over the country was bound to have a tremendous influence on the musical industry and the entertainment world.

To safely sail that stream has required an entirely new technique of navigation. It is always so with any new invention that opens up new avenues of human endeavor. It brings catastrophe for some and success and new blessings to others, but always the latter seems to over balance the former.

The answer to any problem demanding change is always the same. "Will it be the best for the most?" Let's see what has happened! The development of the phonograph record and the orthophonic talking machine have led to a series of new industries—some of them gigantic. To wit—the jukebox industry, the moving picture business, radio and, now, television.

Yes, the upheaval in the great entertainment world has been worthwhile.

The characters in our little play above have all met stormy weather. Some have come through better than others. The publisher finds himself in the peculiar position of being the guardian of yesterdays' songs, and only occasionally the publisher of something new, something whose merits have often been found by someone else—usually the maker of the phonograph record that looked so like a toy a half century ago.

The writer has discovered that he must not only create, but activate as well. His first contacts today are usually with the record maker.

And now, I must recall another trip I made through Hell's Gate.

It was not in a small boat of my own, but as a passenger on a steamer. To be sure, there was a look of worry on the pilot's face until we had reached the quiet waters of the Sound, but I was glad that I was not trying to buck the currents and the tides alone.

Some 4,000 writers and publishers feel the same way. That's why ASCAP was born. There are many who still do not understand what the Society is or how it came about. Here's the answer in a nutshell.

About the time our Government decreed that no more than 2c. royalty could be paid for the recording of a song, it—like every civilized government—granted the creators of a song an inalienable right to some of the profits, accruing from the public performance of that song for profit—as in dancehalls, radio and television, and other places of public entertainment and someday hope from that gigantic business, the jukebox industry. To protect that small right, for not only ASCAP members, but for all writers everywhere, ASCAP was formed.

It has become the clearing house without which the stupendous entertainment business, involving the rendering of music, cannot be carried on.

When a client signs an agreement with ASCAP, it is as though he signed 3,000 or more contracts with each of that many publishers and writers who have furnished, or will furnish the songs he wants.

ASCAP's Interest

ASCAP assumes the responsibility of seeing that fees collected are divided among the interested parties, and holds its clients free from all legal complications, resulting from the exercise of licenses obtained from ASCAP.

The bookkeeping involved in keeping track of millions of users of thousands of songs, and allotting credits to thousands of writers, composers and publishers is fantastic. Many problems, relating to this, have been recently solved, and I foresee a new era of peace and prosperity.

Upon the fate of ASCAP depends the fate of a large proportion of American creators of music. Its interests are irrevocably bound up with the phonograph, the talking machine and other forms of mechanized rendering of music.

ASCAP is only desirous of finding its just and fair position in the musical scheme. Together the industry can go on to untold fields of new endeavor.

To cite just one phase. When I was a youngster, there were thousands of cultural dead spots throughout the nation: remote areas where it was virtually impossible for anyone to hear good music performed by professional artists. All that has changed in the last 75 years.

Today there is no area of the entire world which need be cut off from the cultural benefits of good music ably performed. I think this fact has had a beneficial effect upon the musically creative talent. Writers of music and lyrics no longer are afraid to attempt mature ideas in their works, because they realize that they can have a wider acceptance among the general public than was true before these methods of communication were established.

Yes, fantastic changes have taken place in the music world in the last 75 years.

But in all these changes, one element has remained intact. At the base of this gigantic pyramid called the business of music, is the creator.

When there are no more new songs written, there will be no more new songs recorded. A tree whose roots are not continually developing underground, will soon find its branches withered and dead.

Undoubtedly, tomorrow will bring new problems to ASCAP in its relationship to the music industry. New "gates" in the river will open with new challenges to navigational skill.

With a spirit of fair play on the part of all concerned, these gates need not develop into Hell Gates, but only turning points that will mean a deeper and broader, and a more peaceful river as it approaches the wide sea of common interest.

By CARL HAVERLIN
(President, Broadcast Music, Inc.)

At home not long ago I came upon a slim catalog of 1916 containing all the recorded classical music then available. My young daughter, a record collector herself, commented on the few recordings then available as compared with the enormous wealth of recorded music upon which she may now spend her allowance and such additional sums as her parents may give her for the purpose. If I remember correctly, I paid as much for the Sextet from "Lucia" as she recently paid for an entire recorded opera. This comparison, perhaps more than any other, symbolizes the tremendous strides of the phonograph record itself.

Carl Haverlin

The second viewpoint from which I regard the recording is that of one who has been associated with broadcasting in one capacity or another since 1924. I well remember that in the '20s there were some broadcasters who, for reasons never made plain even to themselves, felt it beneath their dignity and the tastes of their audiences, to broadcast recorded programs. It need not be stressed that the increasing public appetite for the musical wares of the recording have made recordings and broadcasting almost synonymous.

The fear expressed in those same years by some recording companies that the use of their product on the air would injure their sales to the public has vanished, with the antiquated attitude of some broadcasters toward records.

My third viewpoint is that of one connected with performing rights and publishing matters. From the beginning, BMI recognized the value of recorded music, both in its phonograph record and electrical transcription aspects, as an important element not only in station programming but in the exploitation of music in all of its branches. Toward this end we early created the BMI Pin-Up Sheet in which we list new recordings of popular songs, as a constant reminder to station and agency program builders and artists of what is both current and choice. So successful were our first efforts in support of popular music, that we later amplified the list to include folk tunes, rhythm & blues, and Latin-American songs—types of music which did not then enjoy their present national popularity. Over a year ago we inaugurated the Concert Pin-Up Sheet, devoted wholly to the new recordings of both contemporary classical music and the standard masterpieces.

Handling as we do the performing rights of many American and foreign publishers, we are aware of their struggle for recordings and the reasons for them. It is axiomatic that almost without exception, substantial performances of a composition, both in broadcasting and in other fields of entertainment, must be accompanied by one or more outstanding records.

A Great Preserver

Until the emergence of the recording as a major musical force in recent years, it was the printing of a musical work that gave it permanence in this transitory business of ours. Now the phonograph stamper vies with the printing press as the great preserver. Indeed there is a curious inbalance that we often meet today. Within recent memory, we and our publishers received requests from program people for recorded versions of music that had been found good by performers. Now the trend seems to be the other way, with requests mounting for printed versions of music that has already achieved popularity in its recorded form.

Writing of this relationship between the printed and recorded versions of music, Time Magazine in its issue of Sept. 15 notes that "thousands are no longer surprised to hear important music on records before it is played in public," and goes on to point out that "today, to the limit of his pocketbook, the music lover can buy 128 complete recorded operas, from Mozart to Gershwin. (The biggest U. S. opera company can mount only about 20 a season). He can have song cycles by Mahler, rare tone poems by Strauss, tropical novelties by Villa-Lobos, and scores of other out-of-the-way pieces, many of them complete strangers to the U. S. . . . Music lovers are not the only beneficiaries of the (recorded) repertory rush. Young composers whose music is often buried in private performances by musical aid societies have been coming in for their share of benefits too,"

To the phonograph record and to the outstanding exponents of the recorded arts, such as RCA-Victor, the world of music, the listener, the broadcaster, the composer, the artist, the publisher—all owe an undying debt of gratitude.

Real Rarity

Many of the estimated half million collectors in the U. S. of old records have set high ambitions for themselves in the way of obtaining rare and almost unattainable waxings. Perhaps the highest mark of lot was chosen by a gent who wrote to VARIETY's diskologist, Jim Walsh.

Collector said he had been looking more than 30 years for "original recording of 'Mary Had a Little Lamb,' recited by Thomas A. Edison and issued by Edison Co.," and would never rest until he found it. Sad word went back that if he doesn't rest until "Mary" turns up he's going to be a tired boy. As related elsewhere, nursery rhyme was the first "piece" spoken into the original phono by Edison, but it was indented into a soon discarded piece of tinfoil, and "record," of course, was never distributed commercially.

Ambitious disk Booners would do better to concentrate on trying to find wax cylinder reputed to have been made in 1887 by Jenny Lind. The one and only copy of such record is said to be in possession of the Royal Family of Denmark.

Technique of Record Mfg. Has Come A Long Way Since the 'Screechbox'

Record manufacturing has come a long way since 1877, when Thomas A. Edison invented his famous tinfoil machine. This instrument, which not only recorded but reproduced sound, consisted of a sheet of tinfoil wrapped around a cylinder. Sound vibrations caused a needle to indent the tinfoil as the cylinder turned. Then, for reproductions, or "playing," the procedure was reversed, with another needle carrying the sound to a horn.

The record manufacturing industry was slowly evolving, but at its best the record was a clumsy thing, and the reproducing machine was sometimes referred to as a "screechbox."

The Victor Talking Machine Co., and later RCA Victor, spent millions not only in the scientific development of record manufacturing but in selling the idea of "canned" music to the world. It also spent heavily to make the dog listening to "His Master's Voice" one of the world's famous trademarks.

Three Prime Steps

Today, the making of a record breaks down into three phases: (1) the artists whose performances are recorded; (2) the science of sound recording; and (3) the complex processes used to convert the original recording into a large quantity of finished records.

To begin with, in the case of a popular recording, the bandleader and the company's "popular" recording director get together and select the tunes to be recorded.

Once this is done, the leader must confer with his arranger, plan the orchestration, assign the vocalist, make sure the chorus is in the proper key with his or her voice, and rehearse the arrangements. Before recording it, he often wants to test it to determine if it's danceable, whistleable and hummable.

In the studio, most bands record a series of four sides at one three-hour session.

Two recording engineers and a rescording supervisor are usually on hand in the control room.

Orchestral balance is the first consideration. The leader sits in the control room with the engineers while the orchestra runs through the number. Instrumentalists are moved back and forth while studio acoustics and microphone placement are adjusted to get the desired impact.

Once balance is achieved, a test tape recording is made to be played back for the entire orchestra to hear. This is to allow for variations in balance, correction of small mistakes, etc. Then the finished recording is made on tape.

One advantage of using magnetic tape is that it can be "edited." If a mistake is made, that portion can be recorded again and spliced into the original. A final recording might consist of parts of two or three separate recordings.

First Technical Step

The first technical step in the making of a record takes place in the studio where the performance is placed on a master tape. In the RCA Victor studios in New York, for example, the walls and ceilings have been carefully processed to achieve acoustical perfection. At one end of the studio is a glass-enclosed booth which is the control room and nerve center. In this room is the monitor panel, where an engineer controls the quality and loudness of the music.

When a recording session is finished, the tapes are carefully checked, then recorded onto disks. These disks may be "45's," "78's," or Long-Playing (33⅓) platters. Each lacquer disk is tested in the recording studio and is then shipped to the manufacturing plant.

The plant again tests and inspects the lacquer and starts the plating processes. The first step is to "silver the disk." By chemical methods similar to those used on astronomical mirrors, a layer of silver is deposited on the surface a few millionths of an inch thick. Then comes a thin layer of nickel on top of the silver, and then a thick layer of copper. When the silver-nickel-copper "master" is removed from the lacquer, it is a negative, with ridges instead of grooves.

This master record is far too valuable to be used directly in the pressing of a large number of finished records. After an outstanding artist, such as Caruso, has died, they are the only permanent examples of the contributions he has made to our cultural heritage. As such, they are stored in vaults for safekeeping. In the case of RCA Victor, there are some 70,000 priceless disks guarded against the elements in a fortress-like building in Camden, N. J. Conuting the working masters, and the No. 2 masters, in addition to the originals, the library contains 278,000 recordings.

So instead of using the master, a mold is taken of it and is used to make the stampers, which actually do the job of record-making. Stampers are made of solid nickel with a tough plating of chromium to make the surface harder. The number of stampers made from a mold depends upon many finished records are to be produced and how fast the job must be done.

Sundry Processes

Throughout the plating processes, the plating solutions are under continual chemical control, and the electroformed parts—masters, molds and stampers—are inspected visually, and in many cases microscopically, to make sure no defects exist. Molds are actually play-tested.

The principal ingredient of a "45" or Long-Playing record today is a vinyl resin, to which are added lubricants, stabilizers and coloring materials. Despite the fact that most people still call the 78 rpm record "shellac," this material is no longer used in its manufacture. Instead, the 78 rpm record of today is made of synthetic resins, limestone, slate, carbon black and other materials.

In a mixer, the record ingredients are blended and fused into a plastic mass. Temperatures and time have been specified as a result of laboratory tests and are carefully controlled. Steaming hot, the material is dropped onto two sets of rolls which mix it further and sheet it onto a long conveyor belt. At the start of this conveyor belt, the sheet of compound moves through a set of blades that mark it into sections known as "biscuits." Each biscuit contains just enough material to make a record. The marked sheet continues through a long cooling tunnel, at the end of which it is broken along the lines into individual biscuits. Samples from each batch are tested and stored for future use.

The operation now switches to the pressing department. As previously explained, metal stampers have been formed from the duplicates made from the master record. Two metal stampers are required for a record, one for each side. In the record press, the stampers have been perfectly centered to guarantee accuracy.

The record press resembles a huge waffle iron, with one stamper at the bottom and one at the top. The labels which will appear on the face of the record are placed on the stampers and cemented into the finished record.

The record presses are semi-automatic units. The operator places two labels and a preheated biscuit in the press and touches a lever. From there on, the operation is automatic. The press closes with hydraulic pressure of many tons. Steam circulates for a few seconds, and then cold water cools the press and hardens the record. The heated compound has been forced to duplicate precisely the lacquer disk made in the studios.

Every record is examined for visible defects before being placed in the envelope. At frequent intervals, samples are selected for audible testing. Highly-trained women in especially constructed sound booths search for possible defects in tonal quality. Should a single record prove defective in audible tests, it is discarded and the entire lot is examined. The stamper is investigated for possible flaws. This meticulous manufacturing care and inspection results in the high standard of quality in today's recordings.

When Johnson Sang Cohan

Eldridge R. Johnson, founder of the Victor Talking Machine Co., is said to have made the first Victor record—his own rendition of George M. Cohan's first big hit, "I Guess I'll Have to Telegraph My Baby." Since the song came out in 1898, platter probably was made the same year. So far as is known, no copy is extant. (Many other artists, of course, had recorded for the first disk records made by Emile Berliner, whose patents Johnson acquired.)

One of the oldest master records still in RCA Victor vaults is "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," recorded Jan. 21, 1901, by Vess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King" (1868-1923). This is the still popular sextet number from "Floradora."

In October, 1946, RCA Victor held an elaborate ceremony to commemorate pressing of the one billionth record. Pressing was supposed to be Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever" and "Semper Fidelis" marches, played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orch. But through a mistake, a wrong label and master were brought out for "Stars and Stripes," so that what was actually pressed was "Banjo King" Ossman's ancient "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden."

That was embarrassing, because the record was to be presented to the U. S. Marine Corps. But a pressing machine operator philosophically remarked: "Oh well, they're going to gold-plate the record, and once it's been gold-plated it can't be played. The Marines'll never know the difference!"

Incidentally, Columbia has Victor's antiquity rating beat a bit. A recent checkup in the vaults revealed four seven-inch platters sung in French on Aug. 24, 1900, by a forgotten tenor, Joseph Saucier. Disks must have been made by old Globe Record Co., which was bought out by Columbia, for latter firm didn't begin disking operations until 1902. It had been all Columbia cylinders up to then.

Puccini On Phonograph Records

George R. Marek, music critic and present head of RCA Victor's artists & repertoire, in his book, "A Front Seat at the Opera," has this reminiscence of Giacomo Puccini's first visit to New York:

"While he was here (New York), Puccini concerned himself also with a new instrument which was to be of considerable importance to the consumption of his music. The popularity of the phonograph has so increased in recent years that we sometimes forget how old it really is. As far back as 1907 the phonograph was taken seriously by Puccini, taken seriously as a possible source of additional income. Puccini's friend Caruso had already given the phonograph respectability and impetus by making a number of records, including "O Sole Mio." Hence, during his visit Puccini published a letter in the N. Y. Herald discussing copyright laws as effected by reproducing instruments.

He observed that these laws were promulgated when 'no such means of reproducing sound waves were dreamed of.' And, he continued, 'While I am heartily glad to note that eminent interpreters of my music, including fellow countrymen like Messrs. Caruso and Scotti, are not only paid princely honorariums for rendering solos from my operas into phonographs but are also allowed liberal royalties from the sale of the records, it seems strangely inconsistent that the composer of those very themes should not be granted slight pecuniary recognition . . . I am sure that the American people, who are firm believers in the principles of justice, equity and square dealing, will join hands with Italy in the suppression of this form of musical piracy.'

"Furthermore," continues Marek in his excellent book (Allen, Towne & Heath, since succeeded by Crown Publishers; 1948 copyright; $4), which is aptly subcaptioned "an intimate account of the most famous operas, their composers, performers, performances and audiences," Puccini "wished not only to be paid, but also (and sensibly urged: 'If the music box manufacturers desire to reproduce my melodies, it seems to me that I should have the same liberty of selecting the medium and the methbd by which they shall be transmitted to the public as I have in choosing the managers and theatres that produce my operas . . .'"

Johnson's Early Struggles Another U. S. Romance of Business

By JIM WALSH

Although the old Victor Talking Machine Co., forerunner of RCA Victor, developed into the "Mr. Big" of the phono and platter biz, the going wasn't easy in its yearling days.

After acquiring the rights to use Emile Berliner's disk record patents, Eldridge R. Johnson, a Camden machine shop operator, began to turn out "talking machines" in a small way in 1898. Berliner seven-inch records were succeeded by Improved records of the same size, which had Johnson's name on the label as the manufacturer, but in some instances gave the firm name (in a sticker on the back) as the Consolidated Talking Machine Co., of Philadelphia. In 1901, Johnson began to put out seven-inch Victor records and 10-inch Monarchs. These also named Eldridge R. Johnson as the manufacturer, and the dog trademark,

Golden Opportunity Lost

Rous continued: "I missed being a millionaire by the turn of a hair. During my four years of record making I had managed to save $5,000, and when the Victor began to climb up I was urged to put my money in company stock, then selling for $40 a share. I refused to risk it. Figure it out—125 shares at $1,280, the price in 1927, plus all those fat dividends for 17 years!"

An even more revealing glimpse of Victor's early struggles was given by an unidentified associate of Johnson's, quoted in the Talking Machine World for Sept. 15, 1910. Here are some excerpts from the article, headed "A Real Captain of Industry," which dealt with Johnson's career:

"From a little shop 17 feet square to an establishment covering 15 acres of floor space; from an income of $10 a week—when there happened to be $10 in the firm—to the control of a company that does a business of $30,000,000 a year—that is something of a record for 12 years' work. The man who made it is Eldridge Reeves Johnson, inventor and largely owner of Victor talking machine.

"Twelve or 15 years ago the talking machine was a joke—interesting but ludicrous. Today the under the assumed names of S. H. Dudley and Frank Kernell (nearly all comic and whistling specialties); was the baritone of the Hayden Quartet; assistant manager of the Camden recording laboratory; author of the first editions of the Victor Book of the Opera, and for 17 years the record catalog editor. Shortly before his death in 1947, Rous wrote a letter recalling some of his early experiences:

"The Victor people were never afraid to 'gamble' with some new idea . . . They put out a specially good (for the period) record of mine, a classic called 'Put Me Off at Buffalo.' The company was almost down to its last dollar, but they offered one of these records free to every owner of a disk machine in the U. S. and Canada. If I remember right, they sent out 100,000 of these, and were down to the last cent when the returns began to come in . . . During this period Johnson was struggling to improve his product while keeping his financial head above water. He frequently could not raise money to pay the boys in his machine shop, and gave them part of it in stock of the infant company. Lucky boys! Most of those boys became rich."

used by arrangement with the Gramophone & Typewriter Co., of England, didn't appear until late in 1901. That was also when the name, Victor Talking Machine Co., first appeared on the labels.

Twelve-inch records didn't appear until 1903. In that same year a few 14-inch were made for dance purposes but were soon cut out. These were all single-faced, selling until 1905 at $1 for the 10-inch and $1.50 for the 12. Seven-inchers cost 50c, but were succeeded in 1906 by an 8-inch size at 50c. The 8-inch was dropped when Victor brought out double-faced 10-and 12-inch records early in 1909.

The late Sam H. Rous was one of the most useful employees Victor ever had. A baritone singer with long operatic experience, he made hundreds of solo records greatest singers of the world draw a large part of their income from these same machines. This year Caruso will get royalties amounting to about $70,000 from the Victor Co. All languages and dialects are recorded, every country's music is represented, and at the great works in Camden they can send out a machine a minute.

"'I remember'" said one who worked with the inventor in the early days, 'that we had no place for the singers to record in except a loft that you got to with a ladder. I would scurry around, get some poor devil to come and sing for a dollar in real money and then I'd push him up the ladder and try to get a record. Sometimes the voice would record and sometimes we would have nothing but failure.

"'I sometimes think, as I watch Melba and Tetrazzini and Farrar singing in our laboratory, of a woman I got to sing for us once in the beginning. I can see her now, a stout, good-natured creature who had come in the rain without an umbrella to sing for a dollar or so. She had a long feather in her hat and it hung over one ear and dripped water on the floor of the loft.

Unsung Heroes

"'What a time I had getting her up the ladder, too! She was a kindly soul, for she enjoyed singing into the machine so much that she wanted to come back every day and work with us. And then there was a vaudeville chap, down and out, who wore a frock coat and a slouch hat on one side—he used to sing for us. Those were great days.'"

Yes, Victor had some tough going during the first few years, but Johnson must have felt reasonably secure in 1905, when he published a Saturday Evening Post ad chortling that his company had grown in four years from a one-room shop to a big business with an annual volume of $12,000,000!

Meanwhile, he probably hadn't been above accepting payment for inserting advertising plugs into some of his records. On a seven-inch Victor, made by the Haydn Quartet about 1902, the already quoted Sam Rous says, mouthing each syllable as sharply as if he were biting it into the wax:

"Waiter! Bring-me-a-pack-of-Sweet Caporal-cigarets-the-only-kind-worth-smoking!"

What makes it appear more likely that some money changed hands between Sweet Caporal and Johnson is the fact that Sam Rous, like many of today's cigaret endorsers, didn't smoke!

Kidisks a Big Business

By STEVEN R. CARLIN
(Director, Children's A & R)

Seven or eight years ago VARIETY coined a new word, "Kidisk." This meant that the children's branch of the record business had now grown sufficiently large to merit VARIETY's unique form of recognition.

Steve Carlin

Children's records are not entirely new. Some date as far back as 1910. Only in the last decade, however, have records for the small fry grown into big business. Today no major company is without a children's record department.

Each year several hundred different kidisks are released by all companies combined. Interest in children's records is so great that improvements and innovations occur with almost every new release. These improvements are on every level—packaging, subject matter, script technique, dramatization versus straight narration — even the raw materials that go into the factory manufacture of the record.

Twenty years ago, a children's record was made by a solo voice and a piano, and packaged in a brown kraft paper envelope. The record itself was shellac, and easily broken. Since that day, almost every element of production and merchandising of kidisks has completely changed.

To begin with, record companies have discarded the breakable shellac record for children. In its place they have substituted the non-breakable vinylite. Instead of a piano to supply music, a full orchestra is used. Instead of a single voice, a full cast of characters plus a narrator is used. Actors are read for parts just as occurs in a top radio drama. One part, that of "Winnie-the-Pooh" (a top selling RCA Victor album) was read by 42 separate actors until the right voice was found.

Four 'Musts'

When a children's record is planned infinite care is taken to include four major "musts."

First, the story is built around a central character so that the child who listens can immediately identify himself with the character. If this central character is familiar to the child—all the better. "Donald Duck," "Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer" make excellent characters on which to base any adventure.

Secondly, because a child's span of attention is limited, the young listener must have a change of pace every 10 or 15 seconds. The script is written, therefore, so that a sound effect, a figure of music, a new voice, breaks the pattern four or five times a minute.

Thirdly, the production of the record is designed to provide three equally spaced high points per record side, with each side winding up with a semi-climax or "cliff-hanger." Semi-climaxes must build up to a resounding final climax.

Finally the narrator of this story serves as a sort of "host" to the child, setting the mood of the story. Sometimes the narrator has very little to do. He merely opens the story and closes it. Nevertheless, his presence is essential.

Other important factors are the musical backgrounds and sound effects. Music on children's records is not intended to stand out by itself, but serves as an enriching supplement to the story. Sound effects may include both realistic sound and "nonsense sound" designed for laughs alone. A small effect like Ed Wynn's giggle in the "Alice In Wonderland" album may have little story value, but sparks the production throughout.

Other Values

Twenty years ago the kraft paper envelope served only one purpose—to protect the record. Today the envelope or album is an elaborate art production which is designed as an entertaining campanion piece to the record. Some records are packaged in a full color storybook, in which text and picture add to the child's enjoyment. RCA Victor's most recent "package" is called the "6-in-1" album—and is truly the most unique single record package ever released. The "6-in-1" album provides 6 ways for the child to have fun. Included is a coloring book and punch-out finger puppets so that the youngster can perform his own puppet show. The new "6-in-1" albums, contain either a single 45-rm record of two 7-inch 78-rpm records in each package.

An average of about 40 titles are released by RCA Victor each year. This list may include several major storybook albums, a number of 2-record sets, and a long list of single records. Most of the records are based on top motion picture and TV properties with Walt Disney characters ranking high on the list. Mother Goose records and children's classics make up the remainder of the catalog.

The RCA Victor catalog of "Little Nipper" records have a single purpose—child entertainment through wholesome story and song experience. A "Little Nipper" record may incidentally teach a child how to count, but that is merely a by-product. If the child is pleased, if he is moved to sympathy, if he laughs, if he plays the record over and over again, the mission is accomplished.

How successfully the mission is acomplished is indicated by the number of RCA Victor "Little Nipper" records that hit the best selling charts. In 1952, more "Little Nipper" records have reached the best seller list than all of the competition combined. Kidisks have come of age!

Adults and Kidisks

A survey conducted at the request of RCA Victor, showed that 90% of all children's records are bought by parents (by mothers alone 48%, by mothers and fathers 29%, and fathers alone 13%).

The kids, incidentally, don't accompany their parents 60% of the time when children's records are bought.

Consequently, RCA Victor now aims its merchandising at those who really buy children's records—the parents, not the children.

The 4th 'R' for School Kids

Ann another "R"—for records—to the traditional three "R's" of education.

Today, phonographs and records are standard teaching equipment in virtually all of the nation's schools.

This widespread distribution of phonographs in schools indicates the scope of the potential market for recordings expertly selected and prepared for use in education, and the sales opportunities open to record dealers who cultivate this field.

Educational records take many forms. In addition to their prime use in the teaching of music appreciation, some are used to illustrate excellence in instrument and vocal performance. Others contribute to the teaching of historical, geographical, cultural, literary, and artistic subjects. In all cases, educational records help the teacher to illustrate, dramatize, and generally vitalize the subjects to which they can be applied.

'Singing School' Series

Significant among recent developments in the field are records especially designed to accompany song texts. RCA Victor's 10-album "A Singing School" Series, for example, is designed to complement a set of basic music textbooks of the same name, published by C. C. Birchard & Co. The albums, like the books, are graded according to school levels, and were prepared with the cooperation of music editors of the Birchard organization.

More comprehensive in scope is RCA Victor's "Basic Record Library for Elementary Schools." The 370 musical compositions in this library, recorded on 83 records in 21 albums, are designed to provide a planned course of music teaching through primary and upper elementary grades. Complete with teaching notes for instructors, the library was selected and organized by Lilla Belle Pitts, professor of music education at Columbia University's Teachers College, and Gladys Tipton, associate professor of music at the University of California in Los Angeles.

Indicative of the variety of material now offered on educational records, RCA Victor's repertoire also includes foreign language instruction, folk dances of the U. S. and 10 foreign countries with illustrated instructions, and a special album, "Instruments of the Orchestra," which is designed to help the student to identify the sounds of the different instruments.

The coming of the 45 rpm system has given added impetus to the use of records and phonographs in the classroom. It provides the school with relatively low-cost equipment and discs. The compactness of the phonograph and the storage advantages of the tiny records make practical their application in classrooms where space is at a premium. And the simple, automatic mechanism and the non-breakable, easy-to-handle records make record playing easy for the teacher and practical for even the youngest of students.

From the dealer standpoint, music in education also provides a sales potential for the future. Youngsters who learn to appreciate music in the classroom today will be record customers tomorrow. The record dealer who has an active interest in the four "R" of education is building sales for the future as well as the present.

How to Relax Those Recording 'Nerves'

Stand on your head, walk barefoot or whimper like a puppy, if you want to be a successful recording artist. Talent and musical training also count but the singers and musicians who have developed unusual methods of relaxing before the microphones often make the most effective recordings. And nobody blinks an eye if the artist does somersaults or yogi contemplation before the warning red light turns on for a "take." It's the good record that counts.

Rise Stevens, Patrice Munsel and Lisa Kirk, for example, seem to feel better singing in their stocking feet. Arturo Toscanini wouldn't record without a large supply of licorice drops and sugar cubes to munch on. Kirsten Flagstad drinks tea and Ezio Pinza consumes pots of coffee. Jose Iturbi plays and directs the orchestra with an unlighted cigar in his mouth, and Robert Shaw always wears faded denim work pants, shirt and well-worn tennis sneakers while conducting his famous chorale.

Two-piano team (Arthur) Whittemore & (Jack) Lowe wouldn't start a disking session without carrying an old pair of cigaret lighters in their pockets, given them after one of their first public appearances, a ship's concert. Wanda Landowska wears knitted slippers at the pedal of her harpsichord, and eats fresh fruit and rests under a blanket of South American lama skin between takes when recording at her Lakeville (Conn.) home. The Landweska manse in Connecticut, incidentally, is used for recording the harpsichordist because of its unusually good acoustical properties.

Amparo Iturbi, Jose's pianist-sister, finds the hard surface of the recording studio floor best for stretching out for relaxation while listening to playbacks, and Radio City organist Dick Liebert has been known to stand on his head on a nearby piano top to increase his blood circulation, during a taxing recording session at the organ keys.

During the recent recording session of the opera "Carmen," Walter Surovy, husband of prima donna Rise Stevens, spat delicately on her celebrated neck. This is an old Czechoslovakian good-luck custom, observed by the Surovys prior to every recording session, and other important events.

Brilliant young concert pianist William Kapell has been known to dip his hands in a bowl of salt water before launching into the recording of a taxing Prokoffief or Rachmaninoff Concerto.

Add gourmet notes: Patrice Munsel sips a cup of tea with a spoonful of honey, before hitting her high C's.

Though never apparent on the finished records, these are the oddities of personality and interpretation which add that indefinable something of color and authority to the end performance.

The Phonograph Record In Education

By L. V. HOLLWECK
(Mgr., Educational Division, RCA Victor)

Remember the famous "Morning Glory" horn of the Victor Talking Machine Company? Back in the era 1915-1925, that horn was practically the symbol of music appreciation in the schools of America. Any one over 45 can testify that what little music education he or she received, other than in an occasional singing session, was heard and taught through that famous horn.

L. V. Hollweck

Many record companies today recognize more than ever the importance of the school market for their products. In terms of present unit or dollar sales, it may seem unimportant for it certainly cannot compare to pop or classical music. But sales to schools have far-reaching effects—every youngster, exposed to records in school, becomes a potential customer in later years.

Music education at the turn of the century consisted almost exclusively of class singing, or as choral activity in high schools and colleges. If children in the elementary grades learned anything about music in those days it was in spite of what was taught in schools.

There were many music educators back at the time who fought for more and better music in schools, but it took the vision and energy of Dr. Frances Elliot Clark to recognize that the phonograph record was the device which alone could provide the means of accomplishing what were merely idealistic dreams at that time.

Dr. Clark, now a nonagenarian affectionately known by music educators throughout the country as the "Moses of School Music," was music supervisor in Milwaukee when she first experimented with records in the teaching of music. So successful was she, and so convinced of the value of records, that she gave up teaching to accept an offer by the Victor Talking Machine Co. on April 1, 1911, to become Director of its newly formed Educational Department.

Big Force in Education

From that date on, music became a living force in American education. Dr. Clark employed dozens of former music educators who toured the country demonstrating the new teaching and new aid and implementing music in the curriculum as it had never been done before.

Dr. Clark was responsible for the first release of records made especially to fit school needs. In increasing quantities, year after year, came specialized records in the fields of singing, rhythmic activities, folk songs and dances, listening, and records for many other special school activities.

Today music educators everywhere acknowledge the tremendous value of the phonograph record in their overall music program. Without it, their efforts and work would be as incidental as it was in 1900. For in those days, music consisted primarily of a "singing class," perhaps once a week. The school band or orchestra was practically unknown except in a few major cities. Today the school music program has a place of prime importance even in the one- or two-room rural school, thanks to records.

Today's student not only learns to sing, but also develops poise and grace through rhythmic music from phonograph records; he listens to music for the pleasure it affords; he learns to identify instruments which leads eventually to his participation in the school band or orchestra; his physical education is enhanced by the rhythms of records; he learns of other lands, peoples, and dances, through folk song and dance records; he may even learn to be a better typist because of the rhythmic accompaniment of records.

In fields other than music, records are becoming more important, especially in the social studies. Schools use records today to assist the teaching of speech and drama; to bring dramatized history into the classroom; to bring poets and their readings to the student; to teach human relations.

The phonograph record is just coming of age in the schools. How indispensable it has become is shown by the fact that today almost 95% of all schools have phonograph equipment. In the growing field of Audio-Visual Education, the phonograph record is by far the most universally used device. But more important, is the ever increasing realization by schools that records are an inexpensive, vitalizing aid to a better teaching program, that they can provide material not obtainable otherwise. The future of the record in schools is great indeed, with resulting benefits to all concerned—the school, the teacher, the student, and the industry.

Kidisks Boon to Teaching

The three R's of school days are making room for "The Three Little Pigs" and "Snow White."

A visitor in today's classrooms might hear such fables as "Snow White" or Prokoffief's "Peter and the Wolf" coming from RCA Victor 45 rpm phonograp records. The records would be part of the reading lesson. A matter-of-fact male voice would tell in vivid style the stories of the childhood favorites while the kids followed, word for word, in their texts. The narrator would even tell the kids when to turn the page.

This use of children's records is reported by RCA Victor as the result of a survey to determine just what records youngsters want to hear.

Disk Names Were Better Known Than B'way Stars Even Back in Early 1900s

Point never has been made with enough clarity that in the palmy days of the acoustic phonograph, recording artists were much more important personalities to the average American than the more highly-touted celebs of Broadway.

Thousands of persons in larger cities would see John Drew, Ethel Barrymore, et al., but millions bought disks and cylinders by specialists in recording art. In small towns and country, especially, Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Arthur Collins and dozens of others whose names mean little now except to specialitsts in diskology, seemed like members of families in countless homes. Without competition from radio, their records were played over and over until they were known by heart and every little trick of performers' personality was mastered. Each artist had his own individuality, too, instead of trying to sound like somebody else. Billy Murray was always unmistakably "The Denver Nightinggale" and could never be mistaken for Henry Burr, who became known later as "The Dean of Ballad Singers." There never has been a more remarkably versatile and richly talented group of pop artists than those who made records for some 30 years beginning in mid-'90s.

Film stars, no doubt, get more fan mail than Ada Jones, but none more sincere. This pleasant, portly woman, unfortunately subject to epileptic seizures, was the dream girl of millions of record buyers, from 1905 until she died in 1922. She was swamped with proposals of marriage by mail. Australian and Klondike gold miners, basking in the warmth of the soprano voice that issued from the morning glory horns of their old-style phonos, singing "The Bird on Nellie's Hat" or some other hit, wrote letters by the dozen, imploring her to share their lonely lot. Lighthouse keepers also wanted Ada to help them trim the lamps. From the heart of Africa she received "won't you marry me?" appeals. The impassioned correspondents didn't suspect their buxom divinity was already happily married to a vaude performer, Hughey Flaherty, whose fame never approached hers, and was devoted to her little daughter, Sheila. All three are dead now.

Miss Jones' duet partner, Billy Murray, who is the one great surviving link between the primitive phonograph of the '90s (he began making records as a kid in short pants in San Francisco in 1897), recalls that his experiences were somewhat different and more annoying. Murray was well known as a teetotaler, but wherever he went on his concert tours he was approached by some anguished record dealer who informed him there was a drunken bum in the town pokey claiming to be Billy Murray. He remembers one dealer exclaiming: "Gosh, I'm glad to see you! The jailer has just put in a call to the Victor people at Camden and told them to come down and get their star comedian, Billy Murray, before he drinks himself to death!"

Wax Works' Dreamboat

One of the "Nightingales" funniest experiences was with a lady lion tamer with a chorus. Her name wasn't Xantippe, but that will do. Xantippe began calling up Murray's home at Freeport, insisting she was married to him and demanding that he come back to her. This went on until the comic decided the nuisance must stop. So he agreed to meet the gal, and he, his wife, and his pal, Monroe Silver, drove to the rendezvous.

Xantippe proved to be a husky wienie, about the size of half a house. The trio emerged from the car. "Now," said Mrs. Murray, "look these men over and tell us which is your husband?"

Xantippe flicked a scornful eye at Jones and Silver, both of the half-pint variety.

"I'm not married to either one of these middle-aged shrimps!" she said. "The Billy Murray I married was a tall, young, good-lookin' guy!"

Murray had several other experiences with William Murrays who took brides on the fictitious strength of being the most popular singer on platters. But he says one of his proudest moments came when he was walking down a Freeport street, and a middle-aged man stopped and introduced himself.

"Mr. Murray," he said, "you don't know me, but you saved my life once." The man explained that, back around 1905, as a youngster, his firm sent him to China to work in its office there. A couple of weeks after his arrival he was so homesick he was thinking strongly of suicide. Wandering through the "foreign" section of Shanghai, he heard a cylinder phono playing Murray's record of "45 Minutes From Broadway." The tune attracted him so much he bought the machine and that one record, which he played over and over.

"Somehow," he said, "your voice seemed to bring Broadway back to me and I felt almost as if I were back home. As my homesickness wore off, I bought many other records and gradually grew to like China, but I've always given your '45 Minutes From Broadway' credit for saving my life—and I swore that if I ever got back to New York I'd look you up and let you know what you did for me!"

Artists who wanted a chance on the platters found things different in the beginning days of the phono. W. Stanley Grinsted was working in an Orange, N. J., bank, when Edison first began putting out his two-minute cylinders. Grinsted thought it would be "fun" to try making records, so applied to Edison. He had won a New Jersey banjo playing championship, so he was allowed to play accompaniments to "coon songs," using the assumed name of George S. Williams.

A little later it was discovered that Grinsted had a fine bass-baritone voice, so he switched to vocalizing and called himself Frank C. Stanley—Stanley from his given name; Frank from Frank Banta, the Edison staff accompanist; and C. just to round the name out. As Frank C. Stanley, he became world-famous. He organized the Peerless Quartet and managed it until his death in 1910. The leads in the Peerless records were not sung, as is usually the case, by the second tenor, but—in nearly every instance—by the basso organizer and manager.

THE BANTAS—FATHER & SON—PHONO PIONEERS

Examples of sons following in fathers' footsteps aren't common in the phono and platter biz. However, there's one striking instance.

Back in the '90s Frank P. Banta was staff accompanist for Edison. Banta was one of five Edison keyboard pounders whose names began with B.—Fred Bachman, Banta himself, Albert Benzler, C. A. A. Booth and John F. Burckhardt. He also conducted bands and orchestras for all pioneer record companies.

Banta died in 1904, aged 33. In 1916 his son, Frank E. Banta (middle initial keeps him from being a Jr.) became accompanist for banjoist Fred Van Eps and played in the Van Eps Trio. When latter signed up with the 8 Popular Victor Artists troupe, Banta went along as accompanist, remaining with the ensemble until it disbanded in 1928. He played piano on hundreds of Victor disks, both as soloist and accompanist, and also worked to some extent for other platter purveyors. Younger Banta toured Europe as accompanist of The Revelers, famed singing group of early radio days, and caused near-riots in London and Paris hotels by faking strong Yiddish accent and demanding mail for Monroe Silver. (Silver, famed for his "Cohen on the Telephone" monologs, was member of the Eight. He talked in real life as he did when impersonating Cohen, and Banta had fun pretending to be Silver on trips, even though he drove hotel desk men nuts.)

"Junior," as other members of Eight troupe called him, has been for years a staff pianist at NBC. His father's 1904 cylinder of "Violets" was the first successful piano solo recording ever made by Edison. Younger Banta has always leaned to ragtime and jazz style of playing.

WHEN 'HECTOR GRANT' HECKLED HARRY LAUDER

A year or so after Harry Lauder had established himself as one of the recording favorites of the English-speaking world, he was put out no end to learn that somebody by the name of Hector Grant was singing his repertoire for the smaller English companies, such as Edison Bell and Sterling, and imitating him so accurately it was next to impossible to tell the difference between a Grant rendition and one by Lauder himself.

One day the glowering Lauder met Peter Dawson, young Australian bass-baritone who was beginning to be considered a record star. The sawed-off Scotch comedian growled to the equally diminutive Dawson: "Do ye ken a so-and-so by the name of Hector Grant? He's been imitating my records!"

"Oh," Dawson replied casually, "I believe I have heard there's some blighter by that name who makes an occasional record around here."

"Well," growled Lauder, "if you see him just tell him I plan to kill him the first time we meet!"

Dawson promised. Some time later Lauder learned that the little guy from 'Down Under' was the mysterious "Grant." But instead of committing murder he merely remarked: "So it was you all the time? Well, all I can say is, ye ha'e a dommed fine voice!"

Dawson was known for his ability to get under the hide and into the hair of his fellow recorders. He almost drove Nellie Melba frantic, when he sang in a male quartet which was helping her to record a Stephen Foster song, by his incessant, sacrilegious mugging—something to which the great diva, herself an Australian, wasn't accustomed. But she got some revenge when he told her he was from Melbourne, and she characterized it as "that town of parsons, pubs and prostitutes!"

On another occasion, the Russian basso, Feodor Chaliapin, almost had convulsions because of Dawson. The basso was to sing at a convention of hundreds of gramophone dealers, but—as recalled by the late Fred Gaisberg—Dawson followed Chaliapin onto the platform, imitated the Russian's mannerisms of waving his arms, smiled sweetly and, in pretended broken English, announced in a deep voice, "Number 55"—then waved to the pianist to start.

Dawson, still making records after 48 years in the business, probably never will be forgotten or forgiven for the caricatures of ther performers he used to draw on the walls of recording studios. And when his tenor duet partner, Ernest Pike, gave a command performance before the Royal Family and became exceedingly proud of himself, Dawson ragged him so unmercifully that—so those who remember the tenor say—Pike never recovered from the onslaught to the day of his death.

Early Day 'Oscars'

Nowadays when a performer makes a platter selling a million the artist is given a gold pressing of the big-time piece of wax. In earlier years recognition took different forms.

"The Denver Nightingale," Billy Murray, was Victor's top seller for more than 20 years. As token of appreciation, Murray was presented with a watch. Instead of figures to indicate the hour, the timepiece dial showed his name, Billy Murray—with B for 1 o'clock, I for two, and so on, around to Y for 12. Since comic's name contained only 11 letters, the space for 6 o'clock was occupied by the Victor dog trademark.

Back in 1905, Victor's British affiliate, the Gramophone Co., presented a unique bracelet to the first popular woman violin recording artist, Marie Hall. Gew-gaw, made of gold and pearls, displayed a miniature violin, a "tapering arm gramophone" and seven tiny gold records, representing gal's best sellers. (Maybe that's where the present day gold record idea comes from!).

Edison's 'Great American Tenor'

After Caruso's Victor records were a sensational hit, other companies began trying to find operatic tenors whose efforts would compare with his. That gave some of the wags at Edison an idea.

A popular recording comedian, Byron G. Harlan, had a high tenor voice and, although he didn't know any foreign languages, he possessed a knack of singing a mess of gibberish so that it sounded like about any lingo you preferred. He and Bob Gaylor, a staff pianist, got together. Harlan recorded what purported to be an operatic aria while Gaylor faked the accompaniment.

Then, proudly proclaiming he had found "the great American tenor," Gaylor played the record for some of the Edison staff critics. They were enraptured. They couldn't say enough in praise of the Great Unknown's superb voice, impeccable technique, immaculate phrasing, etc. There was almost a riot when Gaylor grinningly told the truth.

The gag came to Thomas A. Edison's attention and gave him a belly laugh. Thereafter, when he met Harlan, he would place his hand on his heart, bow obsequiously, and say:

"Ah, the great American tenor!"

CREDIT OPERA UPBEAT IN U.S. TO LP'S

By ARTHUR BRONSON

Interest in opera in America is sharply resurging — thanks to LPs. The long-playing disk has not only been a boon to the recording industry in general; it's started a boom for opera via its full-length opera albums.

A new market has opened up for opera LPs, especially in this country, where opera presentations are not generally available. In many areas, these disks are the only opportunity to hear opera. The public is getting a chance to hear things it never heard before. Certain operas, completely neglected and forgotten, are now available on LPs, and people are getting increasingly interested in them.

Thanks to LPs, there are 128 complete operas in various company catalogs, from Mozart to Gershwin. The LP brought a boom in full-length operas for the simple, twofold reason that they cost less and take up little space. A full-length opera that utilized 18 records of 78 rpm, takes up three disks in LP. A "L'Amico Fritz" recording that sold at $25.92 in 78s, sells for $11.90 in LPs. No wonder LP has created an unprecedented demand for full-length operas.

Rosters

RCA Victor has 15 complete operas in its LP list. Most are in the standard rep — Verdi, Mozart, Puccini — familiar works like "Aida," "Traviata" and "Boheme," with well-known Met Opera stars as the leads. RCA calls it a boom market in operas. Its "Carmen," with Rise Stevens, has been a hot seller; its "Traviata," a broadcast performance of Arturo Toscanini with the NBC Symphony Orchestra and soloists, is another bestseller. Company has great hopes for "Il Trovatore," with an all-star cast of Jussi B[illegible]ing, Leonard Warren, Zinka Milanov and Fedora Barbieri, due in October.

Columbia has 20 full operas on LP, most of them also in the familiar, popular repertoire. But along with the "Bohemes" and "Hansel & Gretels" are some modern works, like "Wozzek" and "The Medium," and a few neglected scores, like Berg's "Lulu." Tie-in with the Metropolitan Opera Assn., with issuance of a half-dozen "official" Met albums, has hypoed sales.

Decca has no full operas out yet, but does have LPs devoted to opera arias and excerpts. It also has a recording of Rachmaninoff's "Miserly Night," with the Little Orchestra Society, not yet released.

Of the smaller companies, Urania has 18 full-length operas on LP, mostly German.

Heaviest catalog, surprisingly, is Cetra-Soria's, which boasts 42 full-length operas in its list. These are mostly Italian, with many unfamiliar ones among them. Cetra pioneered with early works of famed composers, or with works of early opera composers, none of which was heretofore available in the U. S. Of its 42 operas, 32 of them are still available only on the Cetra label. In addition to its "rare" or scarce works, Cetra is now trying to fill out its catalog. It now has 11 Verdi operas in its list, most of them his unfamiliar ones, and it's trying to add the more familiar scores.

VICTOR'S OCTET AND 'ORDER OF BEARDS'

For many years prior to the radio era, the Victor Talking Machine Co. was the largest user of national advertising. There was scarcely an important magazine or large newspaper in which Victor advertising didn't regularly appear.

But one of the most effective methods of Victor publicity was the show biz troupe known as the Eight Popular (or Famous) Victor Artists. Managed by Henry Burr, later known as "The Dean of Ballad Singers," it included some of the most popular performers in the annals of platter biz. From 1921 to 1925 the Eight consisted of Burr and the other three members of the Peerless Quartet—Al, Campbell, John Meyer and Frank Croxton; Billy Murray, comedian; Monroe Silver, the "Cohen on the Telephone" monolog specialist; Rudy Wiedoeft, probably the greatest saxophone player; and Frank Banta, pianist. Only Murray and Banta are still alive. Murray and Burr were the top pop artists of horn recording. Murray's records had the highest average individual sale, while Burr made more titles than anyone else.

The troupe played everything in the U.S. and Canada from tank towns to Broadway and was a sellout wherever it went. At Appleton, Wis., a town of less than 2,000, it drew a crowd of 1,600 eager to see their phono idols in the flesh. Engaged to appear at one of the big Broadway film houses for 30 minutes between screenings, the Eight went over so big the picture was taken off and they became the entire program.

There was plenty of skylarking on the Eight's three-month concert tours. To relieve the travel tedium, the boys organized The Order of Beards. They adorned their faces with long red or black beards, equipped themselves with small hatchets and stalked through the train, waving hatchets and muttering in their beards sounds that passed for Russian. Nervous passengers took them for bolshevik conspirators and became alarmed. It was lots of fun.

Everybody belonged to the Beards except Burr, who usually remained in his compartment and worried about whether he would be in voice at the next show. But finally he heard about the Order and felt hurt because he hadn't been invited to join. To placate him the other seven said they'd hold a meeting that afternoon and vote on whether to admit him.

At the next stop Silver left the train long enough to buy some licorice. Soon afterward, the troupe went into a huddle in a compartment, leaving their star tenor-manager fretting anxiously outside. They remained two hours. Then Murray emerged, holding a hat.

"I'm sorry, Hank!" he said gently. "You were blackballed!" He pointed to the interior of the hat, where seven balled-up pieces of licorice were on display.

Burr quivered with rage. His voice less silvery than usual, he asked: "Didn't any of you guys vote for me?" Assured no one had, he tossed such a tantrum that his associates reconvened in short order, reconsidered, assured him the blackballing was just a joke and he had been made a full member of the Order of Beards!

Second annual birthday dinner for W. C. Handy, sponsored by the W. C. Handy Foundation for the Blind and originally skedded for Nov. 17 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N. Y., has been switched to Nov. 13.

Modern Record Industry's New Ballyhoo Horizons

By JOHN W. GRIFFIN

(Executive Secretary, RIAA)

Seventy-five years ago, when Thomas A. Edison made his first notations about a device which could record and reproduce the human voice, the great inventive genius may have envisioned his brainchild as one of his most important contributions to civilization. It is fairly certain, however, that he could not foresee a future in which millions of recordings are sold every year from vast and varied catalogs, nor a future in which his invention was the forerunner and the backbone of such industries as radio and radio broadcasting, phonographs and even motion pictures and television.

Thirty years ago, when the modern recording industry was really born, hardly any one envisioned these same happenings. In fact, it has been less than a year that the many phonograph record manufacturers gathered together to form an industry-wide association in the hope of benfiting the manufacturers, the distributors, dealers, coin machine operators, disk jockeys, the general public, and the many other facets of the recording and reproducing industries.

Only two months ago, the record industry, through the Record Industry Association of America, laid plans for a cooperative promotion campaign to reinterest the consumer in recordings. Very few industries can gain as much from a cooperative promotion campaign as can the recording industry. It is a well established fact that consumers rarely buy a record because of the label or the manufacturer's position in the industry. It is the recorded work, the performance and/or the artists's name which entices the record buyer to make a purchase. The manufacturer who releases a recording of the desired material, the desired performance, or by a desired artist will make the sale—no matter the logotype on the label. Thus, each manufacturer stands or falls on his catalog.

A promotional campaign which centers public interest on the various types of recordings available to the public seems destined to benefit all record manufacturers without any one manufacturer walking off with a large share of the publicity than any other label. It is on this basis that the RIAA's Industry Promotion Committee decided to stage an experimental promotion campaign designed to stimulate public interest in records and record artists in general.

Hartford the Kickoff

Such a campaign is now under way in Hartford, Conn., under the over-all title, "Greater Hartford Record Festival." With the cooperation of all 43 member firms of the RIAA, the Industry Promotion Committee is staging a series of in-person concerts in Hartford which will give the public the opportunity to meet record artists in all categories of musical endeavor. The events themselves serve as the basis for merchandising, advertising, promoting and publicizing recorded musical, dramatic and literary works being issued by all the labels.

The experimental promotion campaign in Hartford is but one of the RIAA's plans to stimulate record sales.

A further attempt to increase interest in and sales of recordings is being made through cooperative efforts with the Radio & Television Manufacturers' Association's Phonograph Industry Committee. RIAA and RTMA representatives are scheduled to meet for the purpose of working out a program which could result in additional record playing equipment being made available to the public. One of the hopes here is to interest radio and television manufacturers to increase the number of record playing radio-television combination sets being manufactured.

The RIAA also worked for the adoption of a new fair trade law during the last session of Congress. Now the law has been passed and the manufacturers are able to take advantage of its provisions according to their individual desires.

The various RIAA committees which have been formed are presently meeting to work out the problems which face the entire industry. As time goes on, additional committees for additional purposes will undoubtedly be formed from among the staffs of the 43 members of the RIAA.

In any event, the RIAA does exist and is in operation on behalf of all its members and the people with whom they do business. It is to be hoped that the future will give the RIAA further opportunity to serve all.

Disk Comic Who Was Hanged

Fact that a funny man's life frequently winds up in tragedy has never been better exemplified than in unhappy end of George Washington Johnson.

Johnson, a burly Negro, was born into slavery on a Virginia plantation. He went to Washington, D. C., where he made a living singing and whistling on the streets. When Columbia and Berliner opened studios in the capital, Johnson made thousands of records, one at a time, of his own "Laughing Song" and Sam Devere's "Whistling Coon." There were a few other numbers in his repertoire, but these were the most important.

Johnson became prosperous and famous, and he and his wife went on a tour with a minstrel troupe. Usually one of the most genial of men, his personality changed when he drank. In a drunken rage, Johnson threw his wife out a window, and was hanged for murder. By 1910 his records had either been cut out of all the catalogs or remade by other artists. But "Johnson's Laughing Song" is still a favorite with amateur minstrel shows and, by an odd twist, an imitation of Johnson's version, which an English comedian, Burt Shepard, made for Gramophone, has been a big seller throughout the world. It has been particularly popular in the Oriental countries such as India, and may have sold over 1,000,000 platters in that part of the world alone.

BROADCASTERS SWING TO '45' FOR STREAMLINED OPERATION

The platter can be tearful, but the chatter must be cheerful. That could be a rule-of-thumb for the disk jockey. But talent is mixed with a measure of toil in the talk-and-tune shops. Part of a deejay's job is pickin' 'em out and puttin' 'em on and takin' 'em off, and all that makes for less labor makes, too, for more cheer in the chatter.

That's one reason more and more radio stations are installing the simpler, smaller, lighter-weight 45 rpm record-playing equipment and libraries of "45" disks. Among the latest to do so are WBRE, Wilkes-Barre; WHP, Harrisburg; WOKY, Milwaukee; WQXI, Atlanta; WACO, Waco; KFJZ, Fort Worth; and KSFO, San Francisco.

In the days between Edison's invention of the phonograph and Eldridge R. Johnson's introduction of the constant-speed spring motor, the life of a disk jockey would have been rough indeed. Johnson's spring motor was the first word in a saga of which the "45" system is the latest. Today, the 45-rpm record has become as much a part of the deejay's standard equipment as his musical know-how.

The industry's swing to "45" began nearly a year and a half ago when Philadelphia's WFIL went "45" with a fanfare of promotion. WFIL's reasons for going "45"—reasons which apply to and continue to attract other stations—were summed up by Roger W. Clipp, the station's general manager.

"In the 45-rpm system we have found the answers to numerous problems which confront broadcasters of recorded music programs," he said. "The small size of the records and the simplicity of the equipment effect a tremendous saving in valuable storage space, facilitate programming and record handling by the disk jockey and record librarian, and streamline the entire recorded music operation. To these considerations must be added the superior reproduction quality and fidelity of 45-rpm records which provide increased listening pleasure for our audiences."

Deejays' Delight

Up in Boston, Bob Clayton of WHDH, one of the city's top DJs, tells how the 45-rpm disks facilitate record handling. He normally uses 110 records in his weekly music schedules. Prior to WHDH's swing to 45, he recalls, he and Nancie Cole, the station's music librarian, had to select and tote some 47 pounds of records for each week's production. With the 45-rpms the weekly load of 110 records weighs less than seven pounds. Furthermore, the small single-size 45s are easier to carry and are non-breakable.

Clayton's enthusiasm is shared by many other top platter-chatterers who have joined the "45" bandwagon, including Martin Block, WNEW, New York; LeRoy Miller and Bob Horn, WFIL, Philadelphia; Dave Starling, KFI, Los Angeles; Tom Brown, WHK, Cleveland; Ed Stevens, WERE, Cleveland; Jay Miltner, WTAM, Cleveland; and Jack the Bell Boy, WXYZ, Detroit.

From the station's standpoint, the 45 rpm system offers substantial savings in money, time, and space. Because the 45 rpm disk is only seven inches in diameter, and is made in a single standard size for all classifications of recorded music, it enables the broadcaster to substantially reduce his record storage requirements and standardize facilities. More than 150 of the tiny disks can be stored in a single foot of space, and lighter, less costly storage racks can be used.

To facilitate adoption of 45-rpm facilities by broadcasters, RCA Victor provides a special kit of materials with which station personnel can quickly and easily convert any type of 70-C or 70-D transscription turntables to play the new records.

Foreign-Language Records Find Large Market in U. S.

By FRANK S. AMARU

(Manager, International Record Sales, Domestic Dept.)

The wide-spread popularity of Latin American and International music in this country has opened up an entirely new market which, today, is being extensively developed to yield additional record sales. It is a unique market, comprised of steady and consistent buyers who regularly keep abreast of the new releases.

There are now many dealers throughout the country specializing in the sale of recordings in one or more foreign languages. These are located in sections of the country where there is a large population of one or more foreign derivations—for example, Polish in New England and the middle west, Slovanian in the Cleveland area, and Spanish in New York, Miami, California, and the southwest. An outstanding example is the J. L. Hudson Co., in Detroit, one of the largest department stores in the midwest, which for the past three years has carried a complete International line in stock.

Selection of International and Latin American music for recording is, as a rule, based upon the popularity of the songs in their countries of origin, but sometimes, upon the popularity they have achieved among the foreign populations in this country. Recently, International music has exerted a profound influence on the pop field in this country. Such tunes as "Kiss of Fire," "Auf Weiderseh'n," and "Padam, Padam" originated in the foreign field and are also listed in their original versions.

With well-planned exploitations, based on a careful survey and knowledge of the immediate market, the record dealer today can supplement his pop and classical business by building a demand for Latin American, German, Italian, French or Polish recording artists whose colorful songs and native dances are finding greater acceptance in this country.

Although International recordings have been "big" since the earliest phonographs, they are indisputably at their peak today. There are three outstanding groups of buyers for this type of disk—the foreign-speaking population, the language students, and the many American devotees of International music. Direct contact is being made with this potential market in each city through foreign language newspapers and radio stations which reach a large number of these special listeners. Language students in local colleges are also approached through ads in their campus newspapers, as well as through campus language clubs, which have been supplying mailing lists of students undergoing instruction.

Local folk dance schools and clubs provide another important contact for the enterprising record dealer. The schools will often buy the records for use in their classes, and will further advise their pupils that many of the records to which they have been dancing are available at stores of local dealers. Exploitation of these potential sales markets, plus the imaginative use of such dealer aids as the record catalogues, window streamers, and colored blowups, are helping to develop an entirely new and reliable market for dealers.

The ever-growing interest in native and regional music is responsible for this constantly expanding market. Today, it is in a position of influence never before contemplated, and is consequently providing an even greater field for expansion of record sales.

Country-Westerns No Longer 'Poor Relations' of Disk Biz

By STEPHEN H. SHOLES

(Country-Western A&R)

The tremendous upsurge in the popularity of country-western music—especially during the past 10 years—has brought about a noticeable increase, not only in the number of top country stars on disks, but also in the amount of first-class tune material available in this previously specialized field. The recent appropriation of a good deal of this country music by the neighboring pop field is a further indication that country-western music has come of age.

The spread of country music to the city, a movement brought on in large part by the population shifts of the last war, has created a more general market than ever before. The fact that many northerners underwent military training in the south and were more or less forcibly exposed to that region's favorites, and that an almost equal number of southerners moved north, is partly responsible for the much wider popularity country-western music is enjoying today. An equally important factor is the rapid growth of country-western deejay shows in all parts of the country—plus live radio performances motivated by the increase in inexpensive, live talent.

What was once considered a peculiar characteristic of the market—the strictly regional appeal of certain artists—has almost completely disappeared. There are still performers whose popularity is fairly limited, but as a rule, once a country performer is well established today his appeal is universal. The exception, of course, is the new artist whose reputation, and sales, are at first limited to his home area—attributable to a certain local pride—but once he has begun to catch on, his drawing power is just as great in one part of the country market as in another.

Loyal Fans

Furthermore, country fans are the most loyal in the platter business, and a star's followers will usually stick with him for the duration of his career and longer—Jimmie Rodgers has been dead nearly 20 years, but he still has three RCA Victor top-selling albums. Although material is naturally very important, an established star can sing almost any type of song and still reach a large majority of his fans. Hank Snow, for instance, has recorded several "sacred" songs, and while these will not have the same sale as his country offerings, they will be purchased largely by the same people.

The rocketing of country-western music to the bigtime is partly evidenced by the number of tunes originally waxed on country lists that have been taken over by pop vocalists and gained greater national prominence. Pee Wee King's "Tennessee Waltz" and "Slowpoke" and Eddy Arnold's "Anytime," "I'll Hold You in My Heart," and "Just a Little Lovin'" are cases in point. In the final analysis, the pop market has come visiting in the hillbilly field because of the vastly improved quality of country-western songs.

Although, in many instances, country and pop platters will appeal to the same public, there is a basic difference between the two in presentation. Vocally, they are becoming less and less different—country artists are now using echo chambers, multiple recording, and other gimmicks—but there is still a separating void between their philosophies. Country artists rely on a simple, sincere style, and the current widening of their market shows that sincerity pays off over the record counters.

There's a Difference

The growth of country music in popularity and the limited number of country artists, compared with pop artists, have combined to foster a high rate of competition among the former. This is most evident among genuine country artists, as distinguished from western artists, because in recent years the popularity of top country stars has shown practically no regional differences. Western music, on the other hand, has veered closer and closer to the pop in its presentation—the western bands are more strictly built along the lines of pop bands—and their disks are almost exclusively bought by admirers of pop music.

The growth of a top country star today is, like its parallel in the pop field, often a matter of hitting the right media at the right time. Generally, this means personal appearances with radio and TV work, and then, if the artist has created enough of a stir, signing him to a recording contract and the ensuing job of building him into a top-seller. Eddy Arnold is a good example. After playing and singing with Pee Wee King's band for some time, Arnold went out on his own, created an impression via personals and radio, and was signed by RCA Victor.

Along with the growth of the market, the country music field has seen more stars develop in the past 10 years than in earlier decades. One reason is that these singers and instrumentalists have changed with the times and kept their presentation and appeal in step with popular tastes. Their recordings have consequently brought them before an increasingly large public, until today they are no longer the "poor cousins" of the business, but a potent musical force in themselves.

Engineering Advances In Records Over the Years

By ALBERT PULLEY
(Chief Recording Engineer)

In the relatively few years since Edison's invention of the phonograph—and especially since the turn of the century when Emile Berliner's development of the platter-type disk foredoomed the cylinder record—engineering advances in disking and disk processing have been so numerous as to give the industry one hypo after another. Most surprising of all, perhaps, is the fact that the developments of the past few years—the advances that have brought records to a higher state of perfection than ever before—are not nearly so new as most platter buyers believe.

As an example, even the size of the present-day 45 rpm platter is practically the same as some originally produced in 1887, the earlier disks being only a fraction of an inch smaller from rim to hole. Starting from what was practically a seven-inch, 78 rpm, record, the Victor Co. jumped to 10-inch platters that were made to spin at from 50 to 90 rpm. This was, in turn, made possible by the advent of the adjustable, spring-wound phonograph, another major development of about the same period, and one made necessary by the fast-growing record business. From here it was a logical step to the 10 and 12-inch single-faced disks in 1903, and eventually to the 10 and 12-inch double-faced disks of 1923. All of these records were made accaustically.

The first revolution in the record art, following the actual invention of the phonograph and the latter introduction of the platter-type record, was the beginning of electrical disking in 1925. The first of these platters was made by Mme. Olga Samaroff, pianist—a pairing of works by Brahms and Mendelssohn. In addition to its vastly improved sound, the new electrical recording increased the frequency range of records to about 6,500 cycles. Electrical reproduction appeared on the scene simultaneously and the revolution was complete.

Although long-playing disks have completely altered the picture in recent years, they are by no means the first to have appeared in the record business. As early as 1903 Victor introduced a 14-inch platter which was designed to spin at about 50 rpm for best results—according to the advice printed on the label. These platters, which were on the market for some time, provided about 10 to 15 minutes of music. In 1931, Victor introduced the first version of today's 33⅓ rpm disk in a line devoted exclusively to classical repertoire. There was found to be insufficient demand for records of this speed at the time, however, and the line was therefore abandoned.

Significant Strides

Despite this period of experimentation with the long-play disk, the history of recording from Eldridge Johnson's Camden machine shop to the late 1940s is almost exclusively that of the 78 rpm platter, and significant advances were made on 78s during the late '30s. In 1935 the frequency range was boosted to 7,500 cycles, by 1938 it had been increased to 10,000, and in the early '40s it was boosted as high as 12-to-15,000 cycles. Although the idea for the present 45 rpm disk was conceived by RCA Victor as early as 1939 and continually developed through 1940, no break-through was possible during the war years, and the relatively few records made continued to be brought out at 78 rpm.

Originally, sounds were grooved directly onto wax, and once cut, they were irrevocable. In contrast, tape-recording affords the artist great flexibility in improving his work. By permitting immediate playback, it allows him to evaluate his work instantly and make improvements on the spot. In addition, it permits multiple "takes" for choice, with final selection made from whole takes or portions of takes.

Culminating the constant progress down through the years, and resulting directly from RCA Victor's own long-range research program, is the company's recently announced "New Orthophonic Sound." Considered to be a high-water-mark in the history of sound on records, the New Orthophonic Sound brings to the home performances more nearly equal to the original studio performances than has been possible heretofore.

With the achievement of this new sound, a cycle that began with Edison's recording of "Mary Had a Little Lamb" in 1877 has been completed. No doubt the future holds still more startling advances, but today's music lover has a medium of reproduction in both phonograph instruments and records which certainly surpasses the wildest imaginings of the past.

For this reason alone, the place of the last 75 years as an epoch in cultural history would be assured.

One Disk's 40,444 Spins

Present-day juke operators think they're lucky if they get 200 plays out of a platter. They should have been around in the happy days when the life of a record was longer.

That was particularly true of the now obsolete vertical-cut disks and cylinders. Pathe used to guarantee a record would play at least 1,000 times without signs of wear. Edison Blue Amberol cylinders were played 3,000 times without deterioration, and in laboratory tests Edison Diamond Disks were spun 6,000 times and were as good as new at the finish.

But probably the all-time long-play champion was a U. S. Everlasting cylinder, "Peter Piper," a xylophone solo by the company's musical director, Albert Benzler. This record was placed on a machine in a Cleveland penny arcade, stayed there seven months and, by automatic count, was played 40,444 times. Taken off the juke, it was, according to the Talking Machine World, still as good as new.

Instead of bringing in a nickel at a time, the cylinder spun for 1c a performance. Even so, it brought the happy arcade operator $404.44. Since it cost only 35c, he made 115,000% profit!

Who says the "good old days" weren't the good old days?

Science Improves Old Disks

It doesn't seem possible that anyone would suggest improving on the recorded voice of the immortal Caruso, but that's what happened at RCA Victor a while back, and it worked too.

The phonograph voices of Caruso, Scotti, Farrar, Schumann-Heink and other early-century songbirds were resurrected by a magnetic miracle that made them clearer and truer than when recorded.

The new records comprise the Treasury of Immortal Performances. The project started three years ago, directed by Albert Pulley, the company's chief recording engineer, in New York.

Six sound technicians were assigned to use microscopes on the old records. They followed each sound groove, looking for bumps, dents, and other irregularities. Most of these were due to mechanical causes. With sharp instruments, they smoothed all the imperfections they could see.

Next, a sound expert listened to the music played from the smoothed records. He marked spots of imperfection that the microscopes missed. Records were reexamined and smoothed as many as six times.

After that, the music on the old record was transferred to magnetic recording tape, a paper-thin, single strand half as wide as a postage stamp. Sound is recorded on the tape by magnetism, a process that puts nothing visible on the record, and that strings the sound record out in a line hundreds of feet long.

The tape translates the sound directly into electric current, which in turn runs a speaker that converts it into sound which is a perfect reproduction of whatever was on the record. This process shows up further faults. Some of these are tiny, popping sounds.

A pop may take up nearly an inch length of tape. This inch is cut out with scissors and the remaining tape ends are rejoined. The loss of tape is so small that the music is not affected.

There remain, finally, the faults in singing or in instrumental music that were originally recorded. This music, as it comes from the speaker, is a combination of many tones or sound frequencies. The speaker can select part of these sounds and make them either louder or softer, and this change corrects singing and playing faults.

If the voice lacks clearness, part of the frequencies, but not all of them, are made louder. If too shrill, part of the frequencies, but again not all of them, are made softer.

When all the faults have been corrected, the voice of the electrical speaker is recorded on a new master record—a reproduction of the old, but a better record than the original.

HMV Label of Gramophone, Ltd. Keyed Growth of Phono Biz

Recent announcement of RCA Victor's distribution of the His Master's Voice recordings of the British Gramophone Co. on the new speeds in the U. S. brings a famed catalog, formerly only sparsely represented by imports, strong onto the American scene.

The Gramophone Co., Ltd., was founded in England in 1898 with an Englishman, Trevor Williams, as its first president and an American, Barry Owen, as its managing director.

Branches were quickly established throughout Europe and in the East and its first recording engineer—Fred Gaisberg, who was born in Washington—was sent on a series of recording tours which yielded a rich haul in artists and established the reputation of the famous HMV catalog.

Gaisberg's greatest discovery was Enrico Caruso, whom he recorded in Milan in 1901. It is probable that the engagement of Caruso and the adoption of the dog trademark did more than anything else to establish the record industry on a firm basis, convince music lovers that the gramophone was more than a toy, and carry the fame of the company throughout the world. After Caruso there followed a host of singers scarcely less famous—Melba, Tetrazzini, Chaliapin, Tita Ruffo and great instrumentalists such as Paderewski and Kubelik.

The picture of the dog listening to the gramophone was painted by a little-known artist, Francis Barraud, in 1899, and was offered by him to the Edison Phonograph Co.—which politely declined. The Gramophone Co. agreed to buy it if he painted out the phonograph and substituted a gramophone. Up to that time the company had used a trademark which it still owns: The Recording Angel, a heavenly figure seated on a disk tracing sound with a stylus. The new picture of the dog instantly captured the public imagination and has remained world-famous ever since. Its counterpart is well-known in the Western Hemisphere as the trademark of Radio Corp. of America and its affiliated companies.

Abortive Hybrid Co.

Some years after its foundation, the directors of the Gramophone Co. decided to add the manufacture of a typewriter to its activities and the name of the company was actually changed to the Gramophone & Typewriter Co., Ltd., but the progress of the gramophone business was so great that the typewriter was abandoned and the name of the company reverted to its original form. Nevertheless, one of the old typewriters still reposes in the company's museum in England as a memorial of an episode that is now forgotten. It is a very cumbersome and complicated instrument.

Although the company was established first in England, all records were manufactured at Hanover in Germany, and the gramophones themselves were imported from America. It was not until 1911 that the Gramophone Co. opened its factory at Hayes, near London, a plant that has now grown to cover more than 70 acres so as to cope with the expanding activities of His Master's Voice. In addition to records, the company now makes radio, television, domestic appliances and does much electrical engineering work. It has recording and manufacturing facilities in France, Germany, Scandinavia, Spain, Italy, Turkey, India and Australia, and distributors or branches throughout the East Hemisphere.

Fred Gaisberg, the first recording engineer and artists' manager, who had been an assistant of Emile Berliner, inventor of the gramophone, came to London in 1898 for an intended visit of six weeks, and stayed on until his death in London in 1951. In one lifetime, the gramophone had grown from a toy to an instrument which influences the musical life of all nations and retains forever the art of the greatest performers.

Collecting Rare Records A Fascinating Business

Don't throw out those ancient phonograph records up in the attic. They may have a rare artistic and intrinsic value. Approximately one in every 5,000 old records submitted for sale to collectors turns out to be a long-lost original.

There is a collector for almost every kind of record. Some seek the black label records of Marian Anderson recorded 10 years before she became a Red Seal or classical artist. Others collect records made by Enrico Caruso in France and Italy or complete sets of "Original Dixieland Jazz Band." One collector has 183 records by John McCormack, another 118 versions of "Stardust."

Many collect records of famous voices such as those of the Presidents, comedy monologs, oldtime jazz, Edison cylindrical records and even the phonographs which play them, or every recording of a particular operatic aria. There are also collections of laughing, snoring and sneezing records. Prices generally range from 5c and 10c in the rummage marts, to $150 and $200 in the record collectors' shops. A Mary Garden platter of the "Card Scene" from "Carmen", recently was sold for $45, and the Elena Gerhardt recordings, for the Hugo Wolff Society, for $200. A disk by England's Sir Charles Santley of an aria from "Marriage of Figaro" hit an all-time high of $400.

To the distress of some collectors and the acclaim of others, RCA Victor has been currently ransacking its vaults of original masters for its "Treasury of Immortal Performances," a reissue of historic recordings by the operatic and concert titans of the past.

The company's record treasury, for instance, includes the first release of a John McCormack recording of the "O Konig" aria from "Tristan and Isolde." The existence of this experimental recording has long been known to collectors, but it wasn't until recently that a test pressing was discovered hidden away in the Countess Lily McCormack's home in Ireland. Praise by Ernest Newman and writer Vincent Sheehan led to its inclusion in the new "Treasury" series.

Jenny Lind's Whodunit Disk

The currently most sought-after record is considered to be the oft-rumored recording, supposedly made by Jenny Lind to preserve her voice for posterity. Second to the Lind waxing are the disks said to have been cut by Jean DeReszke, but with which he was dissatisfied and which he ordered destroyed. Reportedly few copies were saved, but they have never appeared on the market.

The dramatic readings by Sarah Bernhardt, the farewell concert by Nellie Melba at Covent Garden, old labels such as Zonophone and Fonotipia, and the Lilli Lehman recordings also are highly prized. A typical rarity are the made-in-Warsaw (Poland) disks made by Battistini, the baritone, who never came to America because he was in mortal fear of seasickness. Choicest of the Battistini recordings are those he made as "Werther," for which opera composer Massenet transposed the key from tenor to baritone to accommodate the singer.

Among the famous collectors with large private collections are Eugene G. Grace, president of Bethlehem Steel; Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, publisher Alfred A. Knopf, Clifford Odets, Ludwig Bemelmans, Montgomery Clift, Peter Arno, Gregory Peck, Lady Louise Mountbatten, Joseph Schildkraut, the former Mrs. Anthony Eden and one of the largest collections, which numbers 50,000, is owned by labor arbitrator Edward F. Addis.

Odds and Ends of Phono Curiosa

Some odds and ends of the phonograph's first 75 years:

Smallest record offered for sale probably was a 4-inch Durium, Jr., playing on one side and sold in dime stores in early 1930s for 5c each. Platter was semi-flexible and made of same material as the 10-inch Hit-of-the-Week, which sold for 15c in 1929-30. For several years beginning in 1914 Columbia had the single-faced 5½-inch Little Wonder, which fetched a dime, and Emerson had a rival record, same size and price.

Lowest price at which double-faced 10-inch record ever sold probably was 10c. Madison records, made by Grey Gull, were available for this price in Woolworth five-and-dimes around 1930.

Highest priced single disks sold in regular way, and not as collectors' items, probably were several Victor Red Seal versions of "Lucia Sextet" at $7 each. (This excludes the latter-day Long Players.)

The 10-inch record with shortest playing time: Nation's Forum platter, "From the Battlefields of France," made in 1918 by General John J. Pershing. Running time: 28 seconds. Platter autographed by the General.

Most expensive phonograph offered as part of company's regular line: French Gothic model New Edison cataloged in 1920 by Thomas A. Edison, Inc. Judging by picture, it resembled a three-story house with hand-carved, exterior decorations, and the asking price was $6,000. It was asked but not obtained. Oldtimers at Edison Lab say only one model was made. Never sold, when Edison went out of the phono biz in '29, the impressive monster was presented to Yale U. to get it out of the way.

Cheapest phonos: Hand-cranked models with cardboard horns, harking back in design to early Berliner Gramophone, which mail order firms, domiciled in Philadelphia, offered in 1916 for as low as 45c. Because of direct connection from reproducer to horn they sounded better than some cabinet models of period.

Largest records: 20-inch hill-and-dale disks, made in England, around 1906, by Neophone and Pathe companies. Platters had extremely coarse grooves to bring out great volume, and playing time was only about that of ordinary 10-inch disks. In 1914 a British firm produced Marathon hill-and-dale (vertical-cut) 12-inch platters that ran more than 8 minutes to a side—the first real "long players."

"Mary had a little lamb," barely understandable, was the first sound of the phonograph seventy-five years ago. With its sound track crudely embossed on a metal-foil cylinder, Edison's invention remained a scientific novelty for ten years.

It then became a side-show novelty, when Chichester Bell and Charles S. Tainter thought of cutting grooves in a wax cylinder. This gave more lifelike sound, and visionaries saw big things ahead for the marvelous invention—it would someday be possible to make a talking doll! Meanwhile the phonograph made money as a nickelodeon: you put in a nickel, attached a stethoscope to your ears, and heard "My Celebrated Liver Cure" and "Down Went McGinty to the Bottom of the Sea." Your delighted expression was the advertising.

As the wax cylinder revolved, a mechanism pushed the needle along. But if the grooves spiralled on a flat disc the needle could track by itself, more accurately. Better and bigger sound, too, if the needle vibrated from side to side instead of up and down. These two discoveries of Emile Berliner started the modern phonograph on its way.

While prospective investors clamored for their talking doll, two big hurdles still faced the phonograph: a motor, and a way to duplicate records.

No artist of any standing would tolerate the hours and hours it took—making a few records at a time, bellowing his performance over and over into a battery of horns. And the search for a really steady motor got nowhere until chance brought an intelligent young machinist from Camden, New Jersey, into the picture. Eldridge Johnson gave the phonograph its motor, and himself became the driving force that transformed the novelty machine into the familiar "Victrola."

1888—THE BERLINER

To secure every possible improvement for his product, Johnson acquired the Berliner patent, and obtained rights to a process of cutting the original master in wax. This solved the duplicating problem by permitting copies to be stamped from the electroplated wax master record.

In 1900 Johnson formed his own company. A year later it became the Victor Talking Machine Company.

He foresaw the challenges of the future, and turned his attention to quality of performance. In March of 1902, Enrico Caruso made his first recording for "His Master's Voice." The phonograph was ready to sweep the world as a dramatic new form of home entertainment. There would be no talking doll.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

How Nipper became the most famous dog in the world

... symbol of the greatest music
... mascot of the greatest artists

He was a real dog. His name was really Nipper. He belonged to a London artist named Francis Barraud. One day, Barraud caught sight of Nipper listening to a phonograph and was inspired to paint what he saw. He called the picture "His Master's Voice."

When the artist showed his painting to The Gramophone Company of England, whom Johnson supplied with motors and parts, they bought all rights and sent Mr. Barraud back to the studio to paint in the latest version of the machine. In America, Eldridge Johnson instantly recognized the value of the picture and the slogan. The following year, when he formed his own company, Johnson made arrangements with the Gramophone Company to use the trade mark for his products.

Coupled with the young company's vigorous advertising policy, "His Master's Voice" became known everywhere. It helped give the Victor Company the stature of greatness from its earliest years.

“His Master’s Voice”

Nipper worked hard and faithfully for his new masters. Printed reproductions appeared everywhere. Demands for painted copies put Barraud to work for the rest of his life trying to satisfy them. For over fifty years “His Master’s Voice” has given instant identity to the Victor label and Victor instruments as a symbol of quality and leadership in the field of home entertainment.

It is doubtful if any trade mark in history has so successfully captured the imagination of so many people, or if any product has ever found so simple a device to say so much.

From Caruso's first recording in 1902

At the turn of the century, the forceful leadership of Eldridge Johnson transformed the infant phonograph industry almost overnight. Courageously, decisively, the new Victor Company moved ahead from its modest beginnings, accomplishing more in months than had been achieved in years.

The revolutionary process of stamping duplicate records from electroplated master-discs was further developed, record quality was dramatically improved, and a new repertoire of recorded performances was built up—all in an incredibly short space of time.

As early as March 1902 the stage was set for the most significant recording event of all—the event that was to transform the phonograph from an inspired toy to a musical instrument of commanding greatness.

Enrico Caruso was twenty-eight, his soaring reputation in its second year, when equipment was set up to make the first "His Master's Voice" recordings in Italy using the new Victor Master-Disc method. Excitement and congestion at La Scala Opera House were so great that the recording staff became involved in a challenge to a duel when they first tried to hear Caruso. Some days later the tenor breezed into the studio and recorded ten arias with "not one stecca, blemish or huskiness." All ten were processed without one failure. All ten were issued. When "E lucevan le stelle" was played for the directors of the Metropolitan Opera, they immediately cabled Caruso a contract. The association of Victor and the great artists was launched.

Just a year later the list was already impressive, including Calvé, Kubelik, Scotti, Plançon, Lucia, Sousa.

As the magic name of Caruso removed all barriers between the great artists and the recording studio, it became an added mark of distinction for every artist who became associated with the Victor label. And for thousands of musically minded Americans, the shadowy figures of the opera stage suddenly became a warm, living reality.

the great names have been VICTOR names

In 1903, in the Saturday Evening Post, the first double-page advertisement in the history of national magazines was placed by the Victor Company. Dramatic evidence of an aggressive and confident young company striding ahead of the great business organizations of its day . . . and showing how soon and how rapidly the great artists flocked to the Victor label.

The early years of the century were auspicious years for the new partnership of music and records. A Golden Age of opera was reaching its magnificent climax in the first decade of the century, when the phonograph record appeared like a magic carpet to spread encores throughout the world.

The glitter of the stars drew much of their luster from the enormous popularity of Victor recordings. Singers flocked to the Victor label, as a symbol of the highest artistic stature. In turn, their great reputations helped carry the Victor name to pre-eminence.

Today, they live again! From priceless master discs, RCA Victor has re-recorded an impressive collection of the early masterpieces, with new orchestral accompaniment and brilliant new quality of sound. Caruso, Tetrazzini, Schumann-Heink again sing their finest performances. It was a far cry from the comic songs and recitations of the first phonographs to the avalanche of stars on the early Victor label. The great names of vaudeville and musical comedy soon became Victor names, and the infectious personality of Sir Harry Lauder made him a member of almost every American family before the First World War.

A few months after the word "Jazz" was invented in Chicago for the Original Dixieland Band, they made their famous first Victor Record of "Livery Stable Blues." Today, every style of popular music played by the jazz greats at their best enjoys undying popularity on RCA Victor's "Treasury" and other recent RCA Victor re-issues: Louis Armstrong, Bunny Berigan, Tommy Dorsey, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman, Coleman Hawkins, Earl Hines, Glenn Miller, Jelly Roll Morton, Artie Shaw, Fats Waller, and many others including almost the entire Jazz Hall of Fame.

A continuous half-century of recording for RCA VICTOR

Toscanini Caruso

To have been entrusted with the music which filled their hearts, to have been the means of presenting their priceless legacies to all who wished to hear, RCA Victor treasures among its highest privileges and achievements.

With the deepest sincerity and with every technical and artistic skill they possessed, RCA Victor recording engineers have for fifty years devoted themselves to the heroic challenge of reproducing the immortal performances of Caruso and Toscanini as faithfully as it has been humanly and scientifically possible to do.

This dedication of fifty years can be measured by a standard of excellence continuously pushed higher and higher, and reflected in every RCA Victor recording. It is readily discernible today in the "Triple Difference" which sets every RCA Victor recording apart: The world's greatest artists, the world's truest sound, the world's finest quality.

In 1921, the last year of Caruso's life, appeared Arturo Toscanini's first Victor recording. This year marks an

This month, for the first time on records,

...by the two whose names tower above all

comes a great Toscanini performance for which his preparation literally began fifty years ago when Caruso was recording his first arias.

This month, "after 50 years of studying and performing it," Toscanini's great recording of Beethoven's final symphony comes as a fitting marker for the first half century of great recording, and as a supreme showcase for another great RCA Victor achievement of this anniversary year: New Orthophonic Sound.

Culmination of seventy-five years of the history of recording, New Orthophonic Sound enriches listening in four distinct ways:

1. Complete frequency range—full richness of tone in both the extreme lows and extreme highs.

2. No loss of high frequency response from the outside to the inside of the record—full brilliance from beginning to end.

3. Ideal dynamic range suitable for home listening—lifelike and natural, without exaggerated effects. 4. Improved quiet surface, assured by a new anti-static compound and 12 separate audio-visual inspections.

This great Toscanini performance stands as a superb example of the "Triple Difference" in RCA Victor Records: the world's greatest artists, the world's truest sound, the world's finest quality.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

Caruso sang over nine million encores for the early "VICTROLA"...

At the moment the first crude phonograph came into his little shop in Camden, Eldridge Johnson said "the talking machine fever broke out all over me." From then it became his obsession to improve, and then to improve the improvement. "Our greatest secret process," he said, "is this: we seek to improve everything we do every day." This is the theme which runs through the story of the "Victrola" phonograph, the history of recording, and on into the electronic fields of radio and television . . . culminating today in the great David Sarnoff Research Center of RCA at Princeton, N. J.

With his first model in the stores, Eldridge Johnson proceeded to make a better one. Soon the original "trade mark" model, with its horn proceeding directly from the needle, was outdated. In 1902 the horn reversed its direction and was attached to the end of a rigid tone arm. The goose neck and tapered tone arm, the following year, were among the most important developments in the company's history. While it wasn't known at the time, the horn's gradual taper

1910-1916—The classic "Victrola"

1901—The "trade mark" model

1906—The "Morning Glory"

1925—The Orthophonic

was a forerunner of the Orthophonic idea fully developed in 1925. With the "Morning Glory" shape in 1906, the horn type machine reached a level of performance miraculous in its day. The same year, the horn was first enclosed in a console, and from 1910 to 1926 the familiar "Victrola"—its simple, classic shape almost a trademark in itself—was the musical instrument of the world. Over a million of the famous Model XI were sold.

. . . In the 'twenties, a new sound

In the 'twenties came a new look and a new sound. "Orthophonic" became a magic word in 1925. An exponential horn produced sounds of a clarity, range and volume which made listening to the new electrically recorded discs an exciting experience. In the recording studio, microphones replaced the old acoustic horn. Drums and other bass instruments could now be heard clearly for the first time. Now, at last, the entire symphony could speak in its full voice.

The "Electrola" added a further dimension to the playing of the new records, bringing electrical amplification to the phonograph. In 1927, the first automatic record changer.

Recorded sound grew more lifelike and more dramatic, until today RCA Victor's "New Orthophonic Sound" brings the most lifelike music ever played on a phonograph.

In 1949 appeared the first record and automatic changer basically designed for each other: the 45 rpm system. At once, record playing was more fun, cost less, sounded better. Today, a new "Victrola" 3-speed phonograph offers the ultimate in ease of operation and enjoyment of all records.

Meanwhile, in the 'twenties, had come the new marvel of music from the air . . .

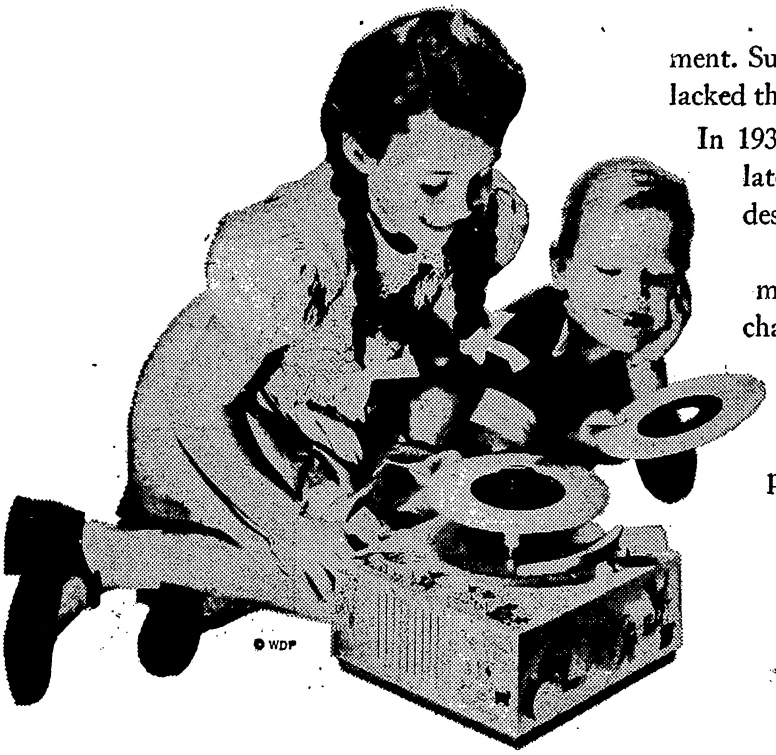
With the new speeds...more fun, more value, and more people playing more records!

Automatic record changers were pioneered by RCA Victor in 1927. Early models were complicated and cumbersome, with posts and clamps often requiring adjustment. Subsequent designs were improvements, but still lacked the needed simplicity and reliability.



In 1939 came a fresh new start resulting, ten years later, in the first record and record changer ever designed for each other! So simple, with a big hole in the record and the entire changing mechanism inside the spindle. Now, automatic changing cost little or no more than a manual changer. And with the little "45" records, De Luxe vinyl plastic records cost no more than shellac "78's" . . . non-breakable, and providing up to ten times longer playing life.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

Still another new step forward, on the seventy-fifth birthday of the phonograph! A new "45" record with double the playing time! Down again comes the cost of great music by the greatest artists.

The new "Extended Play 45" Red Seal one-record album—same size and same speed as standard "45's"—sells for $1.50, plays four standard selections or two longer selections . . . up to 8 minutes a side, up to 16 minutes a record. Just about half the price of the same music on "78". And with it, the wonderful convenience and compactness of the "45" record . . . the luxury of the simplest, easiest system ever devised for automatic record changing! Plus the wonderful tone and brilliance of the "45" record on non-breakable De Luxe vinyl plastic which gives so many more plays without a sign of record wear.

Now, great RCA VICTOR performances at a new low cost . . . on the new "Extended Play 45" records!

BECAUSE YOU'RE MINE

Divide the price of the record by four . . . and just imagine buying a great aria by a great artist for only 38¢! In the early Victor days, the equivalent aria cost a dollar, a dollar and a half, or even five dollars. Today, everyone can afford to own and enjoy great music at home.

No need to be content with any but the finest performance . . . the finest artist. How much more pleasure in a Chopin Nocturne when played by Brailowsky or Horowitz or Rubinstein . . . in Schubert's Ave Maria when sung by Marian Anderson!

This month's first listing of classical selections on "Extended Play 45" contains fifty records with well over a hundred titles. . . all by artists everyone knows and loves. A superb selection to choose

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

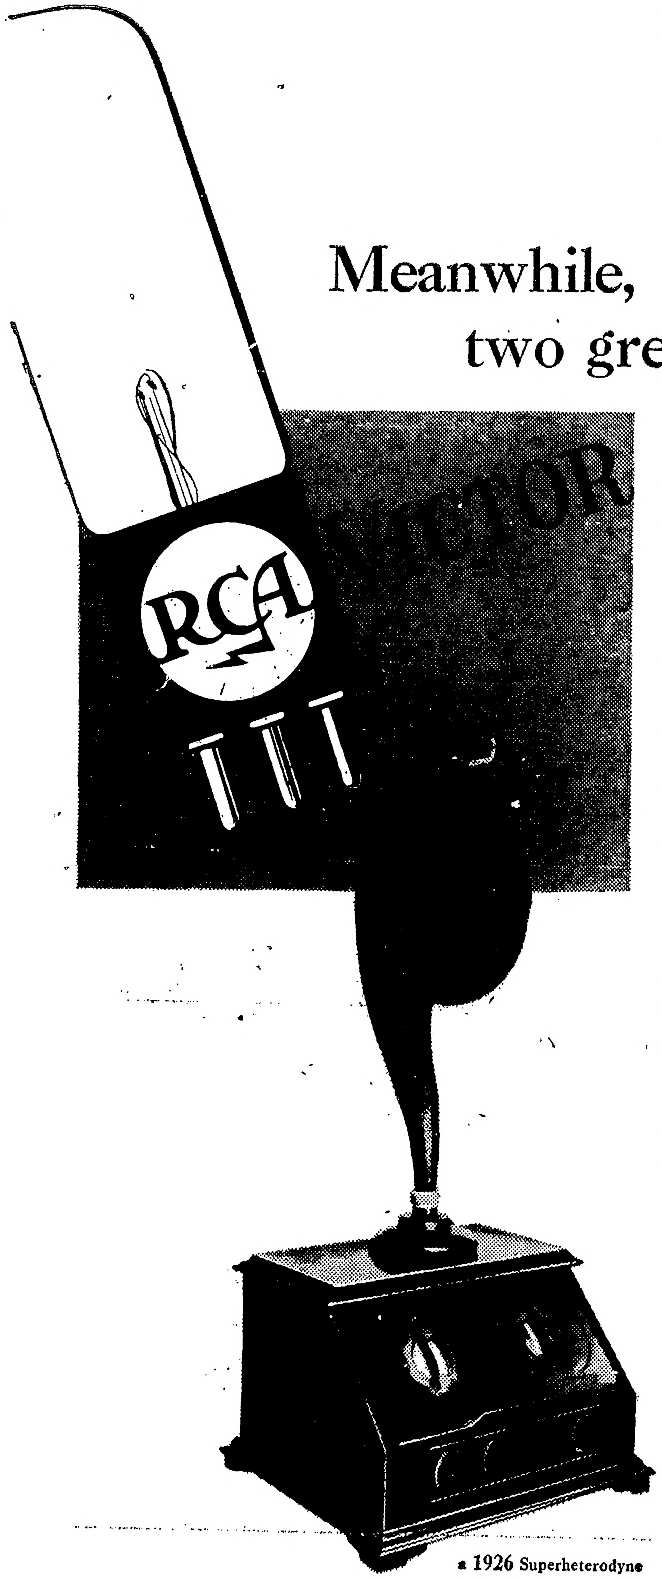
In 1916, David Sarnoff, then Asst. Traffic Manager of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America, outlined a plan . . . "I have in mind a plan which would make radio a household utility in the same sense as a piano or phonograph. The receiver can be designed in the form of a simple radio music box and arranged for several different wave lengths, changeable with the throwing of a single switch or pressing a single button..."

Meanwhile, two great companies became one



a 1926 Superheterodyne

The plan did materialize! The Radio Corporation of America, created in 1919 to provide an all-American communications company, spearheaded the rapid realization of that plan.

To the world of home entertainment opened the miraculous new possibilities of electronics, when the Radio Corporation of America and the Victor Company joined.

The stars that America had welcomed into their homes on records were greeted as old friends on radio . . . first heard through earphones on the old crystal set or the complicated battery sets that almost required a home engineer to operate.

In 1924 the first superheterodyne models and in 1926 the all-electric radio utilizing the light socket as a source of current brought General Sarnoff's vision of a radio operated by a single switch or button, much closer to reality.

But the dials on the Bakelite panel were still formidable. The voice of the horn speaker was still strident, punctuated with squeals of static. The men in the RCA laboratories explored deeper, steadily prying the secrets of better communications from the stubborn electron. With the cone speaker, sound became smoother. One by one the maze of controls disappeared behind the panel. Year by year, sets cost less . . . worked far better.

and made electrons sing

In 1935 the finest radio-phonograph cost $600.00. By 1940, enjoyment and value redoubled . . . in the popular Anniversary model for $195.00. It had the "Magic Brain" reception, a roll-out record changer, six pushbuttons, a built-in antenna.

In '46 came the magnificent Crestwood combination with the "Golden Throat" tone system—finest in the industry.

By 1950, the consumer trend was toward compact, mobile sets that could be carried from room to room. One of RCA Victor's leaders in that trend was the powerful Livingston AM/FM receiver with unsurpassed performance compactly designed.

Today RCA Victor miracles continue . . . new sets turn on to wake you up, shut off after lulling you to sleep, even start your morning coffee. Today's remarkable Super "Personal" portable radio plays ten times longer than any previous portables of its size—without changing batteries.

Meanwhile, the outstanding success of one dream had merged with the challenge of another...as sight blended with sound in the modern miracle of television.

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"

In the '30's, RCA Victor perfected the kinescope

Early RCA activities in radio communications opened many new doors. Among the most intriguing was the one marked "Television."

Into the creation of the kind of television now enjoyed by millions of Americans went perhaps the greatest concentration of scientific effort that the world has ever seen expended on a single idea—and it was the destiny of RCA to lead in that effort.

As early as 1923, Brig. General David Sarnoff, now Chairman of the Board of RCA, recognized the possibilities: "I believe that television, which is the technical name for seeing as well as hearing by radio, will come to pass in due course.... It may be that every broadcast receiver in the future will also be equipped with a television adjunct by which the instrument will make it possible at home to see what is going on at the broadcast station."

In 1928, television station W2XBS was licensed to RCA. Several years before, Dr. V. K. Zworykin, now Vice President and Technical Director of RCA Laboratories Division, had filed his original patent application for the iconoscope, "eye" of the TV camera. In 1929 he demonstrated the kinescope, or receiver picture-tube. Both were developed in the thirties, and for the first time the skittish electron was made to perform effectively in the new visual medium. With mechanical scanning eliminated, all-electronic television became a practical possibility.

By 1939 television was ready for public inspection. At the New York World's Fair in that year RCA Victor showed a set featuring a mirror-reflected picture, and a few thousand of this series were sold. The war years held up television for the consumer, but RCA's television research continued to advance, directed to the latest electronic equipment for the military.

In 1946, immediately after releasing the first mass-produced TV set, RCA Victor made a bold move. Frank M. Folsom, now president of RCA, realized that the television industry as a whole would benefit from an equal start in the competitive race. He invited RCA Victor's competitors to a meeting and turned over to them complete blueprints of the television receivers RCA was building. The visiting manufacturers were given an extensive tour of the RCA Victor television factories and told they were at liberty to use the information in any way they wished.

That television today is a healthy, vigorous industry can be credited in great part to RCA's foresight on that occasion in 1946.

By 1949, RCA pioneering in mass production of kinescopes and receivers had produced the popular "Eye Witness" model selling just under $200. With the millionth set, the following year, RCA Victor television was "million-proof."

In 1951 came the RCA Victor "Super Set," with "Picture Power." Even in television's fringe areas, "Picture Power" brought a sharp, clear image. And finally in 1952, the "Magic Monitor" circuit system: a complex new circuit of uncanny ability which performs like a monitoring engineer right inside the set. This wonder-working circuit system is at the heart of today's new Sunderland—a superb 3-way instrument with 21-inch television Deluxe, with "Victrola" 3-speed record changer, and with powerful AM/FM radio . . . a fitting RCA Victor culmination in all fields of phonograph, radio, and television.

RCA Victor Television

A new concept of service. Never before had a television manufacturer undertaken such an extensive responsibility to its customers. The RCA Service Company set up the only nation-wide factory service organization . . . to bring the maintenance skill of factory-trained experts within the reach of every RCA Victor television owner. Another "first" by the Radio Corporation of America.

whom were battling for the secondary bookings until their disk impact turned them into much-sought-for names for the top nitery and theatre showcases here and abroad. Another case in point is June Valli, the $35 a week Bronx bookkeeper who capitalized on her chance on "Stop The Music" with an attendant RCA Victor pact.

It Started Crosby

These b.o. values interpret themselves through every strata of show biz. It's not merely the personals. A disclick creates Hollywood and TV stars. Nor is this a new phenomenon either. That's how Hollywood first heard of Bing Crosby. Also Rudy Vallee and later Frank Sinatra. Paul Whiteman went from Victor records to a Universal film starring him as "The King of Jazz." Dorothy Lamour was a band singer. So was Betty Hutton who bounced from Vincent Lopez's orchestra into Paramount celluloid. By coincidence, sort of completing the cycle, Rosemary Clooney ("Come On-A My House," "Botcha-Me," "Half As Much") is now being spoken of as the Par contractee who will take up the void now that Miss Hutton has gone indie.

Frankie Laine has already made a couple of films for Columbia and Don Cornell is set for a series of Universal musical shorts. (That stems, of course, from the new Decca-Universal tieup).

Video also has been latching onto the disk vocalists. Aside from Dinah Shore and Perry Como, both of whom have been regular radio-TV fare for the past couple of years, Patti Page has been given an NBC-TV slot while Georgia Gibbs, following her "Kiss of Fire" smash last spring, has been making the guest star circuit along with Peggy Lee who surged once again to the fore via her "Lover" etching for Decca.

Curious aspect of the disk impact on other show biz media is that there's no discernible reciprocal action on platter sales. While personals in cafes and theatres, and shots on radio and TV have beneficial effect on the artist's wax sales, nobody knows how much, if at all, unless it's supported by a click disk. But there's been no question about how record hits boom an artist's b.o. Disk hits bring out those customers unmistakably and instantaneously.

Longer Route for Danny Kaye

It took Danny Kaye three pictures and a phenomenal personal impact at the London Palladium, for example, to really give his films, past, current and future, the stature they deserved. It was no secret that RKO's foreign sales executives could sell any "Tarzan" easier than Kaye. This was no reflection on the star who, with time, now has achieved truly important international stature.

On the other hand Val Parnell books a couple of disk names and he's forced into extra matinees at the same Palladium, in itself somewhat of a show biz Ripley for London. This happened with Frankie Laine and Guy Mitchell for the simple reason that a phonograph biscuit—an international message in canned music which requires no interpreter, merchandizer, script rewriter or big ballyhoo campaign—is so well understood on the local level, i.e., the average customer. And that goes for the non-Anglais boys and girls who, in some respects, are more hep to the American jive than the squares at home.

Music is an international language but somehow in recent years the pop phonograph recording magic has spoken beaucoup pounds, francs, lires, marks and kronen around the world with the same boffo b.o. impact as in the native Yankee dollars.

A disk bestseller goes into the millions. It touches on millions of personalities. Even if they're not buyers, the public is widely exposed to the new hit song, hit pop artists, new "sound," or whatever the gimmick that catapults a platter into stratospheric sales. It may be an echo chamber, an off-beat approach, the "cry" technique that makes for a freak hit like Johnnie Ray, the driving, dynamic songalogy of a Frankie Laine, the Balkan beat of a William Saroyan song, "Come On-A My House" (Rosemary Clooney), the sweet balladeering of "Tennessee Waltz" (Patti Page), the weird ballad that is "Nature Boy" (and its Nat 'King' Cole interpretation)—it may be any of a score of different factors, singly and in combination, and when it happens—timber! It's the jackpot. The deejays plug it; the jukes reprise it; becomes a trademark of inestimable value.

Sometimes it's an ephemeral fame—in fact most often, as witness Bonnie Baker's boudoir version of "Oh Johnny Oh," or Eileen Barton's "Bake a Cake" (who's currently on the wax again with "I Like"); Teresa Brewer's "Music Music Music" or the zitherist Anton Karas' "Third Man Theme," but almost always it's a lifetime identification. It is a label as indelible as a Tiffany hallmark. Just a few f'rinstances: look at what "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen" (for which they got a hot 50 bucks from Decca) did for the Andrews Sisters. Or "If I Didn't Care" for the Ink Spots. "Valentina" and Maurice Chevalier. "Ida" and Eddie Cantor. "Mammy" and "Sonny Boy" and Al Jolson. "Begin the Beguine" and Artie Shaw. "Some of These Days" and Sophie Tucker. "Your Time is My Time" and Sophie Tucker. "Rhapsody in Blue" and Paul Whiteman.

From the "B" Columbia label, Okeh, came a newcomer last winter with three concurrent disk sellers, all in the same lachrymose mood, "Cry," "Little White Cloud That Cried" and "Please, Mr. Sun." A star was born. Bing Crosby has his "Blue of the Night" and Rudy Vallee had his "Your Time Is My Time," Russ Columbo had his "Sweet 'n' Lovely"—and today's Frankie Laine does it with "Mule Train," "That's My Desire," "Lucky Old Sun," "Jezebel," "Shine" and "Jalousie" Guy Mitchell does it with "My Truly Fair," "The Roving Kind," "Sparrow In the Treetop," Eddie Fisher with "Wish You Were Here," Tony Bennett does it with "Because Of You," "Cold Cold Heart," Vaughn Monroe does it with "Riders In the Sky" and "Ballerina." Perry Como does it with the classic Chopin theme, "Till The End of Time," "Prisoner of Love," "Ave Maria" and "Dreamer's Holiday." Patti Page parlays "All My Love" with "Tennessee Waltz," Peggy Lee dittoes with "Manana" and "Lover," Les Paul and Mary Ford account for 6,000,000 gross disk sales with "How High the Moon," "Tiger Rag," "Mockin' Bird Hill," "Whispering," "Tennessee Waltz" (on which they took second money to Miss Page.)

Billy Eckstine went to the top with "Caravan" and ditto for Vic Damone with "You're Breaking My Heart," and Gordon MacRae with "Body and Soul." Doris Day stepped out on "Sentimental Journey," when she was still with the Les Brown band and then clinched it with "It's Magic." Jo Stafford went the same route via her cornball takeoff of "Temptation" with the Red Ingle orch. Sarah Vaughan made the grade with "It Might As Well Be Spring" and Ella Fitzgerald, of course, with "A-Tisket A-Tasket."

The international pitch works in reverse, too, as witness Chevalier's gamut from "Valentina" to "Louise"; Carl Brisson's "Beer Barrel Polka," "Cocktails for Two" and "I Kiss Your Hand Madame," Jacqueline Francois's sultry French ballads, Edith Piaf's "Trois Cloches" and, of course, "La Vie en Rose"; Charles Trenet and "La Mer," among his other self-written ballads. All these have had their impact in the U. S. talent market.

Back to 'Music Goes 'Round and 'Round'

In the madcap 52d Street days when the nation was first discovering swing, Farley & Riley made their nonsense tune, "The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round (And Comes Out Here)" almost a national anthem.

From nowhere comes a Frank Sinatra with "All Or Nothing At All" and "I'll Never Smile Again," and he almost winds up with Tommy Dorsey working for him instead of being one of TD's Pied Pipers. Dorsey, in turn, whams over "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You" into a personal trademark and rides the crest with "Boogie-Woogie."

But the golden age of the disclick appears to be now, in this highly developed electronic era where microphones all over the land project the current pops and tops. The record is indeed king not only of Tin Pan Alley but of a large segment of show biz. A good filmusical or Broadway legit musical score means a flock of platters which become automatic advance agents for the attraction—a continuously replenishing cuffo commercial, as it were, for the show.

Songs have often made 'em into hits. Hollywood knows that and constantly strives for a good title song. It dates back to "Charmaine," "Diane," "Jeanine, I Dream of Lilac Time" (that was the only way to drag "Lilac Time" into the film title) and "Ramona" in the pioneer days of the Hollywood gold rush. When it reached the stage that they were writing theme songs titled "My Dynamite Man, I Love You" and "Woman Disputed, I Love You" that was the end—for a time anyway.

On the amorous song title, an old Harry Archer-Harlan ballad, "I Love You," carried an early 1920s Broadway musical, "Little Jessie James," into pay dirt. The current "Wish You Were Here" impact, from the Leland Hayward-Joshua Logan-Arthur Kober-Harold Rome Broadway legituner of the same name, is largely credited for carrying that Broadway musical over the hump after a set of very bad notices.

The public was never as record-minded as now. The battle of the speeds dramatized the fullest values of perfected sound reproduction. Result has been that the existing 16,000,000 conventional phonograph players (78 rpm) have been augmented by almost 6,000,000 new players which accommodate either the new 45 rpm (which RCA Victor pioneered) or all three speeds, including the 33 rpm (LP, which Columbia pioneered for its albums).

The 2,000 disk jockeys (which includes the straight platter spinners as well as the 100 to 200 "personality" gabbers) across the land thrive on records. Their chatter would be nil sans the platters. These deejays have terrific local impact, and their part in exploitation of this or that song or artist is undeniably important. The more than 500,000 jukeboxes bring recorded music into intimate contact in taverns, soda fountains, eateries, niteries and factories.

It is no wonder that over night the artist becomes a household word. Compare any of the above with the table herewith and note how long and arduous was the task for song identification by some of these names. True, the longer route mayhaps has created a more enduring impact on the annals, but by the same token the new generation may be hard put to identify just what "Redhead" had to do with Irene Franklin or even "I Love a Lassie" with Sir Harry Lauder. But a relative newcomer like Don Cornell and "It Isn't Fair" or "I Walk Alone," or Al Martino's identification with "Here In My Heart," requires no script. That's the boffo b.o. magic of the present-day hot pop platter.

Early Phono Era Cutups

Performers who recorded for Columbia in the '90s were a pretty harum-scarum lot. The boys got their checks on Friday afternoons; then several of them usually sat in on a poker game that sometimes lasted to Monday morning.

Late one Sunday night, Len Spencer, the leading phono comedian of the time, had played so long, with only occasional pauses for refreshment, that he was exhausted. He sank back in his chair and went to sleep just as it was his turn to play. The cards dropped from his hands and his cronies saw with sincere horror that he held a perfect hand that would take the big pot then on the table.

Something had to be done, and it was. George Gaskin, "The Irish Thrush," carefully redistributed the cards. He then shook Spencer, saying: "Wake up, Len! You're holding up the game!"

Spencer rubbed his eyes and looked unhappily around. "Gee, boys," he said, "I just had the most wonderful dream! I dreamed I had a perfect hand—but of course anything like that is too good to ever happen to me!"

Spencer had trouble with his eyes and for a time feared he was going blind. One night, while another game was in progress, Gaskin, by prearrangement with his confederates, snapped off the light. They then pretended to play as if they could still see their cards. A little while later they were urging Spencer to "quit stalling" and to "come on and play!"

The comic's worst fears were confirmed. He was certain he had been suddenly stricken blind, and it wasn't until the lights were turned on that he realized he had been made the victim of another heartless joke.

Biggest Selling Victor Record

Biggest selling Victor record—at least of pre-electric epoch—was No. 19427, Vernon Dalhart's coupling of "The Wreck of the Old 97" and "The Prisoner's Song." Estimates of sale have run between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 copies, and electric re-recording by Dalhart is still in print. (Dalhart's real name was Marion Try Slaughter. He was a Texan who took his stage name from two towns, Vernon and Dalhart, near which he grew up. He died in 1948.)

Not only was this a record-breaking record, it also probably caused more litigation than any other ever issued. Since no composer was listed for the "Wreck" side, dozens of persons, mostly Virginia mountaineers, arose to say they wrote the ditty and were entitled to royalties. Most persistent claimant was late David Graves George, who was declared the composer by a Federal court only to have his claim overturned later, after Victor appealed to U. S. Supreme Court. Present-day "Wreck" sheet music lists authors as Henry Whitter, Charles W. Noell and Fred J. Lewey. There was never any doubt as to where tune came from. It was lifted from "Ship That Never Returned," mournful ballad of Civil War period by Henry C. Work, who also wrote "Marching Through Georgia" and "Grandfather's Clock."

As for "Prisoner," Dalhart said on occasion it was written by his cousin, Guy Massey. (Dalhart used couple of dozen names as recording artist and "Guy Massey" was one of them.) Other times, he said he wrote it himself. But Nat Shilkret, then musical director at RCA Victor, seems to have as good a claim as anybody to composer recognition.

'100 DEEJAYS CONTROL MUSIC BIZ'

Deejays Never Had It So Good

By MORT NUSBAUM
(WHAM and WHAM-TV)

Rochester, N. Y.

In appraising the growth of an industry, one points to the changes that have taken place. The deejay, however, can't refer to the "good old days." Back in 1936, for example, when I first started spinning platters, a guy could never be quite sure whether the next mail would bring a thank-you note from an artist or a summons from a record company for playing their record on the air without permission (which they wouldn't give!). Getting a "free record" was almost unheard of.

Well, we've all come a long way since then. The diskeries have found they need the deejays, and the jocks know what hey knew all along—we sure need the records! And in spite of the occasional hassles, it's been a mighty happy marriage!

To say we've come a long way is really putting it mildly. Remember when records used to be so noisy (with surface scratch) that sometimes one out of every two records had to be discarded? What a difference between then and the quality now. And the people themselves! I think I was spinning records for years before I knew that an a&r man was a human person; and a music publisher was something whose name you saw on the leadsheet of a song—when you bought it!

Those sure weren't the "good old days." But I wonder how many jocks are still around who remember them? Nowadays all these things are taken for granted. Jocks have come to expect the steady flow of wax, the long-distance calls from a&r men, publishers, and artists, and the countless promotional gimmicks that go to make up the business. Maybe we don't take the time to say this very often, but we sure know that without you guys at the other end of the line there just wouldn't be any of us guys spinning them at this end. Maybe we don't like to admit it publicly, but most of us must admit that our shows are as good or as bad the music we play. And in spite of all the gimmicks, contests and what-have-yous that are constantly employed by platter-spinners,—the one thing more than all else that commands, —and keeps, a good Hooper is the music!

It's been a good association, this one between the deejays and the record industry, but that 100 years from now VARIETY will print a rumor that "a certain jockey (they'll still have them) is suspected of having accepted a space-trip to Jupiter as payola." Mind you, no one will yet have been able to prove it—but the stories will still be there.

I have been protesting for years that alleged payolas were overexaggerated. But maybe I'm wrong. Maybe there are guys who won't plug a tune unless they collect for it. If that's true, let me ask this question: are those guys who are on the take so important that they can't be left out? No one guy can be that important. Why don't the payers of payola start ignoring such a guy--don't send him releases, exclusives, and interviews. How long do you think he could continue to be important in his community under those circumstances? There are too many places where records can be spun because the jock things the song is good and knows his public will like it. There are too many stations (like mine) and too many jocks (like me) where the only "payola" we understand is a good recording.

Hosp Fund's 20th Anni

The Musicians Emergency Fund, which brings live concerts into veterans hospitals around the country, will mark the 20th anni of its Hospitalized Veterans Music Service with a dinner and cavalcade production at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., Oct. 31.

Fritz Kreisler is chairman of the fund.

Doesn't Happen Today

Most show biz personalities have been willing to make records, but have sought the highest possible fee for their efforts.

But Joseph Jefferson, creator of the stage part of "Rip Van Winkle," was different. In 1903, a couple of years before his death, Columbia asked the venerable Jefferson to record a couple of scenes from the famous play. So he waxed "A Scene in the Mountains" and "Rip Returns Home After 20 Years Absence."

When he was asked, after making the records, what he thought he should be paid, he replied:

"Nothing — nothing at all, my boy! Glad to oblige you!"

And he wouldn't take any money.

Pioneer Efforts For More Volume

Problem of how to get more volume out of pre-electric records was one that early phono firms tackled in different ways.

Cylinder makers came through in '90s with the big concert-size cylinder, five inches in diameter—about the size of the calf of the average man's leg—and also known as "sewer pipes" because of their resemblance to those utilitarian articles. Big rollers didn't play any longer than small two-minute size, but grooves were so large and so far apart the volume of sound was greatly increased. This was particularly true when the "Polyphone" attachment, embodying two reproducers and two horns, were used. Cylinders sounded fine for that day when the two reproducers tracked in unison—which they hardly ever did.

Around 1905, an English inventor, Chauncey Parsons, invented the "Auxetophone," a device for increasing the volume of a disk machine by applying compressed air. Several concerts were given in London (a few also by Victor in this country) in which enough sound was generated to fill a large hall, but the device was clumsy, expensive and hard to handle, so it rated only novelty interest.

In 1906, Columbia introduced the "20th Century Sound Magnifying Graphophone," at first known as the Highamphone because it was invented by Daniel Higham of Boston. Thing played six-inch cylinders and used pressure from an amber flywheel to increase volume. They were popular attractions in front of early movie shows, and some veterans still recall hearing "The Preacher and the Bear" coming clearly through the air a mile or a mile and a half from where the machine was stationed. It likewise was complicated and troublesome and its vogue soon passed.

From then on, those who wanted gobs of volume from their recorded music just stuck in an extra loud-tone steel needle.

ELLINGTON FETE MARKS HIS 25TH BIGTIME ANNI

Marking his entry into the bigtime via his booking at the old Cotton Club in Harlem in 1927, Duke Ellington will be recipent of a Silver Jubilee promotion when he goes into the N. Y. Paramount Oct. 22.

Mills Music, which publishes most of the Ellington standards, is setting the promotion on radio and TV. About 20 shows are slated to program the Ellington tunes during the composer-bandleader's stand at the Paramount. Art Ford, WNEW, N. Y., disk jockey, will devote a full night to the Ellington numbers during that period.

Sidney Mills, Mills' professional manager, went on the road Sunday (28) to line up out-of-town jockeys for the drive.

HENCE THEY HAVE BIG OBLIGATION

By BILL RANDLE
(WERE Disk Jockey)

Cleveland.

A new kind of show business has developed in the past 10 years that has thoroughly revolutionized the music business. The people who have created this new kind of show business are not talents in the usual sense. They are not usually well known outside their regional or local area; yet, individually and collectively they earn as much as major performers in the entertainment fields and have an impact on show business that is tremendous.

There are really no more than 100 real disk jockeys in the country today; people who are employed on a contract or fee basis for doing specific record shows with continuous time segments in the major or semi-major markets. This in no way negates the performers who are on their way up; or who work on small stations in different parts of the country and who in many ways, are more alert and aggressive than the so-called big time disk jockey. They (the best of them) will work up into the circles of high paid performers in due time. But, at this point, 100 more or less top performers control the popular music business in a very real sense.

Without the concerted action of

First 'Original Cast' Record

Nowadays it's a commonplace to have the entire score of a smash hit—and some that aren't smash hits—plattered by the original cast.

But that's a development of comparatively recent years. Perhaps the first excerpt from a stage show to be recorded wholly by members of the original cast was a 1904 Victor of the "Swanee River" scene from "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," sung by the stars of the original production, "Miss Quinn and Mr. Thompson." Disk depicts a scene in which Miss Quinn, "a proud Southern beauty," sings "Old Folks at Home" inside her boudoir, while Thompson, supposed to be standing beneath her window, gives with a harmoniously blending serenade.

Also isn't generally known that 1902 Columbia record of "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden" was made by Joe Belmont, Byron Harlan and Frank C. Stanley with the help of three of the original Floradora Girls—which three isn't clear. Platter was so popular Columbia seriously considered laying off production of all other disks for several weeks in order to turn out nothing but "Pretty Maidens." Extreme step, however, wasn't taken.

'Fabulous' Prices For George M. Cohan Records

VARIETY contributor recently was asked by a woman in Vermont if he would like to buy her copy of George M. Cohan's Victor waxing of "Life's a Funny Proposition, After All." Lady said her town librarian had told her Cohan records are so scarce this 1910 platter was worth more than $1,000. What she particularly wanted to know was, how much more?

False rumors about rarity and value of Cohan records are one of oddities of the disk biz. Stories have gone around that master records were unknown when Cohan recorded, that he had to sing each of his platters separately, and only 200 copies were made of each. Truth is—VARIETY mugg told lady —that "Life's a Funny Proposition" was big seller, and markings on one of his own copies show more than 150,000 pressings had been turned out at time it was made. Record is worth $1 or so.

A KID CALLED FISHER

Origin of 'Victrola'

In a letter, June 9, 1905, from Eldridge R. Johnson to his attorney, "The word 'Victrola' is similar to nothing that I have ever heard of and seems to me to have a sound suggestive of music, and would in all probability be the best word to use." The name was applied to his cabinet-type talking machine which featured the horn concealed within the cabinet.

Emile Berliner apparently coined "gramophone" because other names such as "Graphophone were already being used by other companies.

Artists With Own Record Companies

There's nothing new about movie stars deciding they can do more justice to their artistic endeavors—and make more money—by setting up their own producing company. Often the effort is a flop.

Same thing was true of some of the early recording artists. Growing peevish at making cylinders for Columbia, Edison or United States at 75c or $1 a "round," they decided they'd set up in business for themselves. Businesses didn't last long and were probably more hard work than fun.

John W. Myers figured his baritone renditions of pop songs and operatic excerpts would bring him a better income if he not only waxed but distributed them himself. He did, for a year or so before the turn of the century.

Like sentiment was entertained by a tinny tenor, George J. Gaskin, "The Irish Thrush," said to have relieved the monotony of recording by ejecting plug tobacco juice into the horn as he sang. Gaskin was in a hurry to make money—so much so that penny arcade exhibitors complained he didn't give value received and should lengthen his records by singing another chorus. (Nowadays the jukebox fraternity considers anything much over two minutes too long!)

Another tenor, Roger Harding, struck out on his own, specializing in recording nursery rhymes for children. He died in 1901.

Russell Hunting's "Casey" monologs were the most popular comic cylinders of the Gay 90s. For a time Hunting's services were exclusive to Hunting. He complained bitterly that other characters who lacked his savvy were making "Casey" records for competing companies.

The historic Hayden Quartet (name originally was Haydn, but John Citizen wouldn't say High-d'n, so they obligingly changed it to Hayden) had the American Record Co., with members of the quartet as officials. Foursome consisted of John Bieling, first tenor; Harry Macdonough, lead; S. H. Dudley, baritone, and Bill Hooley, bass. You could pick out any song you liked and the quartet would record it for you on special order.

Only woman owner of a diskery appears to have been Estella Louise Mann, soprano of the Original Lyric Trio, who founded her own Lyric Record Co. in 1898. Born in Nashville in 1870, Miss Mann was then just 28. She also would sing any number in the soprano repertoire to special order. Business lasted year or so. After some stage experience, Miss Mann retired, dying at the Evansville, Ind., home of her brother, W. J. Mann, in 1946.

And in the early 1920s, Homer Rodeheaver, the baritone soloist at Billy Sunday's revivals, founded the Rainbow Record Co., featuring his "sacred solos," and did well for several years. But, like Burr, Rody kept singing for the other fellows.

By EDDIE CANTOR, Dee Jay

Hollywood.

My granddaughter, Judy McHugh, is 13, looks like 16, and talks like mad. But she knows records. She should. Every now and them when Ida is not looking, I slip Judy a couple of bucks and I invariably ask, "What are you going to do with the money, Honey?" Her answer never varies. "I'm going to buy records." What I say now shouldn't come to you as a terrific shock, and is probably as obvious as Jessel's line of conversation when lunching with a girl, but a good part of the record business depends on teen-agers like my Judy.

Eddie Cantor

Doing a half-hour radio show once a week called "Eddie Cantor—Show Business," I have been sort of a glorified disk jockey and have had a lot of fun doing it. 1. It keeps me up on what records people are buying. 2. I have learned about all of the record collectors in all of the 48 states.

But for a good heart-to-heart about platters, let me talk with a youngster who has made this a world of her own.

The other night I drove my granddaughter home and we got on our usual topic. "Tell me, Judy," I said, "who do you and your friends like best of all the people making records right now." Judy didn't have to think about it. She knew. Rosemary Clooney, Eddie Fisher, and I didn't hear the rest of her list because my thoughts never got past this kid, Fisher.

I got a sort of a paternal glow thinking of the luncheon at the St. Regis Hotel, in N.Y., a couple of years ago when I introduced him to the head of Victor's recording. After the meeting, we called Milton Blackstone who has guided him in a nice, straight path—the path that leads to nice newspaper clippings, big applause and that pretty green stuff. In a little while Eddie Fisher was recording for Victor and getting ready for that "big one."

While waiting, Eddie was traveling with me across the country. We had been making personal appearances in Baltimore, Chicago, Omaha, Lafayette (Ind.), San Francisco and other cities. The audiences went for this fresh-looking kid with a smile that made every woman want to jump up and mother him. The teen-agers wanted to smother him. In Chicago I had to beat them away with a stick.

All the time, in between shows, Eddie kept talking records. I can remember telling him, "Think of it, kid. If the right one comes along, you may sell as many as 1,000,000 records. How would you like that? You'll be in more than 1,000,000 homes." He became frightened at that. "Mr. Cantor," he asked, "what if this record is no good?" "In that case," I told him, "you don't have to worry. It won't be in anybody's home but your own." The "big one" came a little after our tour. It was "Bring Back the Thrill." It began selling by the hundreds, by the thousands. Eddie called Milton Blackstone. Blackstone called me. I called Fisher. Fisher called his mother. Victor was making money, but the telephone company was cleaning up.

Kenton, Vaughan, Cole Gross 16G in Columbus

Columbus, Sept. 30.

"Biggest Show of '52" picked up a sock $15,800 in two shows Wednesday (24) at Memorial Hall here.

The Stan Kenton, Sarah Vaughan, Nat Cole troupe was brought in by Ben Cowall, local promoter. Top was $3.50.

Presidents on Wax—and Legends About Disk Stand-Ins

By BOB WALTON

This being the age of radio and video, Ike Eisenhower and Ad Stevenson probably won't make phonograph platters discussing and debating the issues of the 1952 presidential campaign. But there was a time when records—whether flat disks or cylindrical "rollers"—played an important part in drives for votes. As matter of fact, U. S. Presidents have been making records almost since Edison's invention of the tinfoil phono apparatus in 1877.

It's a reasonable guess that Rutherford Birchard Hayes was the first American chief executive to have his voice recorded, although the sound doesn't seem to have been preserved. But Thomas Alva Edison gave a demonstration of his new tinfoil phonograph gadget at the White House in April, 1878—and who can doubt that he invited the Olympian bearded President Hayes to stammer a few thoughtfully chosen phrases into the mouthpiece and that Hayes accepted?

Benjamin Harrison seems to have been the first President to be listed in a catalog as a recording artist. The Bettini Co., one of the pioneer makers of wax cylinders, put out a record catalog in the 1890s, and Harrison was named as one of the celebrities whose voice the company had recorded. What he talked about wasn't revealed.

Grover Cleveland and William McKinley will be discussed a bit later. In 1904, neither Theodore Roosevelt, Republican nominee, nod Alton B. Parker, Democrat, made records, but, probably for the first time, a couple of now forgotten campaign songs were recorded. Billy Murray, then coming into his own as the most popular of the pioneer phono artists, proved his versatility by espousing both the Democratic and G. O. P. causes. On Columbia Record No. 1863, he sang "the official Democratic campaign song," written by John W. Bratton, titled "Goodbye, Teddy, You Must March, March, March." No. 1864 was Murray's version of a Republican anthem by Gus Edwards, "We Want You, Teddy, for Four Years More." In 1907 Murray recorded another Vincent Bryan-Gus Edwards paen of Republican praise, "GOP."

There was something doing in 1908 when William Howard Taft, Republican, ran against William Jennings Bryan, who was having his third try for the Democrats. Both Bryan and Taft made records for Victor and Edison. They discussed the trusts, the tariff, the labor question and other assorted issues of the time. Taft also veered from politics into a defense of foreign missions and an analysis of Irish humor, while Bryan obliged with an excerpt from his "Immortality" speech. Both later made a few records for Columbia. Bryan made his own preliminary announcements in an unctuous baritone voice on the cylinders, finishing with the regulation "Edison reck-cord!" Taft won the election, but the Edison Co. said that Bryan's records were the most popular series they had ever issued up to that time.

Taft, Wilson, Roosevelt

Perhaps the phonograph's crowning achievement as a disseminator of political propaganda was reached in 1912. This time the candidates confined themselves to Victor records. For President Taft's convenience, the company set up special recording equipment at Hot Springs, Va., and the burly, good-natured president made several platters there. Woodrow Wilson, running for the Democrats, and Theodore Roosevelt for the Progressives, also spoke into the horn, as did Champ Clark, Wilson's unsuccessful rival for the Democratic nomination. Probably most listeners to the old records would consider Taft the most accomplished speaker of the three. He had a warm, mellow voice and a tone of sincerity. Wilson, on the records, was dry and rasping and sounded like a peevish professor. Roosevelt had a high effeminate voice, with a spiteful, hysterical pitch.

In 1916 Wilson and Hughes passed up the phonograph, and the issues were not debated on wax by Harding and Cox four years later, although both, in common with many other notables of the period, spoke on a special series of "Nation's Forum" records marketed by Columbia.

After 1920, radio took over, but the voices of Coolidge, Hoover, F. D. Roosevelt and Truman all of course have been recorded. "Silent Cal" on a "Nation's Forum" record speaks at a mile-a-minute clip, apparently intending, with Vermont frugality, to get in every possible word during his four minutes allotted time. Harding recorded a moving address for world peace in 1921 when the bodies of several thousand American service men were returned from France for burial. Hoover is best heard on a Victor record in which he argues with overwhelming earnestness and sincerity against the U. S. entering World War II. Roosevelt's most widely distributed record is his speech, taken off the air, asking Congress for a declaration of war.

Going back to the turn of the century, among the popular records in the slot-machine parlors of those days were excerpts from the speeches of famous men. By dropping in a penny you could hear Gladstone's remarks on thrift or part of Bryan's "Cross of Gold" speech. But the records were not made by Gladstone and Bryan, although the latter, a few years before his death, recorded the "Cross of Gold" oration for Gennett. Other artists occasionally had a voice in turning out these imitations, but most were made by a genius of varied skills, Len Spencer, who was the first world-famed recording artist.

Thousands of collectors have found disks or cylinders bearing titles such as "President McKinley's Speech at the Pan-American Exposition" and most of them still treasure the platters, or rollers, in belief that they were made by McKinley himself. They weren't.

McKinley went to Buffalo to attend the Exposition and spoke there on Sept. 5, 1901. He had no opportunity to make a recording of his address, for he was shot the next day by an anarchist, Leon Czolgosz, and died on Sept. 14. There were no recording booths at the exposition.

However, McKinley was a popular president and in view of his martyrdom the record makers decided disks or cylinders purporting to contain his last address would sell well. In November, 1901, Edison issued a two-minute cylinder of "President McKinley's Last Speech, Delivered at Buffalo, Sept. 5, 1901," but frankly stated in the listing that it was made by Frank C. Stanley, a distinguished bass singer who died in 1910 and is best remembered today as the founder of the Peerless Quartet. Later, Spencer remade the record, but his name was omitted.

Columbia also issued Spencer's version, omitting his name, on the theory, as one of their veteran officials years later explained, that the platter would sell better if the public were given the imprssion, without saying it in so many words, that it had been made by McKinley himself. The industrious Len also recited the piece for Victor, but his name appeared on the label. To this day, hundreds—probably thousands—of platter fanciers cherish the Edison or Columbia records and flatly refuse to believe the truth that William McKinley had nothing to do with making them. It is doubtful also that Grover Cleveland ever recorded, although he may have made a talk congratulating Edison on inventing the phonograph, as many other celebrities did.

The Columbia title of the McKinley record is certainly misleading: "Address by the Late President McKinley at the Pan-American Exposition." But the old Columbia catalogs also contain a Len Spencer version of "Lincoln's Speech at Gettysburg." As yet nobody has arisen to claim that the record was actually made by A. Lincoln himself. But, since Spencer's name doesn't appear on it, somebody probably will!

RCA Custom Record Setup A Boon to 'Little Guy'

By JAMES P. DAVIS

(Manager, RCA Victor Custom Record Division)

Then there was the man who asked: "Why own a cow when milk costs so little?"

The man had the right idea, and his theory as applied to the record business justifies the existence of RCA Victor's Custom Record Division. For, through the availability of the complete recording and manufacturing facilities of an established and reputable organization, the little guy has attained an important position in the commercial phonograph record industry.

James P. Davis

No longer is the person with the million dollar recording idea and the thousand dollar budget stymied because he can't afford to operate a studio and plant. Now, he knows there's no need to worry about factory management and overhead when an experienced record manufacturer is set up to handle his production efficiently and at a relatively low cost to him. He also realizes that it takes years of research and production know-how to turn out the top-quality product to meet and beat his competition.

In short, RCA's custom record operation makes it possible for the independent to go into business on a large or small scale. We offer a complete service—including recording, re-recording, processing and pressing—under the supervision of the same world-famous engineers who have developed RCA Victor's own commercial label. And, in our studios and plants, conveniently located across the country, every custom-order gets the full treatment, based on RCA's unparalleled sound reproduction, technical experience and research.

Today, we press commercial-type phonograph records for more than 100 independent companies. Some of these buy only part of our services. Others go all the way, from the initial recording right down to collating, album packing and shipping in quantity to multiple destinations. While we're producing his pressings and absorbing the attendant headaches, the customer can concentrate on merchandising and sales.

Aside from its role in the commercial phonograph record field, the RCA Custom Record Division handles many other categories of highly specialized work. We make any type of recording in all sizes and speeds for every kind of individual and organization imaginable. We do a tremendous business in electrical transcriptions with advertising agencies and radio stations. RCA custom-made premium and promotion records are widely used by a variety of business firms, schools and church groups. Quite a few of our orders are out of the ordinary and seem impossible sometimes, but in most cases we're able to manage them.

Electronic Watchdog

There would surely be a lot of tomcats unfriendly toward RCA Victor if they only knew that the barking dog who constantly scares them off a certain movie actress' Hollywood estate is merely a custom-made specialty record. And, when one of our engineers, equipped with microphone among other things, enters a telephone booth, he isn't planning to make a call or tap a wire. Chances are he's recording the sound of Japanese beetles munching on leaves. This was a job for a large corporation interested in using the results during an entomology lecture.

The specialty recording field is broad in scope and usually presents a fascinating challenge. Among our assignments have been such odd sounds as silk worms in action, duck calls for use by hunters, aircraft engines for the U. S. Air Force, heartbeats for use in medical studies, church bells, animal mating calls and a hoot owl to frighten pesky starlings. We've also filled orders for records to teach the blind to play musical instruments, to help cure deafness, to teach parakeets how to talk, and a multitude of other purposes.

RCA's Custom Record Division is the leading manufacturer of slidefilm recordings today. Slidefilm producers have come to depend upon our advanced electronic techniques in the development of new methods of dramatizing their film stories through sound. They find our extensive slidefilm music library an effective tool for setting moods and backgrounds.

This year, we've begun to sell RCA Victor's "45" System as a supplement to slidefilms, lectures and brochures in the sales training field.

Boil it down, and you've got a pretty much unlimited custom service in the recording, processing and pressing of the gamut of records and transcriptions. Every day, with the peculiar requirements of each new order, we learn additional means by which our function can be more valuable to customers. RCA Victor's Custom Record Division is the kind of business whose future is guaranteed by the man with the big idea and the small budget. That same man who won't own a cow while milk costs so little.

Ghost Voices—or Sounds That Shouldn't Have Been Recorded

By RONNIE JAMES

Whether the ghost will walk—that is, whether the troupe will be paid—is a question that has harried many a thesp. But in elder days of record making "ghost voices" were also an important topic.

A "ghost voice" is any sound that gets into a record but doesn't belong there. Apparently no special effort was made to keep them out in the 1890s and early 1900s, for they frequently turn up in old records and are sometimes highly diverting. Even today, anyone who lets a platter run until the last groove is reached may occasionally be rewarded with an unrehearsed sound worth hearing.

Take, for instance, the 1927 record of "Oh, How She Could Shake Her Tambourine," which Irving Kaufman made under one of his numerous noms-de-disque—George Beaver. In the very last groove, someone, not Kaufman, exclaims "Gosh durn it!" in a tone of heartfelt agony. The unbilled speaker's grief is obviously so strong it's a wonder he didn't say something more warming. Probably the sound emerged from a harassed soul in the control room.

Records containing profanity don't get on the market, but back in 1939 Brunswick put out an Eddy Duchin version of "Old Man Mose" in which the band thrush, Patricia Norman, exclaimed something that sounded almost unbelievable. Maybe that wasn't what Patty said, but it sure sounded like it! And at least one New York collector is said to have a rare aggregation of discarded pressings, in which the boys and girls express themselves with untrammeled verve when something goes wrong.

Going back into the comparative Dark Ages, one funny platter is a 7-inch Berliner on which a basso, George Broderick, sings "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep." The record was supposed to have a preliminary announcement, and Broderick does give out the song title and his own name. Then, after the piano starts jangling, he remembers he hasn't identified the brand name and hastily exclaims, "Berliner Reck-ud!" instead of pronouncing it "reck-cord," as announcers were supposed to do in those days.

Seemingly, singers whose names started with George were particularly inclined to have trouble with announcements. George Alexander made a cylinder of "Mighty Lak' a Rose" for Columbia. But he was mixed up for the moment about what company he was singing for, and announced it as: "Edi-Columbia record."

Epileptic Thrush

At the very beginning of a 1914 Victor of "Where Can I See You Tonight?" by Ada Jones and Billy Murray, there is a faint giggle by Ada. Although the most popular woman record maker of the acoustic period, the portly Ada suffered from epilepsy, and occasionally one of her recording engagements would be ended by a seizure. Murray says that more than once when they were recording a duet he would "hear a plop, look around and find poor Ada unconscious on the floor.")

Outstanding among sounds that shouldn't be there but are is one at the beginning of an Edison Cylinder, "Pickings from 'Puck,'" by Felix Haley, of the original 'Way Down East' company." Before Mr. Haley begins his unbelievably corny monolog, he asserts in a loud, firm voice: "I hollered!" Apparently the recording director had complained that he wasn't speaking loudly enough in making records by the round and had exclaimed: "Say, you! Holler louder next time!" To which Mr. Haley indignantly retorted: "I hollered!"

Myers also made a Globe cylinder of a forgotten ditty entitled "The Man in the Moon is a Lady." Just after he finishes the chorus with that assertion, somebody in the background yells distinctly: "You're a liar!"

Not So Many Releases Yesteryear

"Too many releases!" Thats the plaint which has been going up from record dealers for years.

It was also being heard 30 or 40 years ago, but there was less justification then than now. Take the Victor supplement for October, 1920, as typical.

There are single-faced Red Seal releases by Alfred Cortot, Emilio De Gogorza, Giuseppe De Luca, Geraldine Farrar, Flonzaley Quartet, Mabel Garrison, Jascha Heifetz, Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise Homer Stires, John McCormack, the Philadelphia Orchestra, Titta Ruffo and Reinald Werrenrath—who by that time had worked himself up from the lower-priced black and blue labels into a "celebrity" status. Quite a lineup of bigtimers, but nothing suggesting an overflow.

Only two dance records were listed—a double-sided coupling by Joseph C. Smith's Orchestra, and a Hawaiian guitar performance that could be used for terping if you liked.

In the pop vocal field—the late Walter C. Kelly made his first appearance as "The Virginian Judge." "Wee Willie" Robyn, later one of the standbys of Roxy's Gang, sang two ballads, "I'm in Heaven When I'm in My Mother's Arms" and Ernie Ball's hit, "Down the Trail to Home Sweet Home." Billy Murray and Ed Smalle teamed up in "Dardanella Blues," a sequal to the phenomenally successful "Dardanella." On the other side the Peerless Quartet gave George Gershwin a break by caroling his first big hit, "Swanee." John Steel sang two Irving Berlin numbers from the Ziegfeld Follies of 1920, "Tell Me, Little Gypsy" and "The Girls of My Dreams," and a young lady named Sally Hamlin catered to the younger set with recitations of "The Three Little Pigs" and Eugene Field's poem, "The Drum."

And that was the October, 1920, Victor list.

Incidentally, while many more records are sold now than in the pre-electric days, and platter distribution of 1,000,000 copies or more is quite frequently reported, it's doubtful that the average pop number sells as well now as in the days before the mike pushed the horn out of the way. There are almost innumerable small companies today, whose individual sales are not large but go to swell the overall total. Back yonder, when the number of platter-makers was small by comparison and monthly releases were a trickle compared to today's flood, there was a better chance to concentrate on big sales of just a few issues.

With such titles as "Down the Trail," "Swanee" and "Tell Me, Little Gypsy," Victor's pop sales for the month under consideration should have been hefty, even though there were only a few disks to choose from.

100 Disk Jocks Control Music Biz

these 100 deejays, no song can be a major song, no artist can remain a major artist, and no new performer can become a new name. If this 100 can create a Johnnie Ray overnight, by the same token they can destroy a star overnight.

If these 100 disk jockeys plug a new performer who is a real talent, they speed up his acceptance by the public to a terrific degree. If they drop an established name (whether the reason be grapevine hearsay, or bad taste on the part of the artist in his public behavior), then slowly but surely that artist's days are numbered.

Of course, it has to be accepted that these 100 major performers do not consciously act in unison, but it also has to be accepted that somehow, whether because of trade papers, music men, record distributors, or, as is probably true, a combination of these factors, over a period of time they seem to react to the same toward tunes, artists etc.

Such power so concentrated means that certain evils are present in the disk jockey business that are harmful to the individual, and to the group of performers. Much is written and mentioned about payola—the gratuities performers receive for doing certain favors for performers, record companies, record distributors, publishers, song writers, etc. That payola is very real and very present, is, of course, obvious. That it is possible to buy a hit or make an artist by payola. is, by the same token, ridiculous. The performer has too much at stake to risk it by plugging a dog, whether it be artist, song, or product. This self interest is natural, and keeps the music business, and show business in general, relatively honest.

The real discrimination to be practiced by the name jock, or the semi-name performer, is: when a gift or gratuity is extended in return for specified favors and activities, that gift is not acceptable. When, because you are a performer and many people want to use you as a natural means of exploitation for their product; then the dinners, the Xmas gifts, the presents for the kids, etc., are a natural part of doing business, of establishing contacts, and of building relationships. They are no more reprehensible in the music business than in the steel business or the garment business, and no one in their right mind can condemn this activity. It is simply normal business behavior.

The self interest that a disk jockey must have is also obvious. His responsibility is first to the audience. His importance in the music business is directly proportionate to the amount of audience, and total influence he has. His national reputation is based on his ability to do certain things in a highly concentrated market. Let this audience wane, and the contacts, the favors, and the importance wane proportionately. This is an obvious, inescapable fact. Everyone goes with a winner. This doesn't mean that you cannot make friends and keep them, regardless of your importance or influence. It does mean that everything that you do as a performer must be based on self interest to maintain yourself as a top pereformer.

Professional Integrity

.For example, Tony Bennett is one of my closest friends. Intellectually, musically, socially, we're friends. When Al Martino's record of "Here in My Heart" was released, it was an immediate smash in Cleveland. Then Bennett's record came out. Now, to plug his record simply because he and Mitch Miller and Percy Faith are my friends would have injured me, I felt, as a performer in this area. Logically, I played Martino's record. This had no influence on my relationships with any of the above people, because it was based on something apart from the music business. I am still good friends with all of them, and I am relatively unacquainted with Martino. You have to go with a winner.

People talk about good songs and bad songs, good singers and bad singers, good groups and bad groups; there is no such thing in the music business. There is success or no success. There are varying degrees of quality in the music business, but these are not to be confused with commercial acceptability. A great song qualitatively may not sell; hence, for the music business as a commodity, it is not good. The fact that a great song or artist will command a public of its own and will have meaning in the society is highly important to American culture, but has nothing to do with the music business.

GENTLEMEN:

CONGRATULATIONS ON YOUR 50TH ANNIVERSARY! WE ARE CERTAINLY HAPPY TO FEEL THAT WE PLAYED A SMALL PART IN CONTRIBUTING SONGS TO YOUR GREAT PARADE OF HITS THRU THE YEARS.

WHEN WE FIRST WENT IN BUSINESS IN 1949, TONY MARTIN RECORDED "THERE'S NO TOMORROW" AND HUGO WINTERHALTER RECORDED "COUNT EVERY STAR". BOTH WERE BIG HITS.

IN 1950, THERE WAS PERRY COMO'S "I WANNA GO HOME" AND RALPH FLANAGAN'S "WHAT, WHERE AND WHEN".

IN 1951, WE HAD FREDDY MARTIN'S "NEVER BEEN KISSED" AND APRIL STEVENS' "AND SO TO SLEEP AGAIN".

AND NOW IN 1952, WE HAVE JUST HAD A HIT RECORD WITH EDDIE FISCHER'S "THAT'S THE CHANCE YOU TAKE" AND IT LOOKS LIKE ANOTHER BIG ONE COMING UP WITH JUNE VALLI'S "MIGHTY LONESOME FEELIN'".

YES, GENTLEMEN, AGAIN CONGRATULATIONS AND MANY THANKS TO ALL OF YOU.

SINCERELY,
George Paxton

AN EGG THAT STARTED A RECORDING TEAM

Thirty-odd years ago Al Bernard and Ernest Hare were one of the most popular comedy teams on wax. The partnership got off to an odd start—all because Hare, who lived in a downstairs apartment, yelled up a dumbwaiter shaft to his upstairs neighbor, Bernard, to lend him an egg.

Looking down, it struck Bernard that Hare looked something like a returned soldier standing beneath a window and mooning up at his girl friend. That inspired Al to write a blackface comedy sketch, "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," which he and Hare recorded for Edison. Platter was such a hit the pair made others in a similar vein for most of the record companies of period. Boys always blacked up for recording dates and frequently were so funny with their patter that orchestras couldn't play for laughing.

Hare teamed up in 1921 with Billy Jones as "The Happiness Boys," most popular singing duo of early radio days. He died in 1939. Bernard passed 10 years later, after having devoted his entire career to blackface humor.

Irwin Scott's New Orch

San Antonio, Sept. 30.

Irwin Scott, who had played trumpet in the old pit orchestra at the Texas Theatre, has organized a new dance band here.

It's made up of local musicians.

Tenor Took Cash Over Victor Stock

Although Enrico Caruso's Victor Red Seal records gave the greatest impulse to popularizing "classical" platters, he was not the first well known tenor to perpetuate his voice in wax.

That distinction, from a commercial standpoint, probably should go to Feruccio Giannini, who died in 1948, aged 79. In Victor's early days, Giannini, father of Metop thrush Dusolina Giannini, was asked to make a record. As payment he could take either a block of stock in fledgling company or $100 real money. Like some other well-known artists, Giannini decided the phonograph might be a passing novelty. So he took cash.

Giannini had previously recorded in 1896 for Berliner's 7-inch platters, forerunner of Victor. He also made more for Victor as well as some Columbia disks. Among Victors is a curiosity: a "Miserere" from "Trovatore," with Giannini singing the tenor role of Manrico, and Leonora's soprano responses by a cornet! Accompaniment is by the "Royal Marine Band." Another "Miserere" version had the soprano part sung by "Miss Merilees," but still with Marine Band backing.

Aussie's Peter Dawson All-Time Disk Champ

To find the all-time most consistently popular recording artist you have to go overseas. There's little question that the honor belongs to Peter Dawson.

This Australian-born bass-baritone came to England in 1904 at the age of 20. Almost at once he began to make records—at first for nearly every company but after a few years exclusively for Gramophone (better known today as H. M. V.). And Dawson has been making records ever since. He has never had a big following in the U.S., but throughout the British Empire his popularity has never flagged.

Today the irrepressible Pete Dawson, whose practical jokes used to drive his fellow artists almost beserk, is one of the world's champion commuters. He spends part of his time in England and part in Australia, where he helps run a canning factory inherited from his father. When he is about to leave for his home country he makes enough records to provide for regular releases until he returns. But if anything should happen to keep him in Australia longer than he expects, he can always do some recording at H.M.V.'s Australian branch. The Empire must have its Dawson ditties!

Electronic Engineers Work Years Ahead of Present Standards; Result Is an Ever-Improving Phono System

In the research laboratories of the RCA Victor Division, Radio Corporation of America, phonograph engineers and sound specialists work years ahead of market needs, perfecting better products for tomorrow.

From these laboratories and those of the Victor Talking Machine Co., predecessors of the present organization, has come a rich flow of new developments and improvements which have contributed significantly to the refining of the recording art.

And yet, although the new 45 rpm and 33⅓ rpm records represent the high-water mark of progress in the art, the research program in the laboratory has not slackened. This endless quest for something better is a heritage from Eldridge R. Johnson, founder of Victor, who, decades ago, wrote:

"The Victor Co. is now in possession of many patents and secret processes, but our greatest secret process is this: 'we seek to improve everything we do every day.' Just as soon as a certain improvement is secured, the experts in the organization are set to the task of making something new that is better than the last improvement."

So successful was Johnson in taking the "bugs" and kinks out of Emile Berliner's gramophone that he was given a contract to produce the machines for the Berliner Gramophone Co.

Firsts

However, Johnson continued with his own experiments. He developed the first spring motor for a disk-type talking machine. The motor assured a constant turntable speed, could be regulated, was quiet in operation, and was easy to make and use. Above all, he developed a new disk-type record which was superior to any record then on the market.

Among the most important of Johnson's early contributions to the recording art was his development of a new recording process. This process pointed the way to the mass production of top-quality copies from a "master" record. Under the Johnson process, the recording was "cut" in a wax disk. The platter, in turn, was developed into a metal plate by a delicate electroplating process. Records produced by this means had a performance quality far superior to any other records on the market.

Another Milestone

The year 1925 was a milestone in the art of sound recording and reproduction—bringing both electrical recording and the Orthophonic Victrola phonograph. With electrical recording, the microphone replaced the recording horn. The recording stylus was actuated by electrical impulses, not soundwaves. High and low frequencies never before heard on records were successfully recorded. A new era of recorded sound had begun.

One year later, however, sound engineers developed electrical reproduction, which sounded the knell for mechanical-reproduction instruments. The chain of recording and reproduction was now all-electrical.

Changes continued in the recording art. Needles gave way to more efficient jewel pickups. In 1927, Victor nationally marketed the first instrument capable of playing more than one record without manual change. The age of automatic changers had arrived.

The 45 rpm system represents the latest of many significant advances in the recording art. It offers the first phonograph record and changer literally made for each other; the first record made in a single size for all classifications of music; a changer that is half the size of conventional models and requires approximately 25% fewer parts; a new high in operating efficiency.

In Princeton, N. J., at RCA's David Sarnoff Research Center, scientists continue experiments with sound instruments. Many of these experiments are conducted in what is said to be the "quietest room in the world," a laboratory so completely devoid of sound that a person in the room can hear his blood coursing through his veins.

From this room and other laboratories of the Radio Corp. of America and its RCA Victor Division will continue to come the sound products of the future. Such progress has marked the history of the phonograph and record industry ever since Edison waxed "Mary had a Little Lamb" in 1877.

GRACE SPENCER FIRST FEMME CHIRP ON DISKS

Three-line obit in the Aug. 20, 1952, VARIETY said: "Mrs. Grace Spencer Doolittle, 80, former singer, died Aug. 13 in New York."

Item is of special interest to those who know early platter history. Grace Spencer was first woman to be personally recorded by Thomas A. Edison for his brown wax cylinders and believed herself first to record for Victor. Shortly before her death she recalled.

"I know I was the first woman singer to sing for Mr. Edison. After father and I lunched with him and his wife, he took us all over to his recording room, where under his supervision I made a solo—the first female record there. That, I find, from my journal of events, was the fall of 1897. After that, Mr. Child of the Victor Co. sent for me."

Miss Spencer, who retired after marrying Dr. Willard Foster Doolittle, sang for several years in the Lyric Trio with Harry Macdonough, tenor, and William F. Hooley.

First 'Victrola Corner' In White House—Pres. Taft

President William H. Taft was the first American President to go in for "canned music" in a big way. In 1910, Mr. Taft installed a "Victrola corner" in a room of the White House, and the Victor Co. made considerable use of the fact in its advertising.

Taft's Democratic rival in the 1908 campaign, William Jennings Bryan, also loved phono music but became an Edison Diamond Disk enthusiast. His daughter, Ruth Bryan Owen, later ambassador to Denmark, acquired her father's love of reproduced sounds and during her travels with a Chautauqua in the 1920s made a practice of visiting music stores along the way and listening to the music of the Orthophonic Victrola, the Columbia Viva-Tonal and the Brunswick Panatrope.

Vogue for Name Bands As Big Disk Sellers Kicked Off by 'Pops'

The name band biz, as a big-selling record feature, is usually conceded to have started with Paul Whiteman's first Victor platters in the 1920s.

During the decade preceding, dancing at home to talking machine music had been a popular indoor sport, but most records were played by phono company house bands. Nearly all Victor dance platters from 1912 to 1917 were by the Victory Military Band (a convenient disguise for Sousa, Pryor and Conway bands). Then outside groups such as the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, Ted Lewis Jazz Band, Lopez & Hamilton's Kings of Harmony, Earl Fuller's Jazz Band and Joseph C. Smith's Orchestra began to be waxed.

But Whiteman really kicked off the big band biz boom when Victor a.&r. man, late Eddie King, heard his troupe play at Atlantic City. It took almost a whole day for the boys to make their first platter—a 12-incher of "Avalon" and "Dance of the Hours" from "Gioconda." Not being used to recording, their nerves were on edge and every time anything went wrong, somebody exclaimed "damn!"—thus ruining the record.

Once initial nervousness was over, "Pops" and the boys got recording techniques down pat, and seldom took more than two hours for a session.

The late great diva Nellie Melba used to relate a similar incident. The soprano said that, stepping back from recording horn to take a high note, she exclaimed "damn!" and the horn drank in this unseemly speech with all the clarity of a recording angel. Melba's mood wasn't angelic when she had to make record over.

SOUR NOTE THAT MADE HANS VON BULOW FAINT

Musical celebrities of the '90s used to visit Edison's laboratory and make experimental records just to get an idea of what they sounded like.

Amusing story is told of visit of German pianist, Hans von Bulow. The great man condescended to make a cylinder of his pianistic virtuosity. Result didn't sound much like a piano, which came out on wax in those days like a cross between a banjo and a zither, but it was good enough to show he had played a wrong note.

When the recording director, Theodore Wangemann, told von Bulow he had made a slip, the virtuoso refused to believe it. He was peevish about even a suggestion of such an impossible thing. But when the roller was played, and artist himself heard the wrong note, he fainted!

Wangemann, incidentally, toured Europe for Edison and made many recordings for the inventor's private collection. Several piano solos which he recorded by Johannes Brahms turned up in Germany a few years ago. Wangemann was killed when struck by a Long Island train in 1906.

Mooney Back, With Glaser

Art Mooney has returned to Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. after a term with Music Corp. of America.

Mooney signed with ABC for a five-year period.

Rachmaninoff in the Middle; Edison's 'Cute' Ads Vs. Victor

The story is probably apocryphal, but there's a legend that when Sergei Rachmaninoff had his first recording engagement for Edison Diamond Disks he played the opening bars of Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody in so subdued a fashion that they didn't "take." The recording engineer wanted the great man instructed to play a little louder, but everybody stood in so much awe of "Rocky" that no one wanted to approach him. Finally, a hard-boiled gent volunteered for the assignment. He walked into the recording studio, tapped the celebrated composer-pianist on the shoulder, and—according to the story—said something at which Rachmaninoff grinned broadly and began giving with more volume.

After a successful record had been achieved, the imperturbable citizen was asked what tactful approach he had used to make the virtuoso hammer harder. He replied: "Oh, I just sez, 'Say, you damn Roosian, play louder'!"

As related elsewhere, platter companies have a notorious objection to giving plugs to the opposition. Conspicuous exception is recent action of makers of Remington long-players "welcoming" Victor's new lower-priced Bluebirds to the LP field as a move toward bringing price of the 33's down to a "more reasonable level."

Edison did the same thing, but from a different motive, after Rachmaninoff, who had been exclusive to Edison, signed up with Victor. Magazines carried full-page ads showing pianist at his Steinway, playing in direct comparison with New Edison to prove there was "no difference" between Edison recorded music and the artist's own playing. Ad contained a gimmick to this effect:

"We are glad to announce that Rachmaninoff has also made records for one of the standard talking machines. We invite comparison. Hear Rachmaninoff at any Edison dealer."

This, of course, was an implication that the Edison piano recording was better than Victor and it brought a rejoinder from Victor that Rachmaninoff signed an exclusive Victor pact only after an extensive test of "other reproducing mediums."

Another stunt Edison used to disguise its chagrin at losing its greatest pianist was to advertise an open letter from Thomas A. Edison to Rachmaninoff, recalling that R.'s Edison contract provided the company would not pay royalties on the sale of his Edison disks if he afterwards recorded the same selections for any other firm.

However, Mr. Edison generously said, in effect, he was so pleased that the public would have an opportunity to compare his recording processes with those of the "talking machines" that he would waive the contract stipulation and pay those royalties, anyway. He urged Rachmaninoff to play for Victor the same numbers he had made for Edison, "so the public may decide for itself."

Servicing the Record Dealer

By WILLIAM I. ALEXANDER

Advertising and Sales Promotion Manager

The record business probably is the most consistently fast-moving business that exists today.

The rapidly changing tastes of the music-buying public can make a new tune a smash hit overnight, and then can let it die just as quickly. If record companies do not have their merchandise shipments and promotion material geared to coincide with that brief period of public demand, then they're out of luck in the sales department.

There is no other business known to me wherein the keenness of competition places such demands of immediacy and thoroughness on the manufacturer in getting dealer stores serviced nationally.

We believe we maintain one of the most complete servicing organizations for dealers with respect to advertising and sales promotion. Annual polls of dealer opinion seem to back that belief.

Our broad national advertising program uses radio, television and magazines. Radio programs are scheduled regularly, including a number of well-received syndicated features covering more than 600 programs.

Record commercials are also included on "Kukla, Fran & Ollie" and the Dennis Day show on the NBC television network, and on the Phil Harris-Alice Faye show on NBC's radio network.

Probably the most important single promotion in the field of radio is the Disk Jockey Service. Large lists of DJ's receive Pop, Red Seal, Western, and Blues & Rhythm releases regularly. Timing of these shipments with the release of merchandise and growth in popularity of the tunes is a job in itself.

Placement of space ads includes the show business publications, music trade papers, large circulation consumer magazines, music books, and concert programs.

Beaucoup Tieups

Individually and through distributors, dealer stores regularly receive a wide variety of advertising and promotion material. Window display service guarantees each dealer nine major displays a year, with eight or nine bonuses usually thrown in. Counter merchandisers, monthly pop and Red Seal hangers, and weekly pop streamers are part of the dealer service, in addition to weekly bulletins.

Each dealer builds up a cooperative advertising fund through sale of RCA Victor merchandise. He can use this money for mailings or other promotions, or he can make use of newspaper mats provided through our distributors, with RCA Victor footing part of the bill. We also provide TV commercial and radio spots for dealer use.

Personal appearances by artists are usually planned in connection with concert tours by the artists, and in each case result in tremendous sales of the particular artist's records.

More than 2,000 dealers receive each month RCA Victor numerical catalog listings. Unique in the business is our "Music America Loves Best" catalog, 5,000,000 copies of which are provided for consumers through dealer stores. Such an all-encompassing program naturally presents difficulties, but not because of the size of the undertaking. The chief cause of the problems that arise is the very nature of the business—the fact that it is so fast-moving and must be "played by ear."

But that is also the chief reason it's so interesting.

Some Real Museum Pieces

Until after it was taken over by RCA, the old Victor Talking Machine Co. retained the masters and matrices of every record. Even after a number had been cut out of the catalog for many years you could get a special white label pressing at a price depending on the platter's original classification. For instance, a single-faced pressing of a pop song or comic sketch in the black label series cost only 60c in the early 1920s. Later it was decided the special pressing biz was too much time and trouble and the price was gradually hiked to $8. When materials became scarce during World War II, special pressings were discontinued. By that time nearly all the masters of old pop numbers and many of the classical Red Seals had been scrapped.

However, a search through the storage vaults of any long established company probably would bring some surprise discoveries. Just out of curiosity, an employee of the Columbia plant at Bridgeport recently went through some apparent rubbish in a dark corner and made some finds. They included the master of Bert Williams singing "I've Such a Funny Feeling When I Look at You." The comedian recorded the number on Sept. 29, 1906, but the master apparently had been stored out of place and missing for more than 40 years.

The researcher also found unissued disk dubbings of two cylinders made by Pope Leo XIII in the Vatican on Feb. 5, 1903, and an unpublished "Address by Admiral Robert E. Peary Before Leaving for the North Pole," recorded in New York July 13, 1906. (Incidentally, one of the rarest Victors is a talk on his "discovery" of the Pole, made by Dr. Frederick Cook late in 1909 and yanked from the catalog a few months later after Cook was denounced as a faker.)

It isn't generally known that Bert Williams and George Walker made several Victor platters in 1901. Copies are almost impossible to find now. The Victor record catalog of the period said Williams and Walker were engaged at "the highest figure in the history of the talking machine business." But it didn't say how much!

RCA's Fort Knox of Old Masters, The Disk Kind, That Is

Camden, N. J.

Sheltered behind 18-inch brick walls and guarded by uniformed patrolmen, a priceless treasure of master recordings of the world's greatest musical performances—those of Caruso, Galli-Curci, Ruffo, Chaliapin, Paderewski, Rachmaninoff, and others—is preserved for present and future generations of music lovers.

Here, also, are to be found the original masters of some wonderful old records that have nothing to do with music, like Will Rogers' famous "Talks to Bankers" and "First Political Speech."

The custodian—and owner—of this irreplaceable treasure is the RCA Victor Division of the Radio Corp. of America, successor to the Victor Talking Machine Co., which made the records. The repository of the collection is quite aptly called the "Treasure Vault."

Out of this vault, RCA Victor has drawn a varied selection of the most representative recordings of music's "Golden Age," the first quarter of this century, and re-recorded them for the company's "Treasury of Immortal Performances" series.

Behind heavy doors the vault is divided into two adjoining rooms, each 30 by 90 feet Each room is filled by long rows of shelves, loaded with large brown envelopes standing on edge. Inside the brown envelopes are flannel envelopes protecting the master recordings.

Frank Scull, librarian, and his two assistants maintain a constant check on the library with a detailed card index system. There is no room for mistakes in the Treasure Vault, because these original masters are more than just the property of RCA Victor. They are an important part of the cultural heritage of America.

The oldest recording bears the date Dec. 31, 1897, and the name R. G. Ingersoll. It is a reading by the famous Philadelphia lawyer of one of his famed essays.

Probably the most famous star of yesterday whose recorded voice is preserved in the Treasure Vault is Enrico Caruso. Among the 235 Caruso masters in the vault are some which have never been heard by the public. The oldest is "Celeste Aida," from Verdi's opera, transcribed in 1903.

About 70,000 masters are kept in the vault. Several are recordings of the same music. Galli-Curci, for example, recorded Rigoletto's "Dearest Name" 21 times before she was satisfied with the result. Counting the working masters and the No. 2 masters, in addition to the originals, the library contains 278,000 recordings.

Scull, who has been taking care of the masters for almost 30 years, enjoys memories of the days when he ran to fetch sandwiches, milk and coffee for McCormack, Schumann-Heink and Kreisler, and wondered why that pianist, Paderewski, let his hair grow so long.

Famous Victor Advertising

From 30 to 40 years ago one of most famous advertising slogans was Victor Talking Machine Co.'s "Will There Be a Victrola in Your Home This Christmas?" Appearing in leading magazines several weeks before the holiday season, the ad made Victrolas move out of dealers' stock at a pleasantly profitable rate.

Wording of ad, however, apparently was an afterthought. In one of the first 1906 issues of the Saturday Evening Post, a back page ad queried: "Did you get a Victor for Christmas?" Company must have got hep to fact that post-Yuletide publicizing was poor tactics, so made the switch to the more protable inquiry.

Through the years, Victor advertising was consistently more effective than that of most competitors. (It was also much more extensive.) One of its most unusual ads in Ladies Home Journal for December, 1908, showed two Victors of old-fashioned horn variety. Both were filled with photos of famous recording artists. One machine contained the Red Seal galaxy (Caruso was so important he was shown twice), and the other had popular singers, monologists, etc.

First Recordings Of Jazz, Spelled 'Jass'

By JAMES L. SHAW

Jazz, destined to revolutionize pop music for better or worse, according to point of view, made probably its first appearance in any record list in Victor's May, 1917, supplement. Plattner No. 18255 combined "Dixieland Jass (that was the way it was spelled at first) One-Step," with a foxtrot, "Livery Stable Blues," both played by the "Original Dixieland 'Jass' Band." Catalog Editor James E. Richardson commented: "The Jass Band is the very latest thing in the development of music. It has sufficient power and penetration to inject new life into a mummy, and will keep ordinary human dancers on their feet till breakfast time."

Columbia's first jazz mentions occurred in July supplement—two months after Victor. A vocal record, "Hong Kong," by Elizabeth Brice and Charles King, was described as "a round trip ticket to lantern-lit Chinese gardens and the beauties of 'Jazz' land." The word was spelled "jass" in the dance list, which began by asking: "Has any greater dance record ever been offered than the two 'Jass' song sensations, 'Hawaiian Butterfly' and 'Hong Kong,' as arranged and played by Prince's Band?" But this coupling, played by the Columbia house band directed by Charles A. Prince was not a jazz record by present standards.

Same Columbia list contained "It's a Long, Long Time Since I've Been Home" and "Just the Kind of a Girl (You'd Love to Make Your Wife)" by an obscure group called Borbee's "Jass" Orchestra. Combo consisted of two banjoists, violinist, drummer and pianist, and the thin, lady-like sounds it produced had no kinship with authentic jazz.

Victor's second jazz platter, "Slippery Hank" and "Yah-de-Dah," was played by Earl Fuller's Famous Jazz Band (it must have got famous within a few months!), and there was a catalog reference to a top-hatted gent who is still right up there among the dance bandleaders. Said the annotator: "The sounds as of a dog in his dying anguish are from Ted Lewis' clarinet."

Showing how rapidly jass/jazz was gaining popularity, there was also a vocal record by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan of "Everybody's Jazzin' It." "Everybody Loves a Jazz Band" was another pop song of the time.

Genesis of 'Ragtime'

It's hard to tell when word "ragtime" first entered record catalogs. Edison cylinder list for 1899 has a "Rag Time Medley," consisting of "Mr. Johnson, Turn Me Loose" and "Oh, Mr. Johnson," played by the banjoist, Ruby Brooks, of the vaude team of Brooks & Ginter, who died in 1906. Ragtime song listings are "Ragtime Liz," "Rastus Thompson's Ragtime Cakewalk," "The Ragtime Brigade Is Off to War" (the Spanish-American War, of course; the first World War inspired "The Ragtime Volunteers Are Off to War" in 1917); as well as "You've Been a Good Old Wagon but You've Done Broke Down," generally considered one of the first songs to show a definite ragtime influence.

First noted ragtime pianist to record was Mike Bernard, often termed the greatest exponent of the "white ragtime" school. Bernard played for Columbia from 1912 to 1918. One of his best was "The Battle of San Juan Hill," in which he imitates bugle calls, cannon fire and assorted battle noises by means of his keyboard virtuosity. Felix Arndt came along for Victor in 1914. A few brown wax cylinders exist of "An Assortment of Rags" apparently played in the late '90s by one Robert Hockett, who finishes with a flourish and a laugh. In recent years player piano rolls by Scott Joplin, James Scott and other Negro ragtime masters have been recorded and issued by Circle Records.

Perhaps most outlandish ragtime stunt ever achieved by a platter pianist was done by Melville Ellis on a 1912 Columbia. He combined "Alexander's Ragtime Band" with snatches of the "Fire Music" from Wagner's "Walkure."

Victor's 'Coney Island Crowd'

In pre-electric era, Victor recording artists agreed that they fell into three fairly well-defined groups.

Those making black label records of current hits and dance tunes often referred to themselves as "The Coney Island Crowd." The term was suggested by a talk made at a meeting of Victor distributors and artists by the late Calvin Child, then head of the company's Red Seal activities. Child urged distribs to concentrate on selling highbrow platters "and try to get the public away from the Coney Island stuff." Pop artists' ruffled feelings were somewhat soothed when prexy E. R. Johnson arose to say he felt the crack about Coney was uncalled for. He pointed out that if it were not for the profits Victor made from pops it couldn't afford to absorb losses on many of its Red Seal contracts. Pop crowd then adopted generic title of "Coney Island Crowd."

Next in line up the ladder were the performers who appeared on the single-faced purple or double-faced blue label disks, sold at a slightly higher price than the black pops. They specialized in "standard" recital and concert numbers, but also appeared, under disguised names, on the black labels. These performers, of whom Elsie Baker, Olive Kline, Lucy Isabelle Marsh and Lambert Murphy were typical, had got much of their training by singing in church choirs. Tenor John Young and baritone Frederick Wheeler also recorded duets of gospel hymns for all the companies under the aliases of Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison. Young, aged 81, still lives in New York, but Wheeler died a couple of years ago.

The third, topflight group was the Red Seal contingent, often referred to as "the Red Sealers" or "the Real Singers." Mostly foreign-born, in contrast to the other two groups, they were headed by Caruso as operatic tenor and John McCormack as balladeer.

Although the line of demarcation was clear, there was a fraternal feeling, and the three "classes" mingled indiscriminately at the Victor lunch room in Camden, where a standout comic was likely to be seen telling the great Enrico how he'd always had a secret longing to sing "Otello," while Caruso confessed he'd give a lot to be able to warble comic songs as well as his table mate.

Record Industry's 75th Anni

ly pursued this philosophy in his advertising campaigns. Net result of his enterprise was to lift the instrument out of the nickelodeon stage and make it the great new medium of show business that it is today. Edison, who much later became known as the "Wizard of Menlo Park," and was probably most famous man in world when he died aged 84, in 1931, was only 30 when the idea of recording and reproducing sound first occurred to him in 1877. Previously, unknown to him, other men had played with the idea. Leon Scott, a Frenchman, made a device in 1857 which he called a phonoautograph. It looked a lot like Edison's first try at making a phonograph. You spoke into its "funnel" and a pig's bristle scratched wavy lines on a cylinder coated with lampblack. Twenty years later, another Frenchman, Charles Cros, wrote an article theorizing on how it might be possible to make the "phonoautograph" reproduce sounds. But Edison had never heard of Cros' ideas when he hit on the reproducing notion, and neither Scott nor Cros ever took practical steps toward making their Gallic contraptions "talk."

The home-entertainment possibilities of Edison's cylinder-type machines were not immediately recognized. Chief role was as slot-machine amusement in barrooms, nickelodeons and penny arcades. It remained for Emile Berliners disk machine and its devlopment by Johnson and Victor to realize its potentialities as a musical instrument.

Edison got the idea that he might obtain a playback of reproduced sound while experimenting on a device for automatically recording telegraph messages. With a disk of paper laid on a revolving platen, signals were embossed on paper and repeated at high speed. The sounds had an eerie, almost human quality and Edison decided that if he could record the movement of the diaphragm he could record and reproduce the voice and other sounds.

"Professor Edison," as newspapers then called him, drew a crude sketch of what he had in mind and told one of his aides, Swiss-born John Kruesi, to make it, at a price between $18 and $30. Kruesi didn't figure it would work, and Edison didn't expect to make a go of the first try. His machine consisted of a grooved cylinder around which tinfoil stiffened with antimony was to be wrapped; a holder with a sharp metal needle; a crank; a mouthpiece to speak into; and another mouthpiece, or "funnel," through which the reproduced sound should emerge.

Unsung Heroes

Kruesi worked for 30 hours without rest and with almost no food—he was almost as much a "sleepless wonder" as Edison—and on Wed., Aug. 15, 1877, the first phonograph was ready. Kruesi stood by, as did Charles Carman, foreman of Edison's machine shop, who had bet the inventor a box of cigars the machine wouldn't work. Edison wrapped tinfoil around the cylinder, set the needle at the beginning, and shouted "Mary Had a Little Lamb" into the mouthpiece. He reset the needle at the beginning, resumed his cranking, and the thing squeakily repeated the saga of Mary and her pet. In somewhat more human voices Kruesi exclaimed, "Mein Gott im Himmel!" and Carman snorted, in assumed disgust, "Well, I guess I've lost!"

Sound of the original tinfoil phonograph, and others that followed, was frequently compared to that of ventriloquist's dummy. Johnson's first description of the sound of these early machines was that it resembled a "parrot with a bad cold in its head." In fact, it sounded so dummy-like that early exhibitors were accused of producing recorded sounds by voice-throwing. But, as bad as the recording was, the human voice for the first time in history had been repeated by a machine.

Although Edison was already a famous inventor, he and his associates were hard up in 1877. One of them, Edward H. Johnson, decided to try to raise some money by lecturing in Northern and Central New York on Edison's inventions. One night in Buffalo he mentioned that Edison was working on a device to record sounds, and the next morning a paper came out with a headline that Edison had invented a "talking machine." Thus was born the term, "talking machine," which Edison at first approved but later disliked and disowned. He always insisted that his Diamond Disk phonograph was no "talking machine" but "an instrumentality for the re-creation of sound."

When news got around that Edison had made a machine that would talk, thousands of sightseers came to Menlo Park to get an eyeful and earful, and the Pennsylvania RR ran special trains to haul the crowds. In December, 1877, Edison took the machine to the offices of the Scientific American. He had prepared a piece of foil containing the words, "Good morning. How do you do? How do you like the phonograph?" Such a crowd formed that the floor was in danger of collapsing.

Soon afterwards, Edison temporarily switched from the cylinder to a disk machine and maintained its reproduction was "perfect." His first patents, issued in January, 1878, covered both disk and cylinder recording by the hill-and-dale (vertical-cut) method.

Emile Berliner's Entry

In 1888 another inventor entered the field—Emile Berliner, naturalized American citizen of German birth, who had had a hand in perfecting the telephone. He pioneered a machine he called the gramophone, differing sharply from the Edison wax cylinder-type in that it used flat disks. He did not obtain a U. S. patent until about 1895, and two years later, brought one of his machines to Johnson's Camden machine shop for repairs. Johnson was so fascinated with the gramophone that an immediate association was made with Berliner, laying the foundations for the Victor Talking Machine Co. and, eventually the RCA Victor organization.

The word "Victor" did not appear in the company until 1901 when, according to one story, Johnson felt that he had mastered the problems of the Berliner contrivance, and was happy and proud of his "victory." In 1902 what was to become the Victor dog was painted by Francis Barraud who eventually sold the trademark to the British Gramophone Co., Victor's English affiliate. Johnson got the American rights to the trademark and the Victor company spent millions popularizing it.

About 1878, Edison had given the New York World an amazingly prophetic interview. He told the reporter the phonograph would be used for dictating; would be valuable in teaching foreign languages; there would be "talking books" for the blind (he said 100 blind persons had already ordered phonographs in the hope that talking books were coming); there would be unlimited duplication of master records, and it would be possible to record a symphony on one record.

Naturally, some of details of "the Wizard's" prophecies bring a laugh today. He foresaw waxings of orchestras by putting a phonograph inside a barrel with funnel sticking out through hole. He also estimated cost of perfected phonograph at "about one dollar." These ideas were developed at greater length in an article he wrote in 1878 for the North American Review. Same year, Edison gave a demonstration in Washington for Congress and put on a special phonograph performance in the White House for President Rutherford B. Hayes.

Johnson, however, continued to make important technical improvements. In 1896 he was among the first to develop a practical spring motor that could be regulated and was easy to operate. Thomas H. Macdonald, a Columbia engineer, is also credited with a similar invention. In that same year Johnson focused his attention on the improvement of the record, and by 1898 had developed a recording process that was a vast improvement over previous systems, by providing greater volume and more lifelike tone. It was this high quality of Johnson's recordings which eventually induced the world famous Caruso to sign up with Victor. The effect of Caruso's step was to legitimize the machine as a musical instrument and to signal the entrance of a host of other musical stars in the recording field.

In 1903 Johnson developed the goose-neck and tapered tone arm. This permitted easy needle replacement and saved record wear and breakage.

In the fall of 1901, at Buffalo's Pan-American Exposition, Victor won its first gold medal over all competitors. Before the year was out Victor boasted an organization of 10,000 dealers including the famous Chicago musical firm of Lyon & Healy. Acceptance by the world's largest musical house greatly enhanced the commercial dignity of the business. The stories behind this triumph include an all-night session during which Johnson talked of the musical value and future of the phonograph. At the crack of dawn, Johnson sadly left the conference still with no firm commitment. The executives appeared loath to ally their dignified house with the small bicycle shops and hardware stores that were still the principal outlets of the phonograph. By the next day, however, Lyon & Healy telegraphed Johnson their acceptance of the Victor line.

In 1906 Victor dramatically reversed the whole field by enclosing the horn in the cabinet. Up to that time, exposed horns had run the gamut through big and little, tin and brass, pink and blue—all sizes, shapes and colors. The effect of this first enclosed-horn "Victrola" was to make the phonograph a piece of furniture for the parlor. Now, cracking the market for the first time, the Victrola was able to command a price as high as $200. This price notwithstanding, dealers found the timid, initial orders quickly snapped up.

With Eldridge Johnson and his disk-type machine, first record made was of his own voice, a composition titled "I Guess I'll Telegraph My Baby." First record in the Victor catalog in 1903 was recitation of "Departure" by George Broderick, quickly followed by Burt Sheppard's "Limburger Cheese." Victor's talent at this time included the Metropolitan Orchestra, baritone S. H. Dudley and tenor Harry Macdonough.

Famous Firsts

Who was the first show biz personality to be recorded? Well, Jules Levy, cornet virtuoso who died in 1904, was one of first. During week of June 3-8, 1878, Levy played at Irving Hall (Irving Place and 15th St., N. Y.) in competition, or cooperation, with a phonograph. He would toot a tune into a funnel and Edison's "wonder box" would come back with a feeble caricature of a cornet tone. Others who gave demonstrations were Emily Winant, soprano of St. Thomas' Church, S. P. Warren, George Warren and Eugene Oudlin.

Edward M. Favor has already been mentioned. Old Edison catalogs say he was "the first professional to sing into a phonograph." He also became probably the first professional recording artist. Favor's recordings were exhibited in the lobby of the Park Theatre, Boston during a long run of "Ship Ahoy!" in which he played and, as may be imagined, attracted wide attention. Favor quit recording in 1914, but was a popular Broadway character actor until he died, aged 80, in 1936. When he first caroled into the tinfoil, the long chain of progress and advancement — if that's what it is — from the cheerfully obvious comedy of Ed Favor to the maudlin wailing of Johnnie Ray and other present-day crooners was on its way!

Edison became absorbed with electric lighting problems and didn't experiment with the phonograph for several years. But in 1886, two Washington men, Charles Sumner Tainter and Chichester Bell, brought out an improved machine that played wax cylinders, and Berliner, also in Washington, was experimenting with his zinc and vulcanite disks that sound as if they were recorded on a grindstone. By 1890 the phonograph was beginning to be established as a penny-arcade attraction, "slot machine parlors" came into wide use, and some record-playing equipment was sold for home performance. The North American Phonograph Co. had been formed, and granted leased permission for smaller companies to operate in various States. Columbia, for instance, got its name because, in the beginning, it was licensed for business only in the District of Columbia.

Show business didn't profit much at first by this invention. The first list of "musical phonograms" issued in 1890 by North American consisted of 16 performances by a brass band; 15 by "parlor orchestra;" 16 cornet solos (probably Levy); 15 clarinet renditions; 10 flute and 10 piccolo solos (most likely by Eugene C. Rose, still living at 86 in Freeport, L. I., who recalls making experimental flute records for Edison in 1889); 10 violin recordings; six "piano duetts;" and two vocal quartets of "Negro Melodies" and "Popular Songs." There were no master "phonograms" (the word "record" hadn't come into general use), and the artists had to sing or play the different titles over and over. The sound went into six or eight machines at each performance, and the artist was paid as little as 50c or as much as a dollar a "round." Sing 40 rounds a day, and you were in the money—for those times!

For the first few years after wax records were marketed, turning them out was a monopoly of a handful of artists with voices or techniques peculiarly suited to the primitive recording methods. Mostly vaude small-timers, they freelanced, singing or playing for all comers, and included Favor; Dan W. Quinn, tenor singer of comic songs; George J. Gaskin, "The Irish Thrush;" Billy Golden, blackface comic of team of Merritt & Golden; George Graham, Washington patent medicine street corner spieler who did "monologs on married life and other painful subjects;" Len Spencer, remarkably gifted comedian whose parents operated Spencerian Business College in Washington and who became first world-famous recording artist after making cylinders in his beginning days at 10c each; George W. Johnson, "The Whistling Coon," Negro who made a living whistling and singing laughing songs on Washington streets; John York Att Lee, civil service worker who drove his neighbors nuts by making one whistling record after another at home after working hours; and "The Banjo King," Vess L. Ossman. Levy continued to make cornet records and was such a celebrity Columbia charged $2 each for his "rollers." Russell Hunting's "Casey" monologs were big sellers for the time, as were Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh" records a little later.

Wishful Thinking

By 1897, the paucity and uniformity of recorded talent was the cause of considerable comment and many a raised eyebrow. In January, 1897, the Universal Phonograph Co., managed by Hunting but owned by music publisher Joseph W. Stern, was advertising: "In the last 10 years the record business has been handicapped by having only about 10 vocalists, three bands and a few instrumental soloists." To remedy this monotonous situation, Universal, the ad continued, was planning to offer records by "many famous vaudeville stars," including Lottie Gilson, Bonnie Thornton, James Thornton, Sam Devere, Johnnie Carroll, Sam Bernard, Webber & Fields, Leona Lewis, Meyer Cohen, Lottie Mortimer, Annie Hart, Maud Nugent, Allan May, William Jerome, Margaret Gonzalez, May Howard, Walter Talbot, La Porte Sisters, Ed Latell, May Lowry, Gotham Comedy Four, Anna Willmuth Curran and John P. Curran.

Whether these were ever issued is doubtful. Average stage star of those days didn't know how to make good records and usually wouldn't take the trouble to learn.

Columbia began making exclusive contracts with popular recording performers in 1898, and cylinder record production got a boost in 1901 when permanent masters came into use, making it possible to multiply production.

Longhairs Big Impetus

Operatic performances began to get a big play in 1902 when Columbia recorded Suzanne Adams, Marcella Sembrich and Edouard de Reszke. By this time Eldridge R. Johnson had acquired Berliner's patents and the Victor Talking Machine Co. was in operation. Its first Red Seal records were imported from European affiliates, but when Caruso signed up exclusively with Victor in 1903 he gave the company such an impetus in the "classical platter" field that it soon outdistanced all the competition and acquired a class supremacy which it has never lost. Symphonic music began to catch on when Boston Symphony first recorded for Victor in 1917.

With mushrooming record sales, not only stars of the Met but also such vaude and musicomedy notables as Al Jolson, Nora Bayes & Jack Norworth and innumerable others gladly signed up for records, although bulk of pop recordings continued to be made by artists such as Billy Murray, Henry Burr and Ada Jones, whose fame was primarily phonographic. Victor recorded such luminaries as Ellen Terry and the legit team of Edwin H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, not to mention political disks by William Jennings Bryan, William Howard Taft, Teddy Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

Double-faced disks, which gave a huge fillip to record sales, were extensively introduced in 1908 (Columbia had made a few in 1904 but had run afoul of patents controlled by the Odeon interests of Germany), and in 1909 a Copyright Act was passed which made it possible for writers and publishers of music to share in the recorders' profits. Radio almost knocked records out of the picture in the early 1920s but the platter biz staged a big comeback with introduction of electrical recordings in 1925. Resurgence lasted until the depression, when the bottom dropped out of the record market. Phono business reached probably its low point of entire 20th century in 1932. Next year things were better and, as the younger generation took up recorded music all over again and hundreds of thousands of juke boxes went into use, platters gradually climbed to previously unequalled heights.

Another Renaissance

Introduction of 33 and 45 speeds complicated the setup, but after the agitation tapered off, business got good again. Today, the record business appears to have less than radio to fear from television, although the possibility of tape-recording, as substitute for platters, has been giving manufacturers uneasy moments for years.

Developed as a result of 10 years of research, the 45 rpm system marked the introduction of the first record and phonograph made for each other. It was designed for that great bulk of the market which demanded a turntable versatile enough to handle both single pop sides, as well as longer classical selections. At the same time a 33 rpm record, first introduced by RCA Victor in 1933-34 and marketed in its modern form by Columbia in 1949, brought new benefits to classical music buyers, by providing sides playing uninterrupted up to 20 minutes. By 1951 the initial "battle of the speeds" had died down with the ultimate choice of system left to the consumer and a turntable revolution virtually accomplished. Introduction of the three-speed player further resolved the issue.

Bridging what is perhaps the last important gap, RCA Victor has just announced a new "Extended Play" 45 record which plays up to 8-minutes per side and serves as a vehicle for shorter classical selections and longer pop merchandise, previously unadapted to either the long-play disk or the shorter 45.

As for Edison himself, his first phono, as we have seen, played cylinders. Although he experimented briefly with disks, he soon abandoned them on ground that the cylinder was mechanically perfect for recording, since grooves remained same size all the way across, while disk grooves get smaller after center of the platter is passed. The "Wizard of Menlo Park "stuck with cylinders throughout his recording activities and introduced the unbreakable "Blue Amberol" in 1912. That same year be brought out his New Edison instrument, playing Diamond Disk records, now widely regarded as the finest types of acoustic era recording. Both the Blue Amberols and Diamond Disks stayed on the market until September, 1929, when Edison beat the depression to the punch by completely withdrawing from the recording field. A cynic recently remarked, "The Old Man probably quit because he had the gift of prophecy and couldn't bear to look forward to 1952 and imagine Johnnie Ray's platters screaming from jukeboxes 8 or 10 times in a row!"

That may be, or it may not. But it does seem highly likely that Thomas A. Edison did some rapid revolving in his grave a few weeks ago if he knew anything about what happened on a radio quiz program.

The emcee asked a woman contestant, "What was the name of the man who invented the phonograph?" Obviously flustered by this "hard" question, the lady braintruster hedged for half a minute or so, then brightly replied:

"Why—why—why, I'm not 'zactly sure, but I think it was somebody by the name of Victor!"

TV'S 'HIT & RUN' PERFORMERS

NBC's 100% Acceptance

NBC's radio rate formula has won a 100% acceptance from affiliates, with the Wayne Coy-operated KOB, Albuquerque, coming in late yesterday (Tues.) to make it a perfect score for the web. Coy had originally insisted it was time to hike AM rates, not revise them downwards.

Feather in NBC's cap is attributed primarily to the "no-punches-pulled" pitch made to affiliates in Chicago recently by prexy Joseph H. McConnell and the work of station relations veepee Harry Bannister in lining up the 100% affiliate approval in what was his first big assignment since joining NBC.

Coming on the heels of the unanimous CBS affiliate support, combined with General Foods' $2,000,000 Bob Hope deal for daytime and nighttime NBC radio exposure and CBS Radio's sponsorship pact for the N. Y. Philharmonic concerts, the week adds up to one of the most heartening on the AM calendar.

Hope's $2,000,000 Day & Night Deal For GF Is Top Radio Feat of Year

Deal signatured by Bob Hope last week for General Foods sponsorship, on behalf of its Jell-O product, may do more than all the research statistics, assorted merchandise techniques and so-called "tandem operations" to restore a bruised and battered AM medium to a bigtime status.

Hope, who has openly decried the failure of the advertising fraternity to support a still-potent medium, has agreed to go on NBC five mornings a week for General Foods, in addition to doing a once-a-week Wednesday nightime show. Latter will be slotted at 10 p.m., starting next Jan. 7. The daytime entry goes in 9:30 to 9:45 in the morning, Monday through Friday, effective Nov. 10, with Hope doing an ad lib commentary on topical matters, similar to the five-minute format evolved during the Republican and Democratic conventions in Chicago last July.

Bigtime Daytime

It's the first time in the history of the medium that a major comic will be getting both daytime and nightime exposure in radio. But beyond that, it's anticipated that the Hope moveover into the daytime programming sweepstakes, at a time when daytime radio is beginning to take the play away from nightime listening, may invite other major personalities, and sponsors, to stake a claim in the morning and afternoon network rosters. As one network executive summed up the Hope deal: "It's

'Victory at Sea' In Oct. 26 Preem

NBC has finally given the go-ahead on the slotting of its ambitious "Victory At Sea" TV series. It preems on Sunday, Oct. 26, in the 3 to 3:30 p.m. period. Series will be presented as a public service under joint auspices of NBC and the U. S. Navy, and represents an outlay of more than $500,000.

Of the 26 separate episodes, 14 are already in the can. Produced by Henry Salomon, who also co-scripted, the series, which has an original score by Richard Rodgers, has already stirred the U. S. Navy officialdom into loud salvos, with several of the initial installments having been shown privately.

Sponsorship will only be permitted on an institutional basis after the first round of 26 installments.

Balto's Lovefest

Baltimore, Sept. 30.

Unique cooperative deal between two Baltimore TV stations last Tuesday night (23) permitted Balto viewers to witness Sen. Richard M. Nixon's "explanation" speech. Speech was fed by NBC-TV but WBAL-TV, the NBC outlet here, had previously sold the 9 to 10 p.m. slot to the Democrats for a warmup to Gov. Adlai Stevenson's speech that night.

Unable to clear the necessary time for Nixon, WBAL-TV offered it to WMAR-TV, the CBS affiliate here. NBC-TV okayed the arrangement.

OG RENEWS 'CHANCE' CBS-TV DEAL COLD

Old Gold has renewed "Chance of a Lifetime" on ABC-TV, in the Thursday 8:30 p.m. slot, and has washed up its deal for buying CBS-TV Saturdays at 7 p.m. Reason is that CBS could clear only 12-15 stations on Saturday, while ABC-TV's lineup is up around 50.

Nick Keesely, veepee of Lennen & Mitchell agency, said that the budget on "Chance," Dennis James starrer, has been appreciably increased.

Blame Murray's One-Man War For Penn TV Snafu

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.

Disappointed televiewers in the Philadelphia area, who had the Penn-Notre Dame telecast virtually given them, only to have it snatched away at the last minute, are crediting the loss to the one-man war Francis T. (Franny) Murray, director of athletics at the U. of Pennsylvania, is waging against the NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Assn.).

WPTZ, local outlet of NBC, had set up its equipment on Franklin Field on orders from the network, prepared to pick up the Penn-Notre Dame contest instead of the regularly scheduled Princeton-Columbia game. The station was ordered by Castleman Chesley, Murray's assistant, to remove its gear at 11 a.m. Saturday (27). WPTZ officials had tried all day Friday (26) to contact Murray but had been unable to reach the Penn athletic director, and went ahead with the equipment installation just in case.

Murray, in an exchange of telegrams that began early last week, sought permission to telecast the Notre Dame game, because the 74,000 seating capacity of Franklin

Robt. Q. Lands Sponsor For CBS Radio Stanza

Robert Q. Lewis, who has carried a number of sustaining shows on CBS Radio, gets his first AM network sponsor Nov. 1. Pine-Sol has bought a quarter-hour variety and chitchat show starring Lewis and featuring the Chordettes, femme harmony quartette from Arthur Godfrey's CBS programs, for the 9:45 to 10 a.m. period Saturdays.

Lewis has been variously sponsored on CBS-TV and his "Name's the Same" is now bankrolled alternate weeks on ABC-TV by Swanson and Bendix. But, while he's had all of Godfrey's AM bankrollers while subbing during the latter's vacation, this will mark his first radio sponsor for his own show.

SLOPPY, CARELESS VIDEO IS SCORED

By GEORGE ROSEN

In sharp contrast to the days in radio when a star wore out a couple of ulcers each season in the process of achieving weekly perfection on his program, complaints are mounting over the lack of integrity with which many TV performers are approaching the medium.

Although the new season is but a couple weeks old, sloppy, careless production and performance on some of the top-budgeted television shows would seem to indicate that, as was the case last year, too many stars and so-called production inpresarios who have been enticed into the medium are treating it more as a sideline for a quick buck instead of trying to vest TV with the type of showmanship perfection it's been striving for.

Veterans in broadcasting, recalling the days when a Jack Benny, in particular, sweated it out with his writers and cast seven days a week, month after month, to help give radio a bigtime show biz aura, bemoan the fact that too many TV shows, in contrast, are being thrown together on a "hit and run" basis. Even today, they point out, a Benny or a Bing Crosby radio show betrays a devotion to detail and exactness, whereas some of the newer comics and performers staking a claim in the bigtime TV commercial sweepstakes are not only hurting their own chances of survival but seriously impairing TV's full growth to maturity because of their unwillingness to treat the medium with the respect due it.

Quality With Care

It's argued that television is a much more complicated medium than radio—that the multiple problems attending a "visual plus aural" presentation gives radio, by comparison, a kindergarten status, hence it's excusable if TV shows fail to come across with the desired finesse. In retaliation, however, it's pointed out that there has already been an abundance of TV programming fare vested with top-flight qualitative values when surrounded by people who have dedicated themselves solely and exclusively to TV as their "No. 1 baby." Cited, for example, are the Max Liebman-Sid Caesar-Imogene Coca triumvirate and their painstaking weekly devotion to "Show of Shows," or the laboring that brings forth a consistently polished "Hit Parade" production.

A major factor responsible for much of TV's present "hit-run" status is the widespread "doubling in brass" among so many of its top performers, with its recruiting of legit, pix, nitery, vaude talent, etc., whereas through the years the radio stars (Benny, Burns & Allen, etc.) had a single-minded purpose of delivering their best for their radio audiences without the "doubling" distractions.

Last week's teeoff of the Colgate "Comedy Hour" by Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis drew a round of brickbats from the critical fraternity who deplored the "we-can-do-no-wrong" aura surrounding their performances. The slovenliness and lack of serious intent with which the duo approached the program are offered as evidence that a "hit and run" TV shot sandwiched in among pictures theatre, outdoor and other dates can only hasten their downfall and do untold harm to television.

Super Duper

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Titles hung onto some of the radio shows tailored to the current science fiction fad are nearly as other-worldly as the scripts and formats. CBS will launch a Saturday morning science fictioner Oct. 11 in the 10:15-10:30 slot bearing the tag "The Space Adventures of Super Noodle."

Show will be sponsored by the I. J. Grass Noodle Co.

CBS Radio Wraps Up $1,000,000 Deal For N.Y. Philharmonic Sponsorship

In another major sale to boost radio's newly-climbing stock still further, CBS Radio yesterday (Tues.) wrapped up a deal for Wyllis-Overland Motors to sponsor its full season of Sunday afternoon broadcasts of the N. Y. Philharmonic-Symphony Orch, starting Oct. 19. Sale, set through the Ewell & Thurber agency, represents close to $1,000,000 in gross time and talent for the web.

Wyllis will be the third advertiser to bankroll CBS' Philharmonic broadcasts in the 23 years the web has been airing the Sunday pickups from Carnegie Hall, N. Y. U. S. Rubber sponsored the series from 1943 through 1947, with brief summer hiatuses, and Standard Oil of New Jersey had it in the 1948-49 season. While those two pitched on an institutional level, Wyllis will be selling its new postwar passenger car, the Aero-Wyllis.

Auto firm is in for the full series of 28 broadcasts, which are to be aired live again this season from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Dimitri Mitropoulos is slated to conduct 18 of the Sunday afternoon concerts, while guest maestros Bruno Walter, George Szell and Guido Cantelli will handle the others. As in the last four years, James Fassett, head of serious music for CBS Radio, will handle the intermission interviews from the "Green Room."

In an attempt to open up more commercial time Sunday afternoons two seasons ago, CBS transcribed the concerts and played them back the following week at an earlier hour. System elicited a number of squawks from listeners, however, so that the pickups were returned to a live basis.

PALEY TO KEYNOTE HERALD-TRIB FORUM

Designation of CBS board chairman William S. Paley as keynoter for this year's New York Herald Tribune Forum accents the growing recognition of television realm of public opinion.

Paley is the first broadcaster to deliver the keynote address for the annual forum, which ranks as one of the nation's major events on the public enlightenment calendar. This year's forum is scheduled to open Oct. 20.

NBC-TV Offers To Split Difference To Clear Stations

NBC-TV, in what amounts to almost a desperation bid to clear station time for its 7 to 7:30 p.m. strip, has offered its affiliates a compromise which network execs concede has little chance of acceptance. Instead of seeking the half-hour slot Mondays through Fridays, the web is now seeking the time only for shows on which it has sponsors lined up, which would mean Tuesdays and Thursdays and the 7 to 7:15 period Fridays.

As noted by one web exec, however, the network offer is tantamount to offering the affiliates a deal like this: "You have $5, which I want and you won't give me. So to please you, I'll settle for $2.50 and let you keep the other $2.50." Stations have filled the time, which is station option time, with local shows on which they retain 100% of their card rates, and are thus adamant against giving it up.

Pepsi-Cola has already bought the 7:15 to 7:30 slot Tuesday and Thursday nights for its "Short Short Drama" vidfilm series, but wants many more stations than the eight which NBC has been able to clear for it. Same situation exists for the Herman Hickman sports show in the first quarter-hour segment Friday nights, on which the web has been able to clear only nine outlets for General Cigar. NBC hopes to slot "The Goldbergs" in the 7 to 7:15 period Tuesday and Thursday, with American Vitamin Corp., waiting on the sidelines to bankroll if NBC can open up enough stations.

Gen. Motors to Sponsor Army-Navy on AM, Too

General Motors signed this week to sponsor the Army-Navy football game Nov. 29 on NBC radio, as well as NBC-TV. On video, the game will be the finale to the National Collegiate Athletic Assn. package which GM is bankrolling through the season, but the radio deal is a special one-shot. Kudner agency handles the GM account.

NBC is currently trying to clear time on its AM stations for the pickup, with stations compensated on the basis of two daytime hours. NBC's regularly-scheduled grid game, sold as part of the web's co-op deal this season, will be aired immediately after the Army-Navy contest.

Neubert to Lever Post

H. Norman (Red) Neubert, merchandising manager for NBC's o&o stations in both radio and TV, resigned this week to move over to Lever Bros. as brand advertising manager for Surf and Swan. He starts with Lever today (Wed.).

Neubert had been with NBC since 1950. Prior to that, he was public relations chief for R. H. Macy's department store, N.Y.

CBS' $125,000 TV City Hoopla

While on the Coast this week, CBS-TV programming chief Hubbell Robinson, Jr., will set in motion the plans for the major hoopla and ceremonies attending the formal dedication of the network's TV City on Nov. 15. Among other things it will include a 90-minute coast-to-coast TV production, emanating from the new edifice, with practically all the CBS radio-TV stars. Show will cost approximately $65,000.

Four of the top writers on the Coast have already been engaged to script the show—Sam Perrin, Hugh Wedlock, Al Snyder, and George Bolzer. Program, in addition to its entertainment facets, will also feature top leaders in public life.

An additional $60,000, it's reported, has been earmarked for the N. Y.-to-L. A. junket for the press in connection with the CBS-TV City opening.

GILLETTE MONOPOLIZES NEW YEAR'S DAY GRID

Gillette Safety Razor will have the radio and TV airwaves virtually tied down with its football bowl game pickups on New Year's Day. Already committed to bankroll the Rose Bowl classic via NBC-TV, the razor firm this week signed to sponsor the Orange Bowl game from Miami earlier in the day on both CBS-TV and CBS Radio. Agency for Gillette is Maxon.

This will be the first year for TV on the Orange Bowl game, since networking facilities to the south of Florida were completed only this summer. Gillette can bankroll both games without fear of competing with itself because of the three-hour time differential between the east and west coasts. Orange Bowl will probably start at 2 p.m., winding up one or two hours before the start of the Rose Bowl game from Pasadena, which usually hits the east coast about 5:30 p.m.

TV Censorship Legislation Not Likely in Wake of House Testimony

Washington, Sept. 30.

With testimony yet to be received from only the FCC, the special House Sub-Committee investigating radio-television programming is not expected to recommend censorship legislation.

Committee chairman, Rep. Oren Harris (D., Ark.) admitted here last week that there are "wide divergences" among radio and TV audiences about what constitutes "offensive and objectionable material." Complaints received via testimony and letter have ranged all the way from beer advertising to low-cut dresses and some jokes.

Committee adjourned last Friday (23), subject to the call of the chair, after listening to Clinton M. Hester, D. C. counsel for the U. S. Brewers Foundation, make a strong defense of beer advertising on the ether. He asserted that the advertising has been both mild and in "good taste." He said the pressure to eliminate beer advertising from the air comes from professional prohibitionist groups. In many instances, he contended, letters to the committee protesting the nature of beer commercials on TV come from areas where there isn't any television. This, he said, proved that the letter writers were not seeing the commercials themselves, but were writing at the instigation of others.

In its two hearings in Washington last week the committee heard an attack on both government and industry-wide censorship of television programs, from Herbert M. Levy, attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union. He said the question of the morality of programs should rest in the hands of local video stations and should not be handled "by special legislation or codes."

"The need for local responsibility," he said, "was very clearly brought out by the 1946 report on chain broadcasting issued by the Federal Communications Commission." He added that differing tastes within the same community constitute one of the most difficult problems to be faced.

"What one person may consider an offensive joke," he said, "another person may regard to be harmless or perhaps 'cute.' What is one man's dirt may be another man's sophistication." He said that in attempting to set standards for the entire country the NATRB Code "with its overemphasis on children, will result in programs for children but not for adults."

An opposing viewppoint was given by Mrs. Winfield D. Smart, of nearby Falls Church, Va., speaking for a group of Catholic women. She said her group would support legislative restrictions on program content unless the industry properly polices itself.

NBC-TV's 'Today' Sponsor Jackpot

NBC-TV's early morning "Today" show has hit a sponsorship jackpot during the last two weeks, wrapping up sales with 10 new clients for various stretches of five-minute segments. New sponsors represent more than $250,000 in billings for the show and will make it about 45% sold out. That, according to NBC execs, puts "Today" over the break-even point.

New bankrollers, who will bow in on the show during the next month, include Plymouth cars, which has bought 10 seven-and-a-half-minute segments; Polaroid, with 17 five-minute segments; DeSoto, with three five-minute periods; Beacon Wax, with three at five minutes; Kleenex, with 13 five-minute segments; Nylast, which has bought 10 five-minute spots; Noma Electric, with 10 five-minute segments; West Coast Lumberman's Assn., with two five-minute segments; Freshies-Pharmacraft, and International Silver, which pacted for 21 five-minute spots.

Variety of sponsors signing on and the different number of spots they've bought, according to web execs, illustrate one of the prime reasons for the show's success. They said it's probably the only program

WMAQ Personalities To Get N.Y. Time Buyers O.O. In New NBC Sales Plan

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Several members of the Chi NBC radio talent stable are slated for a junket to New York at the company's expense, as result of a plan to showcase the WMAQ personalities before Gotham time buyers. With upswing in national spot activity playing such an important part in the o&o's overall billings, WMAQ sales manager Rudi Neubauer and program manager Homer Heck have hit upon the scheme of road-showing the gabbers personally before the Madison Ave. agency men.

Decision to extend the project to other members of the WMAQ-WNBQ talent pool is an outgrowth of the upbeat in interest in the availabilities in the daily "Lunch at the Conrad Hilton" strip, hosted by Tony and Dorothy Weitzel, after the pair spent a week in Manhattan taping the show from the Waldorf-Astoria. The New York spot buyers were invited to drop in for a looksee at the Weitzel display.

Idea, of course, behind the Gotham treks is that they afford the New York buyers a chance to familiarize themselves with the different Chi NBC names.

Due to get the New York treatment next are emcees Norman Ross and Wed Howard.

WBAP-TV's 4th Anni

Fort Worth, Sept. 30.

WBAP-TV, pioneer TV outlet in the Southwest, operating here on Channel 5, celebrated its fourth anniversary Monday (29).

Commemorating the occasion, a special birthday telop was used throughout the day and night and on the air announcements also proclaimed the event. During the "What's Cooking?" show a birthday cake with four candles was presented by Margret McDonald, femcee, to Harold Hough, station director, and George Cranston, general manager. All the studio shows on Monday saluted the outlet on its fourth birthday.

CBS RADIO REPRISES 'FOOTBALL ROUNDUP'

CBS Radio will resume its Saturday afternoon "Football Roundup" this week (4) with virtually the same setup which obtained last year with the exception of a sponsor. Three-hour roundup of college football pickups, coordinated by Red Barber as chief announcer, was bankrolled last year by General Electric but that firm is sponsoring the Bing Crosby show this season on CBS. Web has not yet come up with a replacement for its grid series.

While plans have not been finalized, it's expected that "Roundup" will occupy the 2:30 to 5:30 p.m. period Saturdays during the football season. With John Derr, CBS Radio's sports chief, as producer, the show each week will have live pickups of the five major college games, plus running accounts of most other games in the country taken via telephone from CBS correspondents or off the wire services.

All-Star News. ABC, 8 to 8:30 p.m. Sustaining.

OCT. 11

Tallulah Bankhead Show (All Star Revue). Variety. NBC, 8 to 9 p.m. Participating.

Heller to Head AFTRA, Reel's Status Uncertain; Keep Radio Dues Setup

New American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, merger of Television Authority and AFRA, will probably install George Heller, TVA executive secretary, as its national exec. Status of A. Frank Reel, AFRA's topper, is uncertain, although the union's boards have passed resolutions asking him to stay on in the merged setup.

Reel had been assistant exec sec under Heller when the latter was AFRA's chief, prior to Heller's taking the TVA post three years ago. It's understood that proposals made to Reel so far haven't been attractive enough to convince him to stay in AFTRA. Reel, incidentally, is wholeheartedly behind the policy of integrating the AM and TV administrations, and feels it would be a mistake not to take advantage of potential economies which integration can bring.

AFTRA board, which comprises the 50 TVA board members and the 57 AFRA board members, has been meeting in three sections (N. Y., L. A. and Chi) working on the "loose ends" of the merger. It decided that the dues scale temporarily will be that of AFRA, which varies from local to local. Thus, for the price of his AFRA dues, a performer will be able to work both fields. Back dues will have to be paid to both unions, however.

Another unsettled question is that of demands on wages and working conditions to be made when the TV negotiations start with the webs. Demands in radio were set at AFRA's special national convention in N. Y. in August. However, the TVA convention, skedded for last weekend, was automatically cancelled by the Associated Actors & Artistes of America's approval of the TVA-AFRA wedding. Committees to draw up the video demands are being named.

National AFTRA constitution has to be amended to conform with conditions imposed by the 4A's. The local AFRA constitutions similarly have to be amended. As example, in N. Y. an Afran cannot vote until he has performed in 30 shows; that requirement is deemed too stiff in the video field, and it will have to be changed. Along the same lines, constitutional changes have to be made to bring in the variety artists, dancers and other performers into AFTRA and new elections will have to be held to give them representation.

B'casting to Get Biggest Play in 9th Annual OSU Advertising Conference

Columbus, Sept. 30.

Broadcasting gets its biggest play during Ohio State U's ninth annual Advertisiing Conference Oct. 17-18 in the Friday afternoon clinic on national consumer copy.

Among speakers listed for that afternoon's session are Curtis Berrien, vice-prez of Needham, Louis and Brorby of Chicago, who will talk on "Snow Blindness—An Occupational Hazard"; G. Maxwell Ewell, research director for Kenyon & Eckhardt, who will speak on "How to Increase Sales Effectiveness of Television Commercials," and W. B. Ryan, president of Broadcast Advertising Bureau, who will talk on "Radio United."

Topics for the conference include Advertising Copy Fundamentals, Retail Advertising Copy Clinic, and Industrial Advertising Copy Clinic.

Sessions include clinics on retail, national consumer, industrial and financial advertising copy, roundtables on advertising agency management and newspaper advertising and advertising copy fundamentals.

Hal Davis, K & E veepee, will speak during the opening session Friday morning on "Who'll Buy My Violets."

Arthur H. Motley, president and publisher of Parade magazine, will address the Friday luncheon session on "Can They Hear You?" A reception and banquet is planned for Friday evening, a breakfast Saturday morning and conference members will take in the OSU-Washington State football game Saturday afternoon.

Bendix's 'Tolliver' To Preem TV 'Opening Night'

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

Bill Bendix will play the role of a major league umpire as star of "Terrible Tempered Tolliver" in the preem of the new "Hollywood Opening Night" series on NBC-TV Monday night (6), which will mark the first live dramatic show to emanate from the web's new Burbank studios. Series goes into the 9 to 9:30 slot, replacing "Lights Out," with Pearson Pharmacal remaining as bankroller.

"Opening Night" will pitch for top Hollywood names for the show, and there's a possibility that James Mason and his wife, Pamela, will co-star in the second. Initialer will have Peggy Ann Garner featured with Bendix, in the original play scripted by Nelson Gidding. Hal Kemp is talent booker on the series, which is being produced and directed by Bill Corrigan.

P&G to Co-Sponsor DuMont's 'Rocky King'

Procter & Gamble expanded its widespread video advertising another notch this week by signing to co-sponsor "Rocky King, Detective," on the DuMont web, starting Oct. 5. Under the deal, set through the Compton agency, P&G will share sponsorship with American Chicle on the program, which is aired Sunday nights from 9 to 9:30 p.m.

Produced by the Stark-Layton package firm, the whodunit stars Roscoe Karns in the title role.

Johnny Andrews to Cleve.

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

Johnny Andrews, who has been featured on the "Kathi Norris Show" over WABD (TV) N. Y. and on ABC radio, left to join the NBC outlets here, WTAM and WNBK (TV).

His wife, actress Betti Pearson, will join him on some of the Cleveland airers.

Adrian, Mich—James Gerity, Jr., owner of WABJ, Adrian, has purchased WGRO, Bay City, Mich., with approval by the FCC. O. W. Myers, general manager of WABJ, has been named managing director of both stations, with headquarters in Adrian.

NBC-TV Inks Miles For 260G Spots

Chicago, Sept. 30.

NBC has snagged one of the lushest TV spot orders of the season with the finalizing of a deal with Miles Laboratories for a $260,000 bundle of blurbs. Spot splurge will cover the web's five o.&o. stations, pluz WPTZ, Philadelphia; WBZ-TV; Boston, and WRGB, Schenectady, repped by NBC.

New campaign, placed through the Geoffrey Wade agency, is in addition to the previously scheduled $225,000 spot package now riding the same stations. It represents the bulk of the kitty Miles decided to convert to spots after dropping NBC-TV's "One Man's Family" which it shared with Manhattan Soap last season.

The Miles deal brings to over $500,000 the national spot bi booked out of the Chi NBC office the past two weeks and is further evidence of the coin being raked in by the networks' owned outlets

R & R'S $6,000,000 LEVER RAP

Writers Minimums

Minimums to be paid to writers under terms of the freelance scripters contract expected to go into effect Oct. 16 are as follows:

| Program Length (In Minutes) | ORIGINALS Coml. | ORIGINALS Sust. | ADAPTATIONS Coml. | ADAPTATIONS Sust. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5 or less | $110 | $80 | $90 | $65 |
| 5½-10 | 200 | 145 | 160 | 115 |
| 10½-15 | 300 | 215 | 250 | 175 |
| 15½-30 | 525 | 375 | 400 | 300 |
| 30½-45 | 650 | 450 | 500 | 350 |
| 45½-60 | 800 | 600 | 600 | 425 |
| 60½-75 | 950 | 700 | 700 | 700 |

First TV Writers Pact Now Readied; Limit Set on Employer Exclusivity

The first contract for freelance writers in television will go into effect at ABC-TV, CBS-TV and NBC-TV, and those ad agencies signing letters of adherence, on Oct. 16, if the membership of the Authors League of America and the Screen Writers Guild okay the pact.

Scripters will meet in New York Oct. 15 to vote on the agreement. Those unable to attend will act on the document via a mail ballot.

Scribblers covered are freelancers (those on staff are repped by the Radio Writers Guild, which is an ALA member guild, and in some cases by the CIO's National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians). Programs involved are network shows originating in N. Y., Chi and L. A. Pact also covers syndicated shows and film series turned out by the skeins, but provisions for these fields will have to be negotiated when the networks hire writers for film and syndication airers.

Where a show is simulcast, 133⅓% of the TV scale will be paid. One-time fee will be multiplied by 1¾ for a twice-weekly show; by 2¼ for a thrice-weekly show; by 2¾ for a four-times-weekly show, and by three for a cross-the-board show. Rate for a cross-the-board 15-minute serial is $600 commercial and $425 sustaining.

Music and Lyrics

Agreement also sets scales for music and lyrics specially written for TV. Terms were worked out by ALA with the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. Songs for a series will fetch at least $375 (commercial) or $265 (sustaining), while songs for performers will earn $500 (commercial) and $350 (sustaining). Music sans lyrics

New RWG Faces On Official Slate

Official slate nominated by the Radio Writers Guild included some new faces. With the national presidency moving, per schedule, to the east, Hector Chevigny has been nominated for the top post, vice Paul Franklin, incumbent prexy.

Nominated for the eastern region council are Robert Cenedella, Abram Ginnes, Graham Grove, Bruce Marcus, Ira Marion, John Merriman, Sam Moore, John McGiffert, Lillian Schoen, John Stradley and Frank Wiener. Some of those named in the McCarran Committee blast at the RWG are included in the list, while some others named by McCarran witnesses are no longer on the ticket.

Marion, former national prez and currently eastern v.p., is bowing out as an exec due to pressure of work and instead is running for a council seat.

It's expected that "We. the Undersigned," group which has opposed the administration slate, will put up its own ticket." Constitution calls for a petition of 20 members to nominate a member for a regional post. Nominating a member for a national position takes 20 signatures in each of the three regions. Deadline for filing additional nominations is 15 days from Monday (29).

Coke Buys WHDH Grid

Boston, Sept. 30.

WHDH enters the current football season with sponsors signed for its two schedules of play-by-play reports and a sellout on adjacent spots and sportscasts.

Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of Boston through the D'Arcy agency has bought the nine home-and-away games set for Boston University, with Curt Gowdy at the mike.

WOR-TV's Drastic Program Shuffle; Several Get Axe

Following its recent personnel shakeups, WOR-TV, N. Y., is revamping its programming under the aegis of new station manager Warren Wade.

Wade is axing (Patt and Barbara) "Barnes Family Album" and "Barbara Welles" in the 2:30 and 2:45 p.m. strips. He announced that John Wingate, named news director of the outlet since the dropping of news-special events chief Dave Driscoll and his assistant, Edythe Meserand, would fill the holf-hour slot. It's understood, however, that Wingate has been hassling with Wade on the program's format, since he doesn't want to take on non-news assignments. His contract with the outlet ran out Sunday (28) and has not yet been extended, Wingate said.

"Sally Smart's Kitchen" is moving from 3 p.m. to the 4:30-5 slot and "Food For Thought" will be installed in the 3-3:30 p.m. niche. Buster Crabbe is being dropped from the 5:30-6 p.m. strip and "Western Playhouse," a film entry, will be expanded to a full hour in

CBS-TV Ankles Denver Outlet; 'Blocked Out' Till KBTV Preems Oct. 12

Denver, Sept. 30.

CBS-TV, which has been sharing Denver's only video outlet, KEFL-TV, with the rival NBC web, pulled all its shows off the station last week and will be without representation here until Oct. 12. That's the date on which KBTV, Denver's second TV outlet, is slated to launch operations.

KEFL-TV has a temporary primary affiliation pact with NBC, but was taking some CBS shows. Station, knowing that CBS would be looking for its own primary affiliate, demanded that it get a solid 13-week contract on all CBS programs. Network execs, however, turned down that deal and, as a result, will be included out of Denver TV'ing for a span of two weeks.

Starting Oct. 12, KBTV will take the entire CBS-TV program lineup. Net's contract with that station too, however, is only temporary since it plans to switch over to KLZ, its primary radio outlet in Denver, when that station gets its TV transmitter on the air.

SPRY, RINSO ACCOUNTS SHIFT

One of the major billings casualties of the year finds the lucrative Spry and Rinso (Lever Bros.) accounts exiting the Ruthrauff & Ryan agency. All told it amounts to a rap in excess of $6,000,000. In terms of R & R, it's a double blow, for not too long ago the same agency lost the Dodge account to the Grant office.

What is all the more surprising is that Spry has had an R & R identification ever since the product's inception. Similarly, Rinso had been in the house for 18 years.

Who gets the business is still conjectural. It's anticipated that the Spry biz will go to either McCann-Erickson or N. W. Ayer. The former agency now handles the Lever Pepsodent billings, while Ayer has the Surf detergent. The Rinso biz is expected to go to Hewitt Ogilvey.

It's reported that a personality conflict between the agency and the client led to the decision to scram R & R. Involved is the Spry cross-the-board daytime radio show, in itself representing about $1,500,000 in annual billings, with other media bringing the Spry billings to about $2,500,000. Rinso, though it has curtailed its heavy AMTV appropriations in recent years since the detergent accent, accounts for another $3,500,000 in billings.

The R & R-Lever split is the latest in a succession of account shifts that's had the Madison Ave. fraternity in a whirl during the past year.

Name Glenn Taylor To Mutual Board

Mutual board met in N.Y. yesterday (Tues.) and elected Glenn Taylor, v.p. of General Teleradio, to the board, filling the vacancy caused by resignation of J. R. Poppele. Board also discussed budgets. Taylor, whose offices are in Mutual's headquarters rather than with Thomas F. O'Neil, Jr., is O'Neil's chief-of-staff for MBS.

O'Neil took the opportunity of holding a General Teleradio meeting in the afternoon, since Willett Brown, Don Lee prexy, and Linus Travers, Yankee network topper, were in town for the MBS powwow. O'Neil and Taylor are knitting the various General Tire broadcasting interests closer together.

Integration is seen in the fact that John Sloan, who was recently brought in as WOR-TV, N.Y. national sales manager under sales chief Bob Mayo, is also heading up New York sales repping for KHJ-TV, L.A., which previously had been handled by Edward Petry. The WOR-TV sales force will be selling KHJ-TV in addition to the Gotham outlet.

HARRY WILDER RESIGNS AS WSYR (& TV) PREXY

Syracuse, Sept. 30.

Harry C. Wilder has resigned as prexy of WSYR and WSYR-TV here, to devote more time to his broadcast interests elsewhere. He'll also spend longer winters at his Arizona home although keeping his Skaneateles, N. Y., permanent residence.

E. R. Vadeboncoeur, veepee-general manager, will be chief exec at the two stations. Vadeboncoeur, former city editor of the Syracuse Journal, has been with the operation for 13 years.

Wilder has owned at different times five AM stations in the Northeast and will continue as prez of WTRY, and WELI, New Haven, besides his biz interests in the west. WSYR was sold to S. I. Newhouse, owner of a string of newspapers, in 1948, with Wilder remaining as prexy.

Industry Leaders Join RWG In Blasting 'Blacklists' as Destructive

In a precedental move, industry leaders have joined with the Radio Writers Guild in a blast at blacklisting. The Joint Adjustment board, a body set up under terms of the RWG's contract with the agencies, sponsors and package producers, declared yesterday (Tues.) that blacklisting is "destructive to good labor relations."

The resolution was signed by a rep of one of the biggest broadcast spenders, Procter & Gamble, and by execs of two of the more active AM-TV agencies, Benton & Bowles and Compton.

Board met at the request of the RWG to consider a specific claim against one of the companies signing the agreement. Union had charged the sponsor with "blacklisting" a writer. Following the discussion, the board passed a resolution: "It is the unanimous belief of this board that blacklisting in any field is a practice destructive to good labor-management relations and therefore the members of this board recommend to the signatories that they join with each other in issuing a statement declaring such opposition."

Resolution was signed by the six-man board, including William R. Ramsey, Procter & Gamble; William E. Schneider, Benton & Bowles; Leonard T. Bush, Compton, and Abram S. Ginnes, Robert Cenedella and Sheldon Stark, all RWG.

Announcement by Ramsey and Ira Marion, RWG eastern v.p., said that the great majority of the signatories to the contract have now concurred in the resolution and have agreed, according to a further recommendation of the board, that the board undertake immediate study and early solution of the blacklist problem. Board will probably reconvene in a fortnight.

Tom Hicks to WDSU

New Orleans, Sept. 30.

Tom Hicks has been appointed radio and TV program manager of the WDSU Broadcasting Corp., Robert D. Swezey, executive veep and gen. mgr., said Wednesday (24).

Hicks, who resigned as executive TV producer for Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample, ad agency, will assume his new duties Oct. 1. He will have supervision of all AM and video programs on WDSU.

William Elwell and Joseph Carleton Beal will continue in their present capacities as radio program director and TV production manager, respectively, Swezey also announced.

TV to Impy: 'Please Give Us Some Moppets'

Inability to cast moppets under seven years of age in live TV programming with a Gotham origination is held to be one of the factors that's retarding the campaign to establish New York City as the key video production center, despite the various attempts initiated by Mayor Impellitteri and other civic factotums.

Producers claim they have made advances to the mayor, but in vain, in an effort to lift the moppet ban. They claim that it automatically restricts their programming ventures, particularly in the realm of family drama and comedy, where kids play dominant roles. They further protest that it leaves them with no alternative but to join the production parade to Hollywood, where the laws are more lenient in regard to moppet casting.

The new Saturday night "Leave It To Lester," family situation comedy starring Eddie Albert bowing on CBS-TV next month, features a four-year-older. The kid's been written into the initial sequence pending decision on an appeal to the N. Y. City Welfare Board to retain his services for the run of the series. The producers of the show have their fingers crossed but are not too hopeful.

Cleve. WTAM's Ambitious 'Bandwagon' Ayemer As TV's 'Today' Counterpart

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

In a bold venture to capture broadcasting's morning audience in Cleveland, WTAM (29) started a live, two-hour 7-9 a.m. stint featuring a 17-piece house band, assembled by Norman Cloutier, and three vocalists.

Emceeing the stanza is Johnny Andrews, of "Easy Does It." Assisting him are vocalists Audrey Norris, former chirper at the Alpine Village, and Jay Miltner, WTAM-WNBK announcer-baritone. Seth Carey directs the band.

Called the "Johnny Andrews Morning Bandwagon," the two-hour musical show is the first major change in local broadcasting since diskers began to command top morning ratings. New stanza will also be a major challenge to WTAM's sister station's (WNBK) "Today."

Hamilton Shea, general manager of WTAM-WNBK, said since morning radio is destined to become the strongest segment of the radio day, "WTAM is putting forward its strongest feature so that the station will continue to hold greatest possible audience."

Berle Faces Tough Tues. Competition

Television's Tuesday night at 8 period, which had Bishop Fulton J. Sheen on DuMont lined up against Milton Berle on NBC last season, should result in one of the hot rating fights of the season this year. Besides the Bishop returning to DuMont Nov. 11 to buck Berle, CBS-TV will have Jane Froman's "USA Canteen" as a new entry in the Tuesday night 8 to 8:30 period—and all three shows will be battling for the complete family audience.

Berle's vaudeo presentation has always been pitched to the family audience, with his "Uncle Miltie" tag indicative of his lure for the kids. Bishop Sheen, with his church affiliation, is also basically a family-type draw. Miss Froman's show will be grooved mainly for servicemen, designed to help take the place of USO-Camp Shows, which is no longer operative on the domestic front. As a result, CBS hopes servicemen's families will switch to Miss Froman Tuesday at 8.

"Canteen" does not preem for two more weeks and so, of course, has yet to prove itself. But if the show catches on, it's believed that it will help equalize the ratings of both Bishop Sheen and Berle. Last season the Bishop took a hefty nick out of Berle's ratings which, coupled with the audience lured away by the Frank Sinatra show on CBS-TV, tumbled Berle from his No. 1 position in the lineup. Berle's show this season has been completely revamped in an attempt to get it on a more solid competitive footing.

Barbasol's Grid Buy

Barbasol has bought a five-minute program before and after the co-op football games on Mutual Saturday afternoons. Agency is Erwin, Wasey.

Show, summarizing sports news, is handled by Al Helfer.

CASCADE OF STARS

With Groucho Marx, Red Skelton, Phil Harris, Judy Canova, Ralph Edwards, Willard Waterman, Bob R. MacKensie, Robert Armbruster orch
Producer: Jacob A. Evans
Director: Art Jacobsen
Writer: Jack C. Wilson
30 Mins.; Fri. (26), 9:30 p.m.
NBC, from Hollywood

To fanfare its major current and upcoming comedy programs, NBC put on this "Cascade of Stars" one-shotter in a generally interesting session originating in Hollywood on a partly transcribed setup. There must have been a good deal of confusion in the assembling since Martin & Lewis, who launched their AM show on Sept. 16, had been skedded but didn't show. A larger negative was in the case of Fibber McGee & Molly, who had actually been advertised on the show day but weren't slotted.

Along with this error of commission was insertion in the ads of a photo strip of the cast displaying Phil Harris & Alice Faye (they preem on Oct. 5), whereas only the former was billed and a participant in the proceedings. The networks should be better geared for last-minute changes in its paid (and non-paid) ballyhoo, a condition which has long been the cause for considerable griping on the part of radio editors and program loggers for newspapers, etc. The double picture was of course a nag of a different tint—a bit of "this can get by" legerdemain by brasshats insensitive to purity in advertising.

Perhaps because of the transcription structure, this house trailer found it technically impossible to plug specific preem dates except in one or two instances. For instance, the "Judy Canova Show," which gets going Oct. 23, was given the go-by in this respect, so that a casual listener would gather that the program is current.

Theme was set up via a child's dream giving voice to hopes of seeing NBC's stars, this segueing into the layout that was largely patterned along rehearsal lines. Save for Groucho Marx, who simply got in there with his rapid-fire jokes to rib sponsors, the other toppers came through with what amounted to vignettes from their respective formats. These were Red Skelton, Harris, Willard Waterman ("Great Gildersleeve"), Miss Canova, and Ralph Edwards. With the exceptions noted, all have already launched their stints including "Gildersleeve" which had no summer hiatus.

Much of the action was per usual with too many in the amplitude modulation medium, styled for the studio audience, too little of it getting over to the larger population at which the big plug was beamed. Emcee was Bob R. MacKensie, the net's house name for the commentator of "Radio City Previews" aired Fridays at 10:35 p.m. Script was worked up by writers for the respective acts with additional material by Jack C. Wilson. Music was by Robert Armbruster's NBC Hollywood orch which midwayed with "Fantasy on NBC Chimes."

FUN FOR ALL

With Arlene Francis, Bill Cullen, audience participants; organist, Abe Goldman
Writer: J. Franklin Jones
Producer: Bruce Dodge
Director: Art Henley
30 Mins.; Sat., 1 p.m.
PROM HOME PERMANENT-WHITE RAIN SHAMPOO
CBS, from New York
(Weiss & Geller)

"Fun for All," a transcribed half-hour comedy quiz show emceed by Arlene Francis and Bill Cullen, preemed on CBS Saturday (27) to roars of studio laughter. But what may have been sidesplitting to the studio audiences seemed considerably less humorous through loudspeakers. For the buffoonery and banter were forced and noisy. Likewise, some of the audience participants sounded like plants.

As a means of getting off a flock of tepid gags and cumbersome situations, Miss Francis captained a team of three participants which competed against another trio led by Cullen. Questions were tossed from such categories as baseball, detective fiction, music and impromptu mellers acted in a ludicrous vein. Sample of the dialog of the latter category is as follows: "Will you marry me?" This query elicited the reply, "First I must get my torso—I mean trousseau ready."

There may be an audience for this kind of stuff. But the show's humor was hardly of the quality to encourage a housewife or anyone else to make a point of tuning in on a Saturday afternoon. To further carry out the audience participation theme, Miss Francis called up several women from the floor to "tell me in their own words" why they changed to Prom, the home permanent.

RED FEATHER CAMPAIGN

With Groucho Marx, Danny Thomas, Dinah Shore, Gordon MacRae, Loretta Young, Harry S. Truman, H. J. Heinz, 2d, Ronald Reagan, emcee; Wendell Niles, announcer; Meredith Willson, orch
Producer-Director: Dee Engelbach
60 Mins.; Sat. (27), 10 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC, CBS, MBS, NBC (tape)

The Community Chest Funds' 1952 United Red Feather Campaign kicked off Saturday (27) with a sprightly hour-long show produced and directed by NBC's Dee Engelbach. Latter, who masterminded that web's "Big Show," brought many of the qualities of the Tallulah Bankhead starrer to this sustainer—and it was a bright canter that sustained interest throughout with some topflight comedy.

Groucho Marx was on pretty much throughout the hour, heckling emcee Ronald Reagan, ribbing his co-stars and burlesquing commercials. Needling the plugs is old hat, but the satiric spiels for "Plebow"—his imaginary product —were consistent laugh-getters, with the other guests chiming in. Marx also did an amusing vocal, "Show Me a Rose," from his new record album. Danny Thomas also contributed some yocks via his stories of a wild poker session and followed with his "Song of the West."

In the tune department, Dinah Shore socked home "All of Me" and Gordon MacRae pleased with "Porgy's Lament." Loretta Young did an effective parable on Palestine's two seas, Galilee and the Dead Sea, the first giving up its waters and providing a rich countryside and the other hording its waters and confined to parched surroundings. Written by Bruce Barton it was a showmanly pitch for a charity show. Similarly, Meredith Willson's music, such as "You'll Never Walk Alone," done by orch and chorus, made its point without blatant blurbs.

Airer wound with a talk by President Truman and a message from H. J. Heinz, 2d, national chairman of the Red Feather drive.

NEWS AS IT HAPPENED

With John Edwards
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC, from Washington

Idea of this stanza is to give listeners the news "as it's made" by means of tape recording. Concept is similar to earlier shows like "Head It Now" or "Voices and Events," but this aims for a more leisurely pace, spending more time on each segment to provide a more intensive, if narrower, coverage.

Kickoff edition Thursday (25) wasn't too auspicious. Four stories were covered—the Nixon fund affair, a press conference by Adlai Stevenson's sister, the American Automobile Assn. convention and the Thule airbase in Greenland.

Tapes of vice-presidential candidate Richard Nixon's speech were played back to focus attention on this issue which some politicos have called the "turning point of the campaign." On the Democratic side, program beamed a portion of the comment on Nixon by Sen. John J. Sparkman when he guested on the web's "Crossfire" series.

As a featurish element, there was a recording of a press confab by Mrs. Ives, Gov. Stevenson's sister, who would be official White House hostess if the Dems win. She told of a visit to the White House in her youth, during the Wilson administration. Another human interest feature comprised talks made at the AAA parley by pioneer motorists, such as Gus Post and Bellamy Partridge. Some of their tales were amusing, but overlong. Addresses by Charles Kettering and Vannevar Bush to the auto powwow were interesting, but the entire package had a rambling, after-dinner-talk flavor.

Finale consisted of a report by the commander of Thule, base carved out of rock and ice in Greenland and serving as hub of air routes criss-crossing the North Pole. It was a factual account of a project just taken off the "classified" list.

Program stacks up as palatable, but needs a more careful selection of its material to include more hard news. John Edwards did an effective job as annotator. Editing of the tapes calls for improvement —there were occasional extraneous noises as the recorders started and where tape was spliced.

AMOS 'N' ANDY

With Freeman Gosden, Charles Correll, Ernestine Wade, Johnny Lee, others; Jeff Alexander orch; Harlow Wilcox, announcer
Producer-director: Cliff Howell
Writers: Joseph Connolly, Robert Mosher
30 Mins., Sun., 7.30 p.m.
REXALL
CBS, from Hollywood
(BBD&O)

"Amos 'N' Andy," back on the air Sunday (28) to launch its 25th season, was the old reliable program, with something of a difference. In recent seasons, Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll, who originally enacted all the roles and wrote the scripts themselves, have taken it a little easier, employing a staff of writers and using other actors as support to themselves.

As result, the program has a different mood and appeal now, broader and more superficial in it's burlesque, as against the oldtime corny, sentimental setup of the original duo. There is plenty warmth, still, but it's less personal.

Situations are not too different— still built around femmes and amorous complications that ensue. Sunday's (28) instalment dealt with a spat between Kingfish and his wife (abetted by his mother-in-law), and Kingfish moving in with Andy. Then came the Lenox Ave. Masquerade Ball, with estranged Kingfish and wife showing up in disguises, with the usual story line and developments.

Situations, lines and comedy were familiar, with some corny dialog for laughs, although they went over very well with the studio audience. Amos and Andy helped matters along for Rexall, the sponsor, with a healthy plug to start off the program.

WNEW, N. Y.

WNEW had something of an idea here, in an unorthodox new series slanted to avant-garde enthusiasts and intellectuals. But initial program Sunday (28) was a motley of oddities, too fragile and scattered to be substantial. If it had centered on one theme, or on one sort of oddity, it would have carried more weight.

Initialer was a little too dilettantish as well as haphazard. Into its brief 15 minutes were crammed a reading by Gertrude Stein of her repetitious, confusing poem, "The Making of an American"; a modern harp nocturne by Nicanor Zabaleta, and two piano selections written by Henry Cowell, "Anger Dance" and "Banshee."

Cowell was present to explain how he came to write the two works. "Anger Dance," written to express his fury at something, had substance. "Banshee," with weird wailing sounds produced on the piano, was strictly a novelty stunt.

Program, it is true, is frankly limited, but station's approach, in advising its listeners to that effect, and in openly appealing only to intellectuals, seemed a little patronizing. Why not let listeners decide for themselves?

FARM PAPER OF THE AIR

With Don Tuttle, Others
30 Mins.; Mon. thru. Sat., 12:30 p.m.
Participating
WGY, Schenectady

The 26-year-old WGY "Farm Paper of the Air" has a new editor in Don Tuttle, but its other contributors and regular features show few changes. The format has been tested by time and proved successful, although a fresh listening reveals some evidence of "dating" and indicates minor modernization might be advisable. This is most noticeable in "columns" by several guests who write rather lengthily and literarily. Scripted exchanges are sometimes stiff; the ad lib stuff comes off easier on the ear. Program, as always, covers a wide variety of agricultural facets and encompasses considerable territory. Careful planning is obvious.

Among interesting interviews heard was that with Keith Cox, a Scotchman who directs 26 farms on Jamaica, in the British West Indies, for Reynolds Aluminum Co. Another off-the-beaten track was one from the Cornell School of Home Economics, in which a woman talked with a representative of India on cafeterias recently established in that country and on its food problems.

Tuttle, youthful, intelligent and twangy, spiels for several agricultural products.

RECORDING SESSION

With Art Ford, guests
25 Mins.; Sunday, 12:35 p.m.
Sustaining
WNEW, N.Y.

As another of its enterprising program ideas framed around pop music, WNEW has come up with a documentary-styled series designed to give dialers a behind-the-scenes view of how platters are made by the maor disk companies. It's an interesting attempt but the first two shows, at least, didn't quite come off as a realistic, all-sided backstage view of the disk-making procedure.

Too much is being left out and what's covered is being done with a somewhat artificial flavor despite the tape machines presumably located in the disk execs' offices and in the recording studios. The role of the music publishers in bringing new material to the artists and repertoire men, for instance, isn't touched on at all. On the opening show (21), Columbia Records' a&r chief Mitch Miller found a couple of "new" tunes by riffling through numbers already waxed by some country artists. That accounted for Rosemary Clooney's "Half as Much" and the Clooney-Marlene Dietrich "Too Old To Cut The Mustard." Similarly, how RCA Victor's pop a&r topper Dave Kapp masterminded his pop selections on the second show of this series wasn't revealed either.

Kapp was covered working with Perry Como in a recording session on last Sunday's (28) stanza. Show included playbacks of two recent Como releases, "Love and Devotion" and "I Wanna Make Love To You" and segued into some sparring between Kapp and Como over new tunes to be done by the latter. Como kibitzed with the crack: "Give me some stiffs and I'll cut them" while Kapp was on the deadly serious side, admonishing Como to lay off golf for more attention to his disk assignments. That, anyway, is how the script ran. The chatter portion also included powwows among Kapp, Como and musical director Mitchell Ayres on arranging ideas for a couple of numbers subsequently waxed by Como and also played back. These were "My Lady Loves To Dance" and "To Know You Is To Love You."

The initial stanza showcased Miller and Miss Clooney in a similar setting. Miss Clooney and Miller tended to exchange too many bouquets but some idea was given how the a&r chief sold the songstress on the tune, "Half As Much," before she made it a hit. Miss Clooney also was heard on her slices of "Blues in the Night," and "Tenderly," both cut to Miller's specifications.

Art Ford ties this series together with a hep commentary. The show, however, is more of a plug for the artists' latest recordings than an analysis of how and why he made them. But it's a way of getting top disk names to the WNEW microphone. Louis Armstrong and Gordon Jenkins, repping the Decca label, are set for next Sunday's chapter.

GOP Vice-Presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon, facing an $18,000 gift fund rap, went before the TV cameras last Tuesday (23) in the best tradition of the American soap opera. It was as slick a "production" as anything off the Anne Hummert beltline, parlaying all the schmaltz and human interest of the "Just Plain Bill"-"Our Gal Sunday" genre of weepers.

The only thing missing was the organ background music as Nixon, appealing for a commutation of sentence with a faithful wife as the major prop, turned in a performance that would have gladdened the hearts of the Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample soaper fraternity. Translated into a commercial suds saga, it would have been a cinch to garner a renewal for at least another 52-week cycle.

Video-wise, it had even more significant overtones. Regardless of what party or cause the viewer championed, it was a brilliant feat in political journalism. It was, too, a major test for TV, demonstrating once and for all (and something the commercial boys can learn from) that, with a good script, good casting and topflight production, you can't miss. Rose.

Martha Raye's reentry to NBC-V on the "All Star Revue" Satrday (27) was one of the best hows she's done on tele. Miss aye has had a generally distinuished career on TV, but there as nothing like Saturday's dislay to set her off. This program as an amalgam of bigtime prouction, miming, casting, writing nd direction. The results were s hilarious as anything she's ever one.

Miss Raye had the fortune to be acked by an excellent script suplied by Nat Hiken, Billy Frieder and Al Singer. There were any situations, which while ased on tested theatrical devices, ere given fresh slants. Miss Raye orked within a situation comedy ormat as an entertainer in one f the less-fashionable dives. Plot ad her apartment being used as he location for the filming of "Dr. ekyll and Mr. Hyde." Cesar Roero, Rise Stevens and Rocky raziano provided the plot twists nd support. The basic situations ere funny and the embellishing ncident lifted the talent to peak oments.

Miss Stevens, aside from giving ne aria, showed a good comedy lair as the hostess trying to make iss Raye and Graziano feel at home t a top social event. Romero had everal moments to prove his comdic mettle and did them well. The hespic surprise of the occasion as Graziano. This pug, fresh rom a defeat by Chuck Davey, idn't muff a line. True, the scriptrs did their writing around him, ut what he had to do, he did very ell. He could easily join the roser of pugs in greasepaint, a list hat includes Tony Canzoneri, Max aer and Maxie Rosenbloom.

One charming sequence was by anuel & Marita Viera, assisted by wo intelligent simians. This sesion got yocks and provided a setp that enabled Miss Raye and omero to do a funny burlesque of e monkey act.

However, the fulcrum of all this ctivity was Miss Raye's native omedic ability. She's a genuinely unny gal and what's more, she an be tops in this field without a ingle blue line. She's still an actess of ability, an asset that gives reater direction to her comedy.

Leo Morgan, who produced Miss aye's efforts last season, is again andling this chore. He's coordiated a top staff and knocked off show which should be a landark on this series. Jose.

"Papa Cellini" apparently is aiming to be the Italian version of "The Goldbergs." It's directed toward attaining a warm, folksy comedy, that won't scare off any non-Italian listeners. This half-hour show will likely succeed in this direction, even though there's a tendency to overdo some of the folksy stuff, a fact that can be corrected in future writing.

Cast is headed by Carlo De Angelo, doubling as producer. A vet radio producer, he proves to be a capable actor. He has the right touch of ham to warm up this show and paces the entire cast to a good blowoff.

Plot on the initial session had the Cellini family celebrating Papa's birthday. The festivities came at a time when a genealogist was attempting to convince the household head that he was a descendant of the famous Benvenuto. He was about to extract $100 for the coat of arms and a genealogical chart when Papa decided that he couldn't achieve more stature with the heraldry than that already bestowed upon him by his family and friends.

The cast had Ada Ruggeri as Mama, Carol Sinclair and Ivan Curry as the children and Aristide Sigismondi as Antonio. It's an okay lineup.

Commercials for Ronzoni spaghetti are palatable but could stand some pruning. Jose.

THERE'S ONE IN EVERY FAMILY

With John Reed King, emcee
Producer: Richard Lewine
Director: James Sheldon
30 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 11 a.m.
Sustaining
CBS-TV, from New York

In the continuing wrestling and jockeying for daytime TV formats, the CBS video production boys came up with a new half-hour, cross-the-board morning stanza which starts off with a sound premise that is off the beaten programming path, but deteriorates into another of the multiple prize-laden q. & a. sessions that borrows from the several hundred others that have gone before.

This one is called "There's One In Every Family," and is designed to showcase members of families who are outstandingly different. Item: A boy with aspirations to reach the moon via rocket and who knows a lot of the science-fiction answers, including flying saucers, atomic fission, etc.; item: A New York woman (Pearl Fisher) who has distinguished herself as a "big sister" to servicemen around the world when they hit Manhattan and who has been appropriately cited by Cardinal Spellman for her services. There are others who parade before the cameras telling their stories.

Then the program dissolves into the clicked formula—the applause meter which determines how much she gets for telling her story; the routine guessing contest (of the "Beat the Clock," "20 Questions," etc., genre) for additional loot for the family, with visual plugs for the donated prizes.

John Reed King is emcee on the series. He handles the participants in his usual glib manner. Rose.

BATTLE PAGE OF THE AIR

30 Mins.; Tues., 9 p.m.
N. Y. DAILY NEWS
WPIX, N. Y.

(Cunningham & Walsh)

"Battle Page," veteran pre-election feature of the N. Y. News, has been brought to video on the morning tab's own tele station, WPIX, in a polished forum. Kickoff program (marking the vid-packaging bow of mag specialist Franklin S. Forsberg) on Tuesday (23) moved smoothly and had headline-making guests in John Foster Dulles, GOP foreign policy strategist, and W. Averell Harriman, who had been a candidate for the Democratic nomination as well as Mutual Security Administrator.

Quizzing them in an informed manner were two permanent panelites, Lawrence E. Laybourne, chief of Time mag's U. S. - Canadian correspondents, and Kenneth Crawford, national affairs editor of Newsweek; and two guest interrogators, Marx Leva, former Asst. Defense Secretary, and Alden Hatch, author-biographer.

Format calls for each of the principals to give a two-minute presentation of his views, followed by a 20-minute give-and-take as the panel tosses the queries. It made an interesting discussion of GOP.-vs.-Dem. approaches to international politics, with less of the heated confusion that mars some such airers. However, the one-minute summary time allotted at the conclusion seemed insufficient. Harriman and Dulles used the period chiefly to plug their respective Presidential candidates. Program is strictly for the two major parties and no notice was taken of smaller groups on the preem.

Cecil Brown, the Mutual commentator, makes a competent moderator. Production was topflight, with good closeup lensing. Frank Waldecker pleasantly handled the blurbs for the daily, plugging its compactness, mass circulation and special features. Bril.

THE WEB

(Deadlock)
With Eli Wallach, Dennis Harrison
Producer: Vincent McConnor
Director: Lela Swift
Writer: A. J. Russell
30 Mins., Sun., 10 p.m.
P. LORILLARD CO.
CBS-TV, from New York

(Young & Rubicam)

Having switched to CBS-TV's Sunday schedule from its previous slotting in the same net's Wednesday lineup, "The Web" seems destined to make the most of this cream viewing time by picking a wider following. On basis of its production and thesping, show warrants viewing. Producer Vincent McConnor and director Lela Swift have an imaginative and class approach to meller telecasting which can't help but win ardent partisans.

Only weak spot in preem stanza Sunday (28) was the A. J. Russell script tagged "Deadlock." Plot teed off on an interesting premise (rivalry between two detectives, one who had earned his slot through practical experience and the other through police school) but dissipated into routine meller stuff as it progressed. Story hinged on uncovering a time bomb which had been placed by a dying man in his wife's suitcase. Wife totes the bag to the airport where she's to board a plane. She decided, however, not to fly home and goes instead, still carrying the suitcase, to her brother's nitery. After a number of hectic phone calls, the detectives track her down, get to the suitcase, and defuse the bomb but only after the feuding detectives try to prove their courage by waiting until the last moment before beginning the defusing process. What was to have been the dramatic highlight of the piece proved to be nothing more than an unbelievable bit of hokum.

Eli Wallach gave a sock portrayal of the detective with practical experience and Dennis Price complemented him nicely as the rival. Other cast members were okay in their assignments.

The commercial spiels for Kent Cigarets were presented effectively. Gros.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

The first half of Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" (CBS) salute to "The ASCAP Story" proved (1), most songwriters are not good pluggers for themselves, and (2), only when a songsmith-entertainer like Harold Arlen or Joe E. Howard comes on the scene do their handiwork assume the stature they merit. While Sullivan dramatized how a catalog of 200,000 works are available to music users through a central performing rights and collection agency such as the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, there was a shade too much accent on the penniless Stephen Foster (with a prop empty purse; presumably authentic) and the Victor Herbert-Nathan Burkan-Justice Holmes decision.

Historic and potent as all these facets are, somehow they didn't play as they should. Sullivan had an awareness that the parade of Jack Norworth, Mabel Wayne, Harry Tierney, Maude Nugent Jerome, Alice Lawler, George M. Cohan (film clip), Peter DeRose, Ernie Burnett fell into the "and then I wrote" orbit, and he so mentioned it.

Show didn't perk until Arlen at the halfway mark. As is w.k. within the trade, he is the son of a cantor and his penchant for the blues stems from that minor-key heritage, both as songsmith and song interpreter. Arlen's catalog so overwhelmed and eclipsed the others that it automatically suggested a base for an hour all its own. As it was, he consumed a healthy segment. Same was true of the octogenarian showman Joe Howard ("I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," etc.) backed by the chorus line.

While Oscar Hammerstein 2d, whose saga was teleproduced by Sullivan last spring, took a bow from the audience, the impression lingered that the vastness of the project militated against a fair distribution of the values. Herbert got a brushoff to dramatize the historic Shanley's Restaurant legend and it ended there. Then came the parade of and-then-I-wrotes, which reminded of those periodic Benny Davis, Anatole Friedland, Al Sherman, Charlie Tobias vaude flash acts of yesteryear—"Songwriters on Parade" and the like—instead of the richness of ASCAP that stems from the Gershwins, Cole Porter, Kern, Romberg, Friml, Hirsch, Harbach, DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, Rodgers & Hart, Dubin & Warren, Brown & Freed, Mercer, Loesser and a host of others. And Irving Berlin. Several of these are heralded for the second part and the interpretative artists will be Les Compagnons de la Chanson (a rather strange Gallic note for the American Society) and Vaughn Monroe. And presumably tunes by ASCAP prexy Harbach (which means probably Kern, his favorite composer-collaborator) and, naturally, Berlin.

There's a Sunday night folksiness about the many vets who were paraded if not cavalcaded before the CBS iconoscope—but tradewise the spectre of BMI cropped up. ASCAP songsmiths are talking "war chest" to battle the supposedly BMI "upstarts" who seem to dominate the current Hit Parade—and it is to be hoped that next Sunday's ASCAP cavalcade will more modernly transmute the Society's contributions in this "Toast" two-parter. ASCAP is a natural "Toast."

Certainly Sullivan has been manifesting much showmanship savvy in striving for new and fresh central themes with which to punctuate his Sunday night vaudeos. In his sundry "salutes" (Robert E. Sherwood, Helen Hayes, Hammerstein, et al.) he has shown astuteness and a desire for the fresh approach. Focused around individuals the panorama is more personalized, hence punched-up because of a single focal point. The largeness of the ASCAP canvas presented an editing problem. Obviously, the Society is an entire season's series in itself. Arlen gave a sample thereof. There are 30-minute and full-hour programs in the catalogs of any of the above. Sullivan may well prove to be a trailer for that idea. Abel.

Milton Berle's second edition of his new "Texaco Star Theatre" on NBC-TV Tuesday (23) showed a marked improvement over the initialer, giving evidence that the revised format may pay off with sock entertainment values. It was an uneven show, with some weak spots, but where it clicked it was plenty potent—and overall it was a highly enjoyable hour.

The plot thread was the coming of a new director, Gregory Ratoff, and the byplay between the Holly-

EDDIE CANTOR SHOW

(Colgate Comedy Hour)
With Eddie Fisher, Dorothy Lamour, Sammy Davis, Tom D'Andrea and Henry Slate, Sidney Fields, Al Goodman orch, others
Producer-Director: Sid Kuller
60 Mins.; Sun., 8 p.m.
COLGATE
NBC-TV, from Hollywood.

(Bates, Sherman & Marquette)

A few more like his "Comedy Hour" kickoff and televiewers across the land will take up the cry "We Want Cantor." It would seem this great showman can do no wrong in putting together a display of diverse elements and make it mesh with the smooth precision of a dove's tail. It sped through the Sabbath hour with sparks of wit flying in all directions and other diverting elements matching the general high tone of entertainment.

Few stars on the bigtime can make use of guest talent with unfailing judgment of this exemplar of the lively art. Dorothy Lamour was never shown to better advantage in two skits with the headman and proved again she comes by the new medium with better artistry and grace than most film converts. Reflecting assurance and confidence that comes with working alongside the master of comedy projection. Miss Lamour emoted and cajoled with all facets shining.

As in all Cantor shows there's reason for laying a premise so that the acts aren't dragged in by the heels. Here the device was bringing Broadway to America and setting a simulated tour of Mazda Lane. Cantor may not have been overly evident on camera but at these junctures guesting specialists were of such calibre as to keep the pace hopping and sitters rocking.

If it wasn't Sammy Davis, Jr., exploding laughs with his mimicry and fast footwork there were the griping GIs, Tom D'Andrea and Henry Slate, socking across their "Drab Olive" funnies. This Davis lad is one of the great talents in show biz and even repeats don't seem to impair his high popularity.

Cantor brought back Private Eddie Fisher for a song and pitch for airborne recruiting, both done with unaffected aplomb. Sidney Fields,, former Cantor writer and now fully developed into one of TV's better straightmen, foiled for Cantor in a burley bit that kept the laughs rolling. Sharon Baird tapped her tiny footsies for the usual burst of applause.

Show marked the entry of Sid Kuller as producer-director and the end result justified Cantor's choice. Al Goodman's musical backup was noteworthy.

Colgate's cartooned connectives seem to be losing their impact because of constant repetition. Helm.

PAUL DIXON SHOW

With Dotty Mack, Wanda Lewis
Producer-writer: Dick Perry
Director: Len Goorian
60 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 3 p.m.
Sustaining
DuMont, from Cincinnati

Paul Dixon, who's made a career for himself on TV of pantomiming pop and novelty disclicks, preemed a new cross-the-board daytime series on the DuMont web Monday (29) which looked as though it will be no better or no worse than his brace of shows on the ABC-TV web last season. As basically a deejay show which viewers don't necessarily have to watch in order to enjoy, it should do fairly well in its 3 to 4 p.m. slot on DuMont.

Number of performers, especially recording artists, will have a major gripe against Dixon—and rightfully so—for the program. It's a parasitic affair, in which the emcee capitalizes on the talents and hard work of others via his miming their disks. Not that he and his assistants, Dotty Mack and Wanda Lewis, don't work hard themselves in going through their paces, but it seems extremely unfair that they can earn their pay for something which is the work of others.

Trio is backed by a number of sets, none of the lush variety but certainly sufficient for the songs they do. Besides the panto routines, Miss Lewis also draws cartoons to visualize several of the numbers. It's a new approach to TV deejay programming, which would get by if it were not for that parasitic quality. DuMont is selling the show on a participating basis but no bankrollers had signed on prior to the opener Monday.

Initialer emanated from DuMont's Ambassador Theatre, N. Y., but as of yesterday (Tues.), the show moved back to Dixon's hometown of Cincinnati, from where it will emanate from WCPO-TV, DuMont's affiliate in that city. Stal.

Television Reviews

the presentation of the performers, for which the production crew on this show can also take a bow. Opening program was a crowded entertainment of many performers, many numbers—and all distinctive for its fine production touches.

Basic ingredient of this show, aside from the gracious Waring as the introducer, is the facile lighting that serves always to enhance a sought-for mood. Added to this is the manner in which the direction has been able to maneuver the performers deftly without loss of pace.

Waring's seasonal opener was a polyglot of many entertainers in the musical vein, and was consistent with Waring's opening suggestion that he was going to present a little of many entertainments during the season. He punched home that idea on the very first show as he presented a little opera, vaude, etc. It's doubtful if any phase was left out as the unit proceeded to run the gamut—and on a half-hour show, too. Waring must certainly have wished that he was back on the 60-minute grind, so that he could have gotten in a little more of each.

Of the multiple bits of entertainment, the more notable ones were the "Capricio Espagnol" symphonic arrangement, with Waring batoning the orch and Nadine Gae and Marc Breaux doing the terp accomp; and the finale "Kol Nidre," in deference to the Jewish High Holiday, Yom Kippur, which started the same night. The latter was shrewd showmanship as done by the entire choral ensemble, with Joanne Wheatley the soloist. The showmanship was particularly evident in that the traditional Hebrew chant was done with English lyrics. It was typical of the overall show's good taste.

Aside from those already mentioned, the rest of the layout had no standouts because of the necessary brevity of each performer's spotlighting. Nevertheless, there were meritorious performances also by Frances Wyatt, Joe Marine and Daisy Bernier, all vocalists. Red Barber and Joan Woodward did the sales spiels for General Electric.

WHISTLE STOP USA
With Charles Collingwood
Producer: Bill Workman
Director: Ted Marvel
30 Mins., Sun., 3:30 p.m.
CBS-TV, from New York

The presidential campaign has given tele plenty of opportunity to put its best foot forward and CBS-TV's "Whistle Stop USA" is a case in point. Series captures the dramatic intensity of the campaign via well-edited film clips which digest the past week's political highlights.

The half-hour coverage is knit together by Charles Collingwood, who fills the narrator's slot with top reportorial style. He lets the films speak for themselves and inserts just enough gab to keep the stanza fluid and exciting. On show caught Sunday (28) highlights were Gov. Stevenson's address at the American Federation of Labor meet in N. Y., Stevenson's southern fried chicken feed at Vice President Alben Barkley's home in Paducah, Ky., Gen. Eisenhower's speeches through the midwest and the Sen. Nixon payola drama. Past week was probably the most exciting since the campaign began and the stanza wasn't caught napping.

Calibre of the films (shot by Telenews Productions) was topgrade and producer Bill Workman and director Ted Marvel did a fine job maintaining pace and interest.

SCIENCE IN ACTION
With Dr. Earl C. Herald; others
Producer: Ben Draper
Director: Verne Louden
Writer: Larry Russell
30 Mins., Tues., 7 p.m.
AMERICAN TRUST CO.
KRON-TV, San Francisco
(McCann-Erickson)

This is the tops in local live programming.

It combines a healthy budget with the resources of the California Academy of Sciences. It couples two years of experience with shrewd, show-wise, masterminding by Producer Ben Draper, of the Academy staff.

Show is getting stoop shouldered from its many awards, but there's nothing high hat, highbrow or standoffish about its content. That's why it's a consistent eye-catcher.

It's beginning its third year on a new station after two seasons with KGO-TV. Draper is also working with a new star, a new director and a new announcer. The new combination has not quite regained the smooth, popular appeal it enjoyed under the emceeing of Dr. Tom Groody. Doctor Groody, who left to do his own "Science Laboratory" daily strip, was a showman as well as a scientist.

The new host, Dr. Herald, is comfortable before the camera but lacks the humorous, human touch that made Groody so popular.

"Science In Action" handles one scientific topic each stanza, explores it with visual demonstrations, films, models, drawings, dramatic vignettes and guest scientists.

Second show of the new season was a spellbinder for this area—"Shakes, Tremors and Faults." With the aid of six film clips, three slides, nine models, blackboard drawings, on-camera demonstrations and two University of California guest scientists, Dr. Herald made the earthquake story jump with realism.

He demonstrated the causes of earthquakes, how they are measured, how their effects can be lessened, especially through building construction.

Script by Larry Russell was a thoroughly researched, lively job that made for easy viewing. Like all "Science In Action" programs, this one, despite its new personnel, retained a smooth-flowing continuity thanks to a four-week processing and a full day of oncamera rehearsal before hitting the telescreens.

Commercials are institutional and informative, usually feature a young scientist from a Bay area high school.

Each show is tagged with an "Animal of the Week" feature, this time a lizard found around the Gulf of California.

Tele Followups

wood actor-megger and Berle over how the stanza is to be pitched. There was a delightful segment when Ratoff was speaking Russian and Carmen Miranda spieling Portuguese with Berle in between. Comic put signs labelled "Brazil" and "Russia" in front of his guests and donned earphones to enact a cute United Nations takeoff. Twist was Berle's gabbing about the "gismo" and the "switcheroo," with the translator stumped by the "delegate from Flatbush." It was scripter Goodman Ace at his best.

Another topflight segment was the finale, which started with two moppets from Jersey reprising their "Uncle Miltie" song from the previous edition. Ratoff decided to make a big production out of it, and what followed was deft spoofing of over-produced Hollywood filmusicals, kicking off with the 20th-Fox trademark fanfare and spotting the song as done Latino style by Miss Miranda and her trio; as a cowpoke opus by Bobby Sherwood ("Do Not Foresake Me, Uncle Miltje"); as a hillbilly chant by Jean Vallee; in the military manner by Jack Cowans; as the death of a swan by a ballerina; as a chorus routine, etc., winding up with the entire cast on stage augmented by an elephant and a circus gal doing an iron jaw whirl. It had showmanship, flash and good satire.

Ratoff and Miss Miranda registered effectively throughout. Gene Baylos, as a mad-genius cameraman, got some laughs, although his running gag was overworked. Ruth Gilbert, as Berle's secretary who is blindly in love with her boss, had overtones of other comic femmes Ace has scripted and came over as a character who will build. Roland Winters was so-so in his lampoon of the "producer."

All in all, ditching the vaudeo framework seems to have lent this entry a faster pace and provided some effective comedy situations. Some of the gimmicks fell flat, as, for instance, the life-sized human ashtray. Berle himself was in good form, putting over a bit with a hypochondriac doctor, displaying his skill at the quick insult in some of the give-and-take with Ratoff and doing a neat turn in yocking up a song. Production, including Alan Roth's musical backgrounding, and better-than-average choreography and direction, was smoothly handled. Mid-commercial by ventrilo Jimmy Nelson and his three dummies was easy to take.

Jackie Gleason's second outing on CBS-TV last Saturday (27) can be chalked as an improvement over his Sept. 20 preem. While no big rouser by any means, it was a better encaser of the Gleason type of boffoonery. For one thing, he reintroduced his character, "The Loudmouth," grabbing a succession of laughs in his antique dimepiece set-to with partner Art Carney, complete unto a snappy albeit deliberately telegraphed photofinish. For another, the big clown had a sock finale sketch in his Reggie Van Gleason III personation set within an actual wrestling ring (supplied by Everlast).

While nearly all of the pantoed shenanigans with the beefy rasslers was on a familiar route, the production getup preceding the two-team bout was an extension of the fancydan grapplers and their fabulous entourage. Here Gleason was fanfared down the studio aisle, borne in a litter amid potentate pomp and stepping into the ring as a leopard-skinned, silk-hatted and be-caped darling of the Greco-Roman jousts.

This wasn't all dazzle sans sweat, however. Gleason proceeded forthwith to strong-arm his opponents, including his teammate and the referee, in a tossing affray that rivaled video wrestling in its most rambuctious moments. Carney as the announcer was a realistic gem. Gleason was so spent at the end that he just managed to puff out his "goodnight."

In the guest act portions, Patti Page (who preems her own show on NBC Oct. 8), wholesome looking in an off the shoulder job, piped a couple of numbers including the ballad, "You Belong to Me," to add luster to the session. The Jimmy Dorsey orch, with JD fronting on the clarinet (Gleason introed him as "the world's greatest saxophonist"), bounced over a pair of items, with the maestro allowing good solo licks by the sax, trombone and trumpet group drafted from the full crew. Joan Holloway sizzled the screen via whirling taps, double spins, cloggery and one-foot rotary to grab a salvo score.

Gleason's running sketch, "The Honeymooners," with Audrey Meadows, Carney, and Joyce Randolph, was funny in spots in its pegging around a pair of live gobblers and a misplaced wedding ring.

The up-front portion was good warmer-uppering, featuring the Marilyn Taylor Dancers (choreographed by June Taylor) in a silhouetted cane and topper terp winding in precision kick. This segued into Gleason's song and dance stanza with one of the gals for his trademarked soft-shoe workout. In the followup gag inning with Gleason, Stan Ross, made up as a wraith-like bellhop, drew some chuckles, but questionable whether the queerie stuff is good entertainment, aside from the taste angle. His a la Cantor "Susie" was a winning routine. The Schick Razor commercial, again slotted late in the show for the one message, was a live and film combo on the plus side.

Inside Stuff—Radio

O. W. Riegel, of Washington & Lee U., Lexington, Va., has invited the AM and TV industries to submit nominations for the 10th annual Alfred I. DuPont awards.

Prizes of $1,000 go to a radio or tele news commentator, an AM or TV station with over 5 kw signal strength and stations of 5 kw or less power. Individual awards are made for "aggressive, consistently excellent and accurate gathering and reporting of news." Station awards go for "outstanding public service." Deadline for nominations is Dec. 31.

Tex McCrary, who bowed off radio and television last spring in order to campaign for Republican Presidential nominee Dwight D. Eisenhower, will be back after the election—but in a new role. Instead of rejoining his wife, Jinx Falkenburg, on their radio and TV shows via WNBC and WNBT, the NBC web's N. Y. flagships, McCrary will have his own news program.

Explaining the reason for the switch, station execs cited the fact that McCrary is basically a newspaperman, having been an editor for the N. Y. Daily Mirror prior to entering broadcasting. He ankled his radio and TV shows so that the stations would not be accused of partiality in the Presidential campaigning, and Miss Falkenburg has had the two shows on her own since then.

CBS Radio's Presentations Division has compiled into brochure form findings of the special Pulse study taken in the N. Y. metropolitan area of the amount of listening to the four major radio flagships done in TV homes. Web is mailing the brochure out to agencies, clients and other interested parties.

Study, taken especially for the web, was detailed in VARIETY several weeks ago. Its major findings reveal that about 20% of all TV homes in the area are tuned to radio at any evening hour from 6 to 11, and that the four network AM stations draw more than half of all nighttime radio listening. It had previously been supposed that TV setowners not wishing to tune in their video sets would turn to the indie radio stations, with their emphasis on music and news.

Texas 'Time for Decision' Takes Up Vital Issues

Houston, Sept. 30.

A series of programs on the schools of the Houston Independent School District, their needs, the $20,000,000 school bond issue to be voted on Nov. 4 and its effect on the local tax rate, will be telecast on KPRC-TV for a half hour each Thursday evening. Series will be titled "Time for Decision."

Format will include dramatizations and panel discussions on each telecast. Local stage and TV actors will participate in the dramatic portions.

John Paul Goodwin will produce the series and will act as moderator for the panel discussion portion. Annie Nathan will write the series which Gene Osborne will direct.

U. of P. vs. NCAA

Field had been sold out in advance; that it would be a public service to shut-ins and thousands of others, and that it would interfere with no local grid games.

The telegrams started Monday, with Murray's initial request to Bob Hall, chairman of the NCAA committee, and Asa Bushnell, director of the NCAA program. From then on the wires burned between the participants, and two Philadelphia dailies commented upon the sidelight of the interchange that in most cases, the newspapers received copies of the wires before they reached the persons they were intended for.

The NCAA acceded to Murray's initial request, giving permission to WPTZ to switch to the Penn-Notre Dame contest and also gave permission for the other two Philly stations, WFIL-TV and WCAU-TV, to carry the game if they so wanted.

Murray promptly wired back that Penn preferred to have WPTZ carry the Princeton-Columbia game and let the other two channels carry Penn-Notre Dame. Hall and Bushnell replied flatly his proposal was in direct violation of the NCAA plan, and "could not be considered."

In its final statement Friday evening, the NCAA told Murray he could go along with the NCAA and let the Philadelphia stations telecast the game, but not his plan to televize both games.

Murray waited until 12:30 p.m. Saturday (an hour and a half before game time), before bowing to the authority of the NCAA, and then announced cancellation of the telecast.

Greensboro, N. C.—Allen Wannamaker, former WBIG announcer and now general manager of WGTM at Wilson, N. C., has been named manager of WBIG here, Charles H. Crutchfield, executive v.p. and general manager of Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Co., owner of WBIG, has announced. Appointment follows resignation of Henry Sullivan, manager of WCOG here since July, 1949. Sullivan will assume the position at Wilson's WGTM to be vacated by Wannamaker.

'Connoisseur' Hits 300th Broadcast at WNYC For Unusual Longhair Mark

"Music for the Connoisseur," WNYC, N. Y.'s full-hour program of longhair music heard Tuesday evenings at 8:30, will mark its 300th broadcast next Tuesday night (7). Program, started in July, '46, has been on the air steadily ever since without pause, except for four or five special evenings when it went off for elections, etc. David Randolph, its producer and commentator, has missed only one broadcast in the six years, when he couldn't get back from an auto trip in time.

Program is taped as the broadcast is being made, and tapes are sent out to National Assn. of Educational Broadcasters headquarters at the U. of Illinois, where 10 copies of each are reproduced and fanned out to the NAEB web. Of the taped web of about 70 stations, 62 carry the airer. The tapes are then returned to Randolph, who uses them again at WNYC. He also has a Sunday at 5 program, which utilizes these tapes, usually about a year after their original Tuesday airing.

Program, which presents classical music from any period (from the ninth century to date), has each hour devoted to a specific subject, idea, development, instrument or era. Randolph, who started it, compiles and writes the whole program, using narration and disks. In the 60 minutes, there is an average of 12 to 13 minutes of talk.

Sometimes Randolph uses live artists, and occasionally has a name guest, like Aaron Copland or Roy Harris, for an interview. He never plays long works, only short pieces or sections of works. Program has won an Ohio U. award for three years. Randolph has also received over 26,000 letters and cards from all types of listeners, from composers and musicologists as well as lay listeners, since the start.

Randolph gets no pay or expense money for the program, although its preparation takes up the major part of his work week. In addition to these cuffo chores, he gives two sets of lectures at N. Y. U., one being music appreciation for the layman; writes record notes for phonograph companies; reviews records for two trade publications; conducts a chorus in New Jersey, and directs the Randolph Singers in N. Y. Last-named, who specialize in madrigals and early music, now record for Westminster.

Yorkton, Sask.—A staffer with station CJGX, Yorkton, for 25 years and manager for the past two, Art Mills has retired from the managership and will act as technical and public relations counsel. J. M. Sportreed succeeds as manager. Mills first signed the station on the air 25 years ago. He was chief engineer before becoming manager.

now on network TV in which any bankroller can buy as few or as many spots as he wants and in any way he wants. For that reason, NBC is looking forward to a rush of business from the auto manufacturers when they unveil their 1953 models, and is also anticipating a landslide from a number of manufacturers during the pre-Christmas selling season.

Show wouldn't sell, however, unless it had a rating payoff, NBC spokesmen said, and the fact that sponsors are coming in proves "Today" has achieved its audience pull. They cited the big rating payoff during the summer and said "Today" is now beginning to change viewers' living habits by luring them to their TV sets during the early morning rush to get to work and to school. Also contributing to the show's success is the interest in the current Presidential campaigning. Viewers, afraid of missing important developments while they sleep at night, tune in the show first thing in the morning to get the latest news flashes.

Cleve. Theatres

the Hipp, the Palace is using lobby display, trailers and newspaper ad tie-ins. In both instances, the theatres are withholding details of the contest and telling audiences to watch WNBK for full details.

Although there have been other spot tie-ins between theatres and TV, this is the first major all-out combo drive. It was stimulated, to a great extent, by NBC's general manager Hamilton Shea's desire to establish WNBK as a "community station" and promote extensive use of live talent entertainment.

WNBK's sistter station, WTAM, also got into the act with the Hipp booming two huge lobby signboards telling the audience to listen to broadcasts of Cleveland Browns and Ohio State Football games, both WTAM exclusives.

Although the parties involved won't openly admit it, backstage reports indicate the promotional ventures will snowball into a major series of stage reviews, with WNBK telecasting morning stints from either or both theatres. The Palace is particularly well equipped to handle live shows. It's reported, too, that unions involved will flash the green go-ahead.

Inside Stuff—Television

Walter Winchell "took my show out-of-town," as he puts it, staged three dry-runs preparatory to his TV debut next Sunday (5) over ABC, and decided to stick to his standard technique—collar open, hat on, and reading his news flashes as he has been doing on radio for almost 20 years. As Ben Katz, head of Gruen Watch, assured him, "We bought a photographed version of your radio program," and while Winchell experimented rather successfully with Tele-Que, there was one lapse where the script didn't keep pace with his staccato delivery and he has finally decided to adhere to the original premise—reading from the script. Furthermore, he is contract-bound not to deviate from same, under penalty of personal liability in the event of litigation, once the script has been cleared.

Winchell now has 27 TV outlets and it may build to 32 by weekend. Dickers are afoot for New Orleans, Louisville, Syracuse and Utica. There is also the proposal to show his kinnie the next day in certain auxiliary localities but he is balking that for reasons of timeliness.

CBS-TV has discontinued levying a charge against its advertisers for the spur line to the transcontinental microwave link up to Portland and Seattle, paying the line charges itself. Web's move, in no longer charging its clients for the spur line, indicates it will pay the entire fee for use of the N.Y. to L.A. facilities as soon as enough new stations take the air to break up the long haul, now stationless, between Salt Lake City and San Francisco.

Web spokesmen explained that they were previously forced to charge their clients the $200 per hour fee for shows going to KING-TV, Seattle, since there was no other station between that city and San Francisco, where the western end of the transcontinental link is located. Now that Portland also has a video station, revenue from the two outlets is sufficient to permit the web to pay the spur charges on its own.

NBC-TV's early-bird "Today" preemed a new feature Monday (29) with the airing of films specially lensed for the show of four top football games of the preceding Saturday. Pix were lensed by an indie outfit, however, and after looking at the cost sheets, the web decided henceforth to turn the lensing chores over to its own staff cameramen. As a result, each Monday through the end of the football season will have only two games re-capped via the film system. Jack Lescoulie, one of the regular newscasters on the show, narrates the films.

An appeal by a Belmar, N. J., mother on the CBS-TV "Strike It Rich" program to locate her missing teenage daughter led to finding the girl in Philadelphia an hour after the show. Hoseman Anthony Pellegrini caught the program on the TV set at Engine Co. 43 and thought there was something familiar about the picture of the missing girl. Later sitting outside the fire station, Pellegrini spotted the girl whose photo had just appeared on the TV screen. The fireman talked to her while policewomen were summoned. The girl gave her name as Gail Cook, 16, of Belmar, N. J., and said she left home Sept. 19.

Casting director Ruth Burch of Hal Roach studios on the Coast reports a 25% hike in New York thesps trekking west for work in telepix, complete reversal of trend a year ago when Hollywoodians went to Gotham for TV work. She reports thesps tell her there's plenty of video jobs in Gotham and pay's good, but cost-of-living there is too high, plus fact most thesps are now convinced vidpix capital is to be in Hollywood.

Miss Burch reports it's increasingly difficult to land name stars for teleblurbs, even though the pay is as high as $5,000 for one or two days' work. Stars shy away now, they don't like that exclusivity clause, and some don't feel it's dignified to be associated with a product via direct endorsement. In past 15 months Miss Burch cast over 1,500 telepix parts, and had 5,000 interviews.

March of Time Vidpix

October, 1952, covering a variety of U. S. problems.

MOT managing editor Fred Feldkamp told VARIETY that the outfit's extensive foreign and domestic staff has been alerted to a number of upcoming subjects, and crews continually send in footage on these assignments. Among those in the works are reports on Germany, and the Canadian boom, and pediatrician Dr. Benjamin Spock. As the celluloid comes in it is roughed into shape, but final closing and scoring doesn't take place until Monday, two days before release. A print is in the hands of each outlet by Thursday, with some getting them on Wednesday.

No Newsreel Competish

Murphy said that MOT is not competing with the newsreels for speed, and that the features will be good for a full week or longer. In some cases, they are being screened later than Thursday, due to the fact that the sponsor came up with a better timeslot on another day.

It's not envisaged that the pix will be used in theatres, because exhibitors would not want TV-circulated shows, and the non-tele area is dwindling as new stations come on the air. Shooting and editing is geared to video, rather than theatre, viewing.

In N. Y. "MOT" bows tonight (Wed.) at 9:30-10 p.m. via WJZ-TV. That ABC-TV key has had all four MOT vidshows, including "Crusade in Europe."

Concentration on "MOT" has temporarily suspended production on "American Wit and Humor," after 10 half-hours were completed. It will eventually be upped to 13 shows. Meanwhile, it's being offered for sale and has been sold in Seattle.

Time, Inc. outfit is also peddling "Ballets de Paris," lensed by Jean Benoit-Levy in France. It consists of 26 quarter-hour ballets, adapted from fairy tales.

TV Writers Pact

(e.g., for ballet or pantomime) will get $200 (commercial) and $150 (sustaining). Lyrics without music will earn the same fees.

Tunes and lyrics were included in the pact since many of those writing or cleffing special material for Broadway and TV revues are members of the ALA's Dramatists Guild. Orchestrators and copyists are not covered.

Sketches will get a minimum of $250 commercial and $175 sustaining.

An important aspect of the new pact is that it limits the employers' exclusivity rights, and thus prevents the indefinite shelving of a property. If the material isn't aired within the specified period, the employer's rights in the script are ended. When a script is broadcast, employer has exclusivity for a stated period and can extend his rights by additional payments (to a maximum of 16 years), but he must also air the script periodically, paying the repeat fee each time.

Further, the writer keeps all rights other than TV rights. However, during the period of exclusivity, the writer will not license certain rights (such as film) and certain other subsidiary rights can be sold by the writer within specified periods. On the other hand, the employer may dispose of rights for serials, providing the writer gets a fixed share of the income.

Key Principle

A key principle is that the more the producer contributes to the value of the script by broadcasting it, the more he shares in the subsidiary rights. Employer gets 10% if sale to radio, films, legit, book publishers, etc., is made during his original period of exclusivity; 15% if sale occurs after a re-use; or 25% if disposition is made after two or more re-uses, provided that the employer still has exclusivity. On episodic series, employer's share ranges from 25%-50%, depending on whether the scribbler did more than 10 scripts during the year for the employer.

If a writer gets a 13-week guarantee, the producer earns a 10% discount.

Audition scripts command 100% of the applicable fee. Writers who lack certain experience may be paid 75% of the minimum to do a trial script, but the additional 25% must be paid if the script is to be beamed. No scripts will be submitted on speculation, where payment is "subject to contingencies of any nature."

Scripter will be paid the full minimum for the first or second re-use of his material. Third re-use will cost 75% of the original minimum; each subsequent re-use will cost at least 50% of the original minimum.

The pact stipulates that authors are to get visual credit on each show, in set places, and a full frame credit if the producer or director gets it. Writers will get first crack at a rewrite, if one is necessary, and will not be required to do more than two rewrites.

An anti-discrimination provision states that the employer will not discriminate because of sex, race, creed, color or national origin. Contract will be in effect for five years, with certain provisions such as coin opened for re-negotiation after two and four years. It calls for a 100% guild shop, with all freelance material to come from ALA-SWG members.

Hope's $2,000,000

the best thing that's happened to radio in at least a year."

General Foods initially began romancing Hope almost immediately after Chesterfield had cancelled his nightime show, along with the Bing Crosby program. GF had been interested in utilizing the comic's talents for a daytime-only stanza, but Hope refused to go along, still anxious to embrace nightime radio on the conviction that, in an era of 100,000,000 home sets, the AM medium still can't be brushed aside. GF's agreement to sponsor Hope on both a daytime and nightime basis clinched the deal. Nightime deal is for a firm non-cancellable 39 weeks; the daytime show for 26. It represents a $2,000,000 outlay for General Foods.

No television is involved in the GF pact. Hope is already committed to Colgate for a number of appearances on the Sunday night NBC-TV "Comedy Hour."

Jell-O deal was negotiated by Young & Rubicam, agency on the account.

WDTV Cuts In on Pitt UHF Bid; Pirates Tie Seen

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

First of three UHF channels allocated to Pittsburgh has just been applied for by a group which includes two employees of WDTV, so far the town's only TV outlet and DuMont owned-operated, among its incorporators. They are Larry Israel, sales manager for the DuMont station, and Don Faust, assistant to Harold Lund, general manager of WDTV.

The other three names on the application are Tom Johnson, lawyer and vice-president of the Pittsburgh Pirates; William H. Rea, and Henry Oliver Rea, the latter two business and civic leaders here.

There's already talk in the trade that Johnson's appearance in the setup may eventually mean that when and if the telecast rights to the Pirates' baseball games are sold, the UHF'er stands the best chance of grabbing them off.

the 5-6 frame (except on Wednesday when it will start at 5:30).

"Music and Silhouette" departs from the 7-7:30 p.m. strip and "TV Dinner Date" will expand into 6:30-7:30 p.m. "M&S" will be heard on Saturdays only, at 7 p.m.

Fred Robbins' "all-night" show gets trimmed to one hour, in the 11 p.m. stretch. "Dave Elman's Curiosity Shop" get heaved, with the double-feature film show starting at 8 p.m. Sunday instead of 8:45. "Mac Perrin's Tune Room" and "Rod & Gun Club" also go.

Although orders were issued to Bob O'Connor, sports director who leaves after the World Series, to negotiate a settlement of contracts with sports promoters, policy has been reversed and wrestling will continue on Monday nights with boxingcasts on Tuesday and Thursday. Harness racing will go off, as will wrestling on Friday. Ralph Giffen, who handled the baseball pickups, was rehired, reportedly on an appeal from BBD&O agency. Wade also announced that the outlet will beam the Brooklyn Dodgers ballgames in the '53 season.

Jerry Rosen Info TV Agenting

Jerry Rosen agency, formerly concentrating on night club and vaudeville talent, is entering the TV casting field. New department will be headed by William Hunt, former associate producer of "Doorway to Danger" on NBC-TV.

Stanley Kreshower will assist Hunt, handling musical variety shows.

Circling the Kilocycles

Minneapolis — Although WCCO-TV is now carrying telecasts of professional league football games on Sunday afternoons; time formerly assigned to Bishop Fulton J. # Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Perry Como: "To Know You"-"My Lady Loves To Dance" (Victor). Following in the same lively groove as "Watermelon Weather" and "Maybe," which he cut with Eddie Fisher, Perry Como has comeup with a powerful commercial slice in "To Know You." Como brings a lot of zest to the bouncy beat and his reading of the catchy lyric captures the gay spirit. He gets a sock assist on the vocal from the Fontane Sisters and Mitchell Ayres orch supplies a festive backing. It's surefire juke fodder. "My Lady Loves To Dance," on the flip, is another sprightly tune which Como sells in similar style. It, too, is headed for plenty of spinning time.

Johnny Desmond: "Nina Never Knew"-"Stay Where You Are" (Coral). Johnny Desmond works over the best material he's been given in some time on this coupling and it should carry him into the hit bracket. Standout slice is a touching ballad. "Nina Never Knew," which Desmond delivers with effective sentimentality. Tune is topdrawer Tin Pan Alley output headed for clicko results on all levels. Added punch is supplied by Tony Mottola's imaginative orch backing. Reverse follows the same pattern but less effectively.

Art Mooney Orch: "Lazy River"-"Honestly" (M-G-M). Art Mooney, who's been virtually quiet in the disk field for some time, has a noisemaker in his slice of "Lazy River." The Hoagy Carmichael oldie is given a delightful uptempoed treatment that should payoff in solid spins. Potent asset on the disk is Cathy Ryan's topflight warbling. "Honestly," a so-so ballad, gets an okay reading by Cliff Ayers and a pleasant Mooney orch workover.

Jimmy Saunders: "Need Me"-"Cry My Heart" (Coral). Jimmy Saunders tees off as a Coral pactee with a strong commercial coupling. Saunders has what the disk-buyers today want and he makes them know it with a big-voiced, quasi-emotional styling that clicks. His technique shows up best in "Need Me," a pash ballad adapted from an Italian hit. Working with a lush orch backing supplied by Ray Bloch, Saunders hits hard and effectively. "Cry My Heart" is of the grandiose ballad genre. Although it's not so melodic as the topside tune, it rates spins.

Lorry Raine: "I Wish I were Somebody Else" - "Fickle and False" (Universal). Lorry Raine could break through with "Somebody Else." It's a lilting tune with a fair lyric and pegged for current market vogue in it's multiple-voice gimmick. Miss Raine has a pleasant piping quality and her "echo" is worked in neatly and unobtrusively. Should do especially well with the jocks. "Fickle and False" is in the country-waltz genre, and, although it's given top treatment, tune is too reminiscent of past country clicks to have much impact.

Vic Damone: "Nina Never Knew"-"Johnny With the Bandy Legs" (Mercury). The fragile ballad, "Nina Never Knew," is given a smooth workover by Vic Damone and should race Johnny Desmond's Coral workover for top spins. Damone, however, fails to give it enough shading or color for boff payoff results. Cut of Josef Marais' "Johnny With the Bandy Legs" has a better chance. It's a bright, breezy tune culled from the African Veld and Damone hits with a bouyant appeal. Joe Reisman's orch adds a rich flavor.

Bill Kenny: "Moonlight Mystery"-"You Are Happiness" (Decca). Bill Kenny, top man of the Ink Spots, steps out solo for a highly stylized workover of "Moonlight Mystery." Kenny pulls out his whole bag of vocal tricks here but tune remains just average platter fare "You Are Happiness," which Kenny co-penned with David Allen, borders on the pretentious. Routine words and melody blending limits its chances. Kenny renders in his high-pitched groove while Sy Oliver orch lends a suitable backing.

Jilla Webb: "My Baby's Arms"-"The Love In Your Eyes" (M-G-M). M-G-M has latched on to a hot platter property in warbler Jilla Webb. On her debut disk, Miss Webb displays an effective song-selling style that earmarks her as a potent entry. She's a class stylist who has a winning way with a lyric. Although the tunes on the preem platter lack the excitement necessary for sock impact in today's market, Miss Webb's standout treatment on each should get them jock and juke spins and lift the platter into the mid-hit bracket. "My Baby's Arms" will have an easier time breaking through. LeRoy Holmes backs tastefully.

Jeri Southern: "Forgive and Forget"-"The Ruby and the Pearl" (Decca). The intimate styling of Jeri Southern is given a class showcasing in "Forgive and Forget." Miss Southern, who has been lingering in the mid-hit class with past waxings, impresses again that she's a potent platter entry who's due for a big one. Her "Forgive and Forget" slice may have hit the market too late to wind up in the big money. It'll get plenty of spins, however. The Oriental flavored, "The Ruby and the Pearl," similarly shows her off in top form.

Platter Pointers

Richard Hayes has a clicko slice in the oldie, "Forgetting You" (Mercury) . . . Stan Kenton gets across an interesting interpretation of "Taboo" on the Capitol label . . . The Four Tunes' slice of "Let's Give Love Another Chance" for Victor should get plenty of action . . . Dick Lee scores again with "Cuban Love Song" on the indie Essex label . . . Sue Evan impresses on "Weep, Weep, Weeping Willow" (Cadilac) . . . Russ Morgan has a nifty side in "Strolling Down Lover's Lane" (Decca) . . . Ray Anthony's version of "Bunny Hop" on Capitol rates spins . . . Edna McGriff has a solid workover of "My Favorite Song" on the Jubilee label.

Standout folk, western, religious, blues, rhythm, etc.: Sister Rosetta Tharpe, "When I First Saw the Lord" (Decca) . . . Ben Webster Orch, "King's Riff" (Mercury) . . . Oscar Peterson, "How High the Moon" (Mercury) . . . The Mountain Singers, "Let the Healing Waters Move" (Coral) . . . Yuffodas Bros., "Cum-Si-My" (Kem) . . . Hank Penny, "Two Timin' Mama" (King) . . . Bill Davis Trio, "Ooh-Ah-De-De-De" (Okeh) . . . George Wallington Trio, "Love Beat" (Prestige) . . . Beryl Booker Trio, "Love Is the Thing" (Mercury) . . . Little Esther-Bobby Nunn, "Saturday Night Daddy" (Federal).

RIAA's One-Week Hartford Disk Fete Clicking With Top Artists' Backing

Hartford, Sept. 30.

Marking the 75th anniversary of the invention of the phonograph by Thomas A. Edison, the Greater Hartford Record Festival got underway today (Tues.) with an educational seminar at the Bushnell Memorial. Present were supervisors of music of Hartford County and school principals. On a panel for the discussion of varied phases of music were Hecky Krasno (Columbia); Ben Deutchman (Young Peoples Records); Frank Luther (Decca), and Warren S. Freeman (Record Industry Assn. of America).

The festival, the first of a proposed 20 nationwide if the Hartford sendoff is successful, is aiming to increase the purchase of turntables and records. It is being run here under the sponsorship of the RIAA with the cooperation of local records wholesalers and dealers, with costs being borne by the RIAA.

The roster of the performing artists on the four concerts of the series reads like a who's who of the record business. It has been described as "the greatest collection of famous recording talent in one city in a single week."

The program for the week reads: Tuesday (tonight)—Artists Night—Leroy Anderson, Jane Froman, Andre Kostelanetz, Whittemore & Loew. Backing up the artists will be the Hartford Symphony Orchestra.

Wednesday (Folk Music Night) has the Jaworski Polka Band, Pee Wee King, Redd Stewart, Neal Burris and Carson Robison as talent.

Friday (Popular Music Night)

Decca's Socko 250G on Oldies

In another display of the power of old catalog numbers, Decca Records is currently hitting a socko selling pace on its recently issued "Curtain Call" series. Issued both as singles and in album form, the initial release of 16 sides has already grossed over $250,000 for the diskery, representing 500,000 single-platter sales.

Demand for the "Curtain Call" series covers a package of old sides by Bing Crosby, Eddie Cantor, the Andrews Sisters, Jimmy Durante with Eddie Jackson, Mills Bros., Ink Spots, Sophie Tucker and Ted Lewis. Most of these were cut out of the Decca catalog many years ago and current sales represent an accumulated demand.

Series has gone over particularly well with disk jockeys, many of whom have allotted their full program time to airing the 16 sides.

Middleman, Pitt Maestro, Quits Music Biz Again

Pittsburgh, Sept. 30.

Herman Middleman, veteran Pittsburgh maestro and piano player, is quitting music again—for the second time in less than a year—but this time it's for keeps. He's taking over an appliance store operated by his brother in nearby Coraopolis, and is only staying on at the Carousel until he learns the ins and outs of the business. Last winter Middleman quit the keyboard and the Carousel to join managerial staff of Dinner Key Terrace Restaurant in Miami, owned by his brothers-in-law Jackie, Sol and Bill Heller, who also operate the Carousel.

When he pulls out some time in October, he'll be replaced as the Carousel leader by Ralph DeStephano, trumpet player, and Joe Lescak, Middleman's previous replacement at the piano, goes back in the 88s.

M-G-M Preps Soundtrack Set on 'Stars & Stripes' Pic

M-G-M Records, which had been confining its soundtrack album releases to Metro product, broadens its orbit next month with the release of a soundtrack album of the 20th-Fox pic, "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Album will feature martial music penned by John Philip Sousa, whom the pic biographies. The 20th-Fox Studio Orch is conducted by Alfred Newman.

Col's All-Out For 45 EP's

After a tentative start, Columbia Records is going all out in its adoption of the new 45 rpm "extended play" disks. Diskery has scrapped its initial announcement, made last week, that the EP's would be limited to pop album sets and has now decided to release the new-styled platters in both single and album form, and for both the pop and longhair field.

Initial release for the EP's will cover 50 platters, comprising most of the diskery's current release in the pop album field and some of the shorter classical selections. The EP's play up to eight minutes a side and will sell competitively with Victor disks at $1.40 and $1.50 for pops and classical, respectively.

Col's wholesale move into the EP field was dictated by the favorable response accorded Victor's EP line on the retailer and consumer level. The longer-playing 45's have been selling fast and have provided an additional boost to the 45 rpm system. Mercury Records also is issuing the 45 EP's as a result of Victor's initial click with the new platters.

PUZZLING SYSTEM OF NUMBERING RECORDS

System of record numbering used in early phono days is baffling to anyone without inside info.

When Victor first brought out 10-inch, single-faced platters in 1901 they were called Monarch Records and numbered beginning with 3,000. After several hundred had been issued, company decided to start over and begin with No. 1. Many of 3,000 series were renumbered, and some surviving specimens have a new low number stuck on over the old. New labels were adopted and all 3,000 numbers were dropped. When platter No. 2,999 was reached in due numerical order, a jump was made to 4,000. So the fact is that records numbered in the 3,000s are older than those tagged 1, 2, 3, etc., but who would suspect it without help?

Columbia began numbering disks from 1 on, but didn't use any 4,000 numbers—unless they were reserved for some special foreign language series.

And when Edison turned out wax cylinders around 1894, the spoken announcement at the beginning included the record number. A new process of recording began in 1896 and the numbering system was changed. In the beginning, blocks of numbers were reserved for certain categories—No. 1 to 500 were for band records; 501 to 1,000 for orchestras; popular singers had their individual blocks, etc. This system soon proved awkward, and after the numbers had climbed into the 7,000s it was abandoned for a straight numerical listing. Not more than half the "reserved" numbers were ever used.

BUT STILL OFF FROM '30 BOOM

Although the band biz is in a healthier position than it has been in years, bandmen, including orch leaders and agency staffers agree that it's far off from the boom period of the 1930s. None of them expect the biz to reach the peak hit during the heyday years of the '30s but they point out that this year the bands have been pulling better than ever before and the majority of ballroom operators and orchs will wind up in the black. As one band manager put it: "As long as the ops and orchs can show a profit, the dance band business will continue."

Such name bands as Ralph Flanagan continue to break into percentages on their one-nite stands around the country. Flanagan, who's currently touring the midwest, is racking up bigger grosses than he did at the same spots two years ago. In the past couple of weeks Flanagan has beat his mark in such representative midwestern cities as Omaha, Milwaukee, Lincoln and Kansas City. Such other travelling bands as Buddy Morrow, Billy May, Ray Anthony and Tex Beneke are showing the same upbeat in their b.o. draw. Veteran name leaders as Guy Lombardo, who launched a longrun engagement, his 23d, at the Hotel Roosevelt, N.Y., Monday (29); Vaughn Monroe, currently on a location stand at the Hotel Waldorf-

M-G-M Forms New Lion Label For Low-Price Field

Latching on to the increased demand for long play disks, M-G-M Records has formed a subsid, Lion Records, in which a low price 33⅓ rpm line will be released. The Lion label, which will cover the leading pop tunes of the day in dance tempo with a minimum of vocals, will be peddled for $1.77.

Artists and repertoire chores for Lion will be headed up by Harry Meyerson, who holds the same post with the parent firm. It's not been decided yet whether Lion will ink its own orch pactees and plans for future releases now include only regular M-G-M artists. Initial Lion LP platter, which hits the market this week, was cut by the Tommy Tucker orch. The platter includes eight current hits. A regular releasing schedule has not been decided upon either.

Dealers handling the Lion line will receive the same 5% return privilege offered by M-G-M. A 2% cash discount also will apply to their purchase. The Lion disk, incidentally, will reverse the color pattern of the M-G-M platter by using a yellow disk and a black label.

The Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller), which is the publishing wing of the Metro and 20th-Fox pic companies, incidentally, launched a publishing subsid, Lion Music, last year. Firm has been temporarily deactivated.

Resort Hotel Loses To Mayfair on Royalty

Mayfair Music, an E. H. Morris Music subsid, was awarded $409 in N. Y. Federal Court last week in a suit against Leo Fleischer, operator of a Parksville, N. Y., hotel. Suit involved alleged infringement by Fleischer on Mayfair's tune, "I'll Walk Alone," which was assertedly played in the hotel several times without a license.

Fleischer failed to appear and answer the action. The $409 covers $250 for unlawful usage of the tune, $100 for attorney fees and $59 costs.

BMI Preps Crackdown on Ballrooms Playing Its Tunes Without Licenses

Switch Bernie Miller To RCA Disk Promotion

In a reshuffle of RCA Victor's promotion department following Al Miller's appointment as Coast recording chief, Bernie Miller, publicity manager for RCA Victor products, has been switched to the disk division as promotional manager. Miller takes over the spot vacated by Bob McCluskey, who has been named sales manager for the folk, western and blues and rhythm departments under Steve Sholes.

Al Miller, who formerly held McCluskey's present spot, stepped into his new spot on the Coast with Henri Rene coming east as assistant to Dave Kapp, pop artists and repertoire chief. Miller's publicity job is being absorbed by the rest of the Victor publicity department. Both Millers are not related.

H. M. Spitzer Pub Firms Dissolved

Publishing firms operated by Henry M. Spitzer, who committed suicide last week, have discontinued operation and will be deactivated. Move was decided after huddles between Spitzer's widow and attorney Lee V. Eastman. Companies which Spitzer had been operating at the time of his death were Spitzer Songs (BMI) and Henry Spitzer Music (ASCAP). The Warock and Vogue catalogs, with which Spitzer went into business in 1948, had been sold a few years ago.

In an unprecedented move, Broadcast Music, Inc., stepped in this week with a hefty compensation outlay for the firm's employees. Receiving back salaries and severance pay will be Elmore White, general professional manager; Murray Wolfe, Coast rep; Marie Manoville, general manager, and Sid Seidenberg, accountant.

BMI also donated $1,000 to the schooling of Spitzer's 16-year-old son, Michael, who is attending a boarding school in Tucson. Publisher E. H. (Buddy) Morris and Manie Sacks, RCA veepee, are prepping plans for a fund for the boy.

EDISON'S 'TELEPHONE BOOTH' RECORDING

Thomas A. Edison, never satisfied with recording methods, was always making experiments. Object of many of his trial-and-error methods was his favorite singer, Walter Van Brunt, tenor who later changed his name to Scanlan when he began to sing lead roles in Irish musicomedies. Today, Scanlan is a program director at ABC.

Edison decided singers might do better recording undisturbed by sound of orchestral accmpaniment. So he built a glass-enclosed "cage" that looked something like a telephone booth, connected a recording horn and put Van Brunt to singing. Legend has it that he almost died from high humidity and lack of ventilation, while doing his best to keep in musical step with orchestra some distance away. Nobody was any happier than Van Brunt when the experiment failed to click.

Biggest selling Edison record was Van Brunt's rendition of "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen" —Edison's favorite song. Nearly everybody who acquired an Edison Diamond Disk instrument took one of the platters when the dealer remarked: "Mr. Edison considers this the finest record he has ever made." Van Brunt (Scanlan) says he made at least 15 master recordings of "Kathleen" through the years to get in improved orchestration or for some other reason that occurred to the inventor.

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Suits may engulf the midwest ballroom operators who permit the playing of Broadcast Music, Inc., tunes without benefit of BMI license. "Either these operators take out BMI licenses or they will stop playing our music," a top BMI official told VARIETY at the annual convention of the National Ballroom Operators' Assn.

In preparation for this wholesale court action, BMI for some time in the past has been logging tunes played in non-licensed spots, both by in-person checkers and via tape recorders. This checking will be stepped up and expanded, and the BMI exec said that each case of infringement will go to court as fast as evidence is obtained.

NBOA and the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers reached a pre-convention accord for a blanket license, at essentially the same fee asked by BMI, which has been seeking such an agreement for the past five years. Some of the NBOA members, of course, are BMI licensees, but probably not a majority (NBOA refuses to reveal its membership). BMI reports the east and west coast spots are almost 100% licensed, as are the ballrooms in the Chicago area. However, it's indigenous to the rest of the midwest that a great percentage of the ballrooms do not have BMI permits.

In an attempt to relieve themselves of liability for copyright infringements, some midwest operators rubber-stamp an agreement on the band's contract, making the leader responsible for any infringements on non-licensed tunes. Other ops attach a rider to the leader's contract for the date, with the same liability clause. Legalites in the music field feel this responsibility clause would not stand up in court, although it's never undergone a test.

However, in accepting a contract containing the responsibility clause, the bandleader in acting in direct

ASCAP-Ballroom Contract Near

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Formal ASCAP-NBOA contract signing looks certain for late today (Tues.) when music licensing committee of National Ballroom Operators Assn. and American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers are scheduled to huddle on ASCAP proposals.

One proposal reportedly is based upon percentage of boxoffice receipts, the other upon percentage of ballroom's music payroll. Latter basis is similar to that offered by Broadcast Music, Inc.

Arriving here today for meeting are ASCAP's sales manager Jules Collins and attorney I. T. Cohen. NBOA will be repped by Tom Roberts, Tom Archer, Ken Moore and Herb Martinka.

Lombardo Playing Again For Yanks at World Series

Along with the N. Y. Yankees baseball club, Guy Lombardo is playing at the Yankee Stadium for the World Series for the fourth consecutive year. Lombardo is giving an hour-long, pre-game concert with his orch.

As in past years, it's a cuffo stint, with the bandleader paying the musicians out of his own pocket. The Yankees, incidentally, have not lost a World Series since Lombardo began giving his pregame concerts. Series opens today (Wed.) at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, against the Brooklyn Dodgers.

RCA Victor staffers threw a cocktail party for Dave Finn in Camden, N. J., last Wednesday (17) to make his taking over of the sales manager spot for the Victor Custom Records division.

Wallichs Abroad

Glenn Wallichs, president of Capitol Records, flew to Paris over the weekend with his wife for a six weeks' survey of the foreign situation.

He is being met by the company's foreign manager and will motor from France to the Norse countries and England.

RIAA

lists the following: Toni Arden, Eileen Barton, Tony Bavaar, Stan Freeman, Benny Goodman, Bill Hayes, Bill Kenny, Cindy Lord, Mitch Miller, Les Paul & Mary Ford, Fran Warren and Hugo Winterhalter.

Saturday (Children's Program) will feature Bozo the Clown, Tom Glazer, Frank Luther and the Baird Puppets.

The Bushnell, where the festival is being headquartered, seats some 3,300. Accoustically it is bad, but with a roster such as is contained on the four-part program, it's doubtful whether there will be many beefs on that score. Organization and promotion of the festival was slow in getting underway with the resultant that there was virtually no sale of ducats all of last week. However a weekend demand for seats for the first and third nights of the series indicated a sellout for those affairs.

To hypo sales for the Folk Music Night, the seven Hartford records distributors are underwriting half the ducat costs of the first 1,000 tickets sold for that event. In addition, the distributors are donating as many folk records as there are seats in the house. Which means that each payee will receive a record. Admish prices for the first three concerts range from $1.00 to $3.50. The kiddies show is tabbed at a quarter.

As part of the promotion for the festival, the RIAA has donated to the Hartford Public Library its choice of any records it desires from the catalog of its members. No stipulations were made on the amount or type chosen by the library.

Although no individual credits were to be given for participation in the show, Columbia pre-released an Andre Kostelanetz album tagged "Stardust" and advertised its sale in local stores. The nine song album was preemed over WCCC today. Ad tie in was made to Kostelanetz appearance here.

Radio Tieup

An RIAA radio tieup had WTIC today airing a world premiere of a proposed musical "Tom Sawyer" by Frank Luther. This was a good promotion bit as Mark Twain once lived here and local claimants say he wrote Tom Sawyer while in residence.

Tying this festival into a package was no easy job for the RIAA, with plenty of kudos due to the various participating officials. Literally speaking, stars are coming here from various sections of the world. Kostelanetz flew here from Switzerland. From London, Les Paul and Mary Ford cut short a vacation and planed here. Jane Froman cut short a Florida vacation for her presentation. Benny Goodman cancelled a series of personal appearances and the Pee Wee King Band is flying in from Louisville, Ky.

Lt. Gov. Edward N. Allen is honorary chairman of the event. An odd fact here is that he is the owner of one of the city's largest department stores which has no record department. All profits—if any—of the festival are to go to several Hartford charitable funds.

Despite a slow getaway, the festival got plenty of story and picture space by the two local papers, the Hartford Times and Hartford Courant in the few days preceding the event. Some 43 record companies are backing the event via the RIAA.

Bulk of groundwork was laid by Joe Martin, promotion chief of the RIAA; Dr. Warren S. Freeman, ex-music dean of Boston Univ.; and Jim Smith, local publicist. Aiding and abetting were Dick Link (Capitol), Irv Townsend (Col. ad director), Art Schwartz (also Col), John Trifero (RCA Victor) and John Griffin, RIAA exec director.

Cadillac Pacts Russo

Tony Russo, former Sammy Kaye orch vocalist, has been pacted as a solo singer by Cadillac Records, indie label.

Russo's initial sides will hit the market this week.

Artists' Pub Firms Hit By Coverage Nix

Although an increasing number of disk artists have stepped into the publishing field via their own pubbery setups during the past few years, firms have had small impact on Tin Pan Alley activities. Recent withdrawal of the Dinah Shore firm, Cosmic Music, from the pop field points up precarious position most of the artist-owned pubs are in. Cosmic deactivated its professional pop department to concentrate on adding special material, generally songs cut by Miss Shore for RCA Victor, to its catalog.

Move was made because of the growing difficulty encountered by professional men a artist-owned firms to place their tunes with rival diskeries. The professional men point out that they've got two strikes against them before they walk into a rival record company with the pub-artists tune. The artists and repertoire toppers usually ask if the tune was cut by the artist for his or her label and if not, wasn't the tune good enough? If the artist had cut the tune, the a. & r. men hold back on selecting it, too, because they claim they don't want to buck the artist's recording with another version. Getting a pub-artists tune wide diskery coverage has become a virtual impossibility and most of them have decided to try develop it into a winner via their own waxings only.

Most of the pub-artists are realizing the two-edged sword quality of their operation and are limiting the selection of material which they'll publish to songs suited to their styling.

Among the top diskers who are continuing to operate in the pop field with their own firms are Perry Como, Vic Damone, Frankie Laine, Andrews Sisters and Sammy Kaye.

Monaco Widow Sues Co. For 20G on Royalties

Virginia Monaco Helvoight, widow of songwriter James V. Monaco, filed suit for $20,000 in N. Y. Federal Court last week against Broadway Music, claiming that the publishing firm failed to pay her royalties on the renewal rights to tunes written by her husband in collaboration with Joe McCarthy in 1913-14.

Complaint alleges that Broadway paid royalties from 1942 to 1950, after McCarthy insisted on payment in return for the renewal rights. Plaintiff's brief says that Broadway Music is claiming Monaco relinquished his rights to royalties by virtue of certain signed agreements.

BMI Preps

violation of the American Federation of Musicians' constitution, which prohibits AFM members from paying license fees or "assuming or attempting to assume responsibilities for royalties, fees, damage suits, or other claims arising from playing of copyright compositions."

BMI feels the operators are short-sighted in not accepting the proposition of ½ of 1% of the first $50,000 spent on the music payroll, and ¼ of 1% of payroll above 1%; with a minimum annual payment of $40, and a maximum of $750. It's pointed out that the Federal Copyright Law of 1909 calls for a minimum penalty of $250 for each infringement, with maximum damages not to exceed $5,000. BMI cites a St. Louis hotel which was tapped $1,500 plus court costs for copyright violations, and that sum would have paid the spot's BMI license for about five years.

Also, BMI is tub-thumping this theme song at the convention: the average bandleader's book on a one-nighter tour is better than 60% BMI music—and "how can any location hope for continued boxoffice if the band is forced to ignore the top hits of the day?"

Inside Orchestras—Music

As much worry about his physical welfare as the economic setbacks figured in vet music man Henry M. Spitzer's suicide last week. It is ironic that, on the financial phase, had he held out he might have been succored on two fronts. His ex-associates, Edwin H. (Buddy) Morris, and the Dreyfuses (Chappell) both had plans for Spitzer. In fact, had Louis Dreyfus, who heads the Chappell interests in England, not been delayed by illness it might have been a different story. He was slated to make one of his frequent flying visits to visit his brother Max, who heads the American music interests of the international publishers. He is still delayed by illness in London.

"Recording Session," new stanza on WNEW, N. Y., is paying off via promotion it's receiving from diskeries. RCA and Columbia are distributing streamers to their dealers touting the show, which brings on performers and artists-and-repertory execs of the recording firms to tell the stories behind hit platters. WNEW promotion chief Ken Klein is working with the wax houses on other point-of-sale promotions.

Talent-wise, program director Bill Kaland has garnered Perry Como, Rosemary Clooney and Louis Armstrong as cuffo guests in the first three weeks, along with such a.&r. toppers as Columbia's Mitch Miller.

Several music men have been displaying an unusual naivete during the past week re the VARIETY story on the Life Music firm. Yarn listed number of songs and number of airtime plugs firm has been able to line up, but omitted detailing the means by which this end had been achieved figuring that you don't have to draw pictures for the hep music trade. Fact that none of the air-plugged tunes listed received diskery coverage needed no further explanation.

Johnnie Standley etching of "It's In The Book," which broke through in the south and west several weeks ago via the Magnolia label, has been picked up for general distribution by Capitol Records. Cap bought the master from orch leader Horace Heidt, who owns the label. Magnolia had been dormant for the past couple of years. Heidt reactivated the diskery several months ago to cut the Standley platter. Heidt also supplied the orch backing on the disk.

Further pointing up the lengths to which a disk artist will go to get disk jockey spins for his platter, is John Arcesi's current hypo for his Capitol Records etching of "Wild Honey." Last week 300 deejays around the country received the platter and a jar of wild honey which, according to Arcesi, was found by him during a trek through the Colorado Rockies.

Leeds Music has come up with a new tune, "Vote," by Stan Myers, which it will use as a public service number in the weeks preceding the November elections. Tune has already been set on several commercial shows, and one of the major networks is considering its use for the station breaks in place of the straight get-out-and-vote announcements.

Decca is giving a major push to Peggy Lee's latest side for Decca, "Sans Souci," her own composition written in collaboration with Decca's Coast recording chief, Sonny Burke. Diskery hopes the tune will repeat the click of an earlier cleffing efort by Miss Lee, "Manana."

What Became of Kruesi, Who Built First Phono?

Nearly everyone who knows anything about the platter biz has heard that one of Edison's mechanics, John Kruesi, constructed the first phono from a rough sketch drawn up by inventor. But hardly anybody seems to know what happened afterwards to Kruesi.

The Swiss-born machinist remained with Edison and became one of his partners in developing the electric light. In 1886, when the Edison machine works were removed to Schenectady, N. Y., Kruesi went there as assistant general manager under Samuel Insull. When General Electric was formed in 1892, Kruesi became general manager. When he died in February, 1899, he was General Electric's chief mechanical engineer.

Kruesi came to this country in 1870. In June, 1872, when Edison was making Gold and Stock Exchange telegraph instruments in a Newark shop, Kruesi joined him and was one of the first Edison workmen to be transferred from commercial to experimental work.

Longhair Disk Review

Beethoven: Symphony No. 9 in D Minor. NBC Symphony Orchestra under Arturo Toscanini, with Eileen Farrell, Nan Merriman, Jan Peerce, Norman Scott, Robert Shaw Chorale (RCA Victor, 2 LPs, $11.14).

In over 50 years of conducting, Arturo Toscanini has never permitted a recording of Beethoven's Ninth ("Choral") Symphony (and he has made several, with some firstrate orchestras) to be released. A strict perfectionist, he's been held back by unsatisfactory matters (usually only to him) of tone, balance, shadings, dynamics or a dozen lesser problems. Finally the maestro has okayed this NBC Symphony version, and no wonder. Well worth the long wait, it's a lulu. This album immediately takes its place as the definitive recorded version of a gigantic, tremendously complex work.

The last and greatest of Beethoven's symphonies, composed by an inwardly tortured soul long deaf, it is a massive musical statement on the joys and problems of human life, with its unusual, choral finale a powerful cry for human brotherhood. Its deep emotional content, its sharp dramatic impact, are captured admirably in this recording. What stands out, above all, is the clarity of the reading, never muddled, mushy or sentimental, but brisk and incisive. Performance throughout has steady vigor and drive, while the intricate finale, with chorus and orchestra interlacing, with solo voices and instruments competing, is handled with astonishing discipline for highly expressive results.

The choral movement, based on Schiller's "Ode to Joy," is sung in German. Of the soloists Jan Peerce and Eileen Farrell are standout, with Norman Scott and Nan Merriman as able assists in a harshly difficult score. The Robert Shaw Chorale does meritorious work with some of the most inconsiderate of measures ever written by a deaf man for the human voice. The maestro, with his virtuoso NBC symph, wraps it all up with consummate genius for a notable waxing.

Fourth side of the LPs presents Toscy and the NBC crew in a recording of Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 in C. The maestro's version doesn't match the majestic quality of his Ninth, being a little precise and carefully-studied instead of buoyant and fancy free, but it's authoritative and meritorious nevertheless. Bron.

Funes Named Peer V.P.

Dr. Hugo M. Funes was upped to veepee in charge of Latin-American operations at Peer International last week. Dr. Funes, who'll headquarter in Buenos Aires, will set up branch offices in several South American countries. Peer already is repped in nine countries there.

Dr. Funes was with Peer for seven years. He's expected to leave for his new headquarters during the latter part of the week.

Band Reviews

WARNEY RUHL ORCH (8)
With Elaine Powell
Hotel Muehlebach, Kansas City

Current stand in the Terrace Grill of the Muehlebach is the fourth in recent years for Warney Ruhl, and as in past engagements he brings in a very able package of music and vocalists.

Musical output is hotel tenor style, with an instrumentation of three reeds, trumpet, piano, drums and string bass. Accent is on dansable rhythms, crew giving a wide variety as it intermixes very new pops, standards, waltz numbers, Latins, medleys and novelties, with patrons making most of the offerings and keeping the floor busy throughout the evening.

Lively pace is further supported by a wealth of vocal talent which Ruhl has among the crew and in featured singer, Elaine Powell. Blonde songstress is new to the game, but has an individual style which she projects nicely. In the way of male vocals Ruhl calls on Chuck Johnson, drummer, for baritone ballads; Ed Lucas, bassman, for livelier tunes; Bob Edwards, reed section, for rhythm work; and Jack Williams, reed, for tenor pops. Johnson and Williams combine with Elaine Powell in the "Ruhltones" trio, a capable combo.

During three-week stand here orch is doing a twice-nightly floor show, showing its singers and instrumentalists to best advantage. Show is the occasion for several novelty numbers, a Dixieland opener, a novelty pantomime done by the entire crew and a parody on "Trees," also by the entire outfit. Midway in the show Miss Powell does "Almost Like Being in Love" for strong hand and encores with "Mean To Me." Chuck Johnson has a solo entry on "Old Man River," and at the keyboard Vina Ruhl has her inning for a catchy "Cumina." Session ends with orch members demonstrating the raspa and drawing the customers on floor to sample the dance and stay for regular terp session. Twenty-minute show is well paced throughout. Quin.

TEX BENEKE ORCH (16)
With Bill Raymond and Joan Kavanaugh
St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco

This crew is a carefully gathered tribe of music makers who are hep exponents of smooth music. Wide range of tonal effects, clever mixing of tunes and a fair share of novelty items are neatly directed to meet the demands of all age sets, with most of emphasis on the lively stuff to keep the younger element happy. Decidedly maintaining the Glenn Miller slant there is no doubt but that Beneke succeeds in great measure in carrying on that tradition.

Hitting this room, new for him, his troupe played on the loud side as a starter but it was evident that toning down to allow for the acoustics was in the offing. Over-emphasis of the brass, can create a considerable din.

Beneke's four trumpets, four trombones, five saxes, bass, drums and piano are a well integrated unit. It's good dance music and good listening to for the sitters-outer. The vocalists meet all trains with Joan Kavanaugh a good looker into the bargain. Definitely a tops outfit. Ted.

Band Biz

Astoria, N.Y., and Sammy Kaye also continue to attract the crowds.

A few ballroom ops, however, contend that the big orchs have lost their drawing power and have switched to booking local crews or semi-name bands with a top disk artist as the marquee hypo. The Hollywood Palladium and Frank Dailey's Meadowbrook, Cedar Grove, N. J., have been deemphasizing name bands and are counting on the disk artists to pull them out of the red. Several agency men maintain that these spots have switched to solo wax stars because they won't pay the name orch's price. Meadowbrook, for example, is offering most of the name leaders $2,500 guarantee against 27½% of the gross. A lot of orchs have turned down dates there figuring it's more profitable to stick to the road where the price is generally $1,500 vs. 60% of the gross on one-nite stands.

On the other hand, ops like Bill Levine of the Rustic Cabin, Englewood Cliffs, N. J., is moving deeper into a name band admitting that the big bands have built a steady clientele for his spot. Majority of ops around the country are following Levine's booking pattern especially in weekend dates. According to the agencies, the biggest problem is trying to convince the ops to spread out their dance dates throughout the week so that they can avoid a booking scramble. Ops, however, feel that the dance biz is strictly a weekend biz and for the most part refuse to gamble a guarantee on a midweek date.

Another problem confronting agencies is the brushoff given their new orch properties by the ballroom ops. "The only way the band biz can continue growing," one agency man said, "is to develop young orchs, but the ops just want names and they won't play ball with us." Several ops, however, complain that the agencies have been forcing them to play ball via the block booking practice which gives them a name orch only if they also pact a young band for another date. The tyro orchs come cheap and generally have been driving their dates into the black. Nevertheless, they are still the big bone of contention between operators and agencies.

Big difficulty in getting the band biz back to the level of the '30s is lack of personality leaders and players. When Goodman, Miller, Shaw and the Dorseys were the b.o. draws, the teenagers and terpsters were violently partisan. Excitement generated by these orchs via fan clubs, "battle of the bands," etc., paid off in big receipts. Today the fan clubs virtually have become the personal property of disk singers and the band-battle has switched to the "battle of the baritones." Trade, however, is counting on such new band names as Sauter-Finegan, Art Lowry and the year-old Billy May crew to revive the interest.

AGVA Members Petition Union to Kill Ban on Deejay Cuffos; Biz Needs Hypo

Members of the American Guild of Variety Artists are originating petitions asking the union to remove the ban on cuffo appearances on cafe-emanated disk-jockey shows. Movement has been started to rescind the ruling which went into effect earlier this year as a means of permitting performers to publicize themselves.

It's planned to ask the national board to act on the petitions at its board meeting starting next Wednesday (8) in New York.

The disk-jockey rule has been one of the most controversial in the history of the union. There have been few rulings by the union which caused as much excitement. With enactment of the ruling, deejay had to pay clubdate minimums in order to interview a performer, even if he didn't do his act. Thus, a singer had to be paid even if he didn't sing, or a comedian, even if he stuck to politics or similar subjects, had to present a bill, if the show emanated in a cafe.

Results of this petition will be watched carefully in all segments of the trade. Should the board act on this repealer, then it's anticipated that another movement will start asking the rescinding of legislation banning guest nights in cafes, unless performers are given full salary.

Feeling behind the disk-jockey repeal movement is that the cafe biz is at an ebb point at this time. Everything possible must be done to "glamorize" the industry and get people to go out so that act employment could rise. It's probable that the same line of thought will be applied to repeal of the guest-night ban.

M&L's Syracuse 1st

Syracuse, Sept. 30.

Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis will make their local debut Oct. 31 at the Syracuse War Memorial.

The duo's show will include songstress Kitty Kallen and Dick Stabile's orch.

'Holiday' Icer Neat 55G As K. C. Aud. Teeoffer

Kansas City, Sept. 30.

Opening road attraction of the local season was "Holiday on Ice" playing a six-day stand in the Municipal Auditorium closing yesterday (Mon.). Third time for the show in here and likely to be the only K.C. icer of the year, it garnered a good $55,000 in seven performances with house scaled to $3.

Show got off to a good start Wednesday night (24) with Ararat Shrine as sponsor, and drew good press notices. Sturdy pace continued throughout the six days.

Mpls. New Shake A Hawaiian Kick

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Curly's, one of the few remaining niteries here and one of town's largest, is being sold to local business man, Tom Hastings. He plans to convert it into an Hawaiian-style restaurant, eliminating the present type of entertainment.

Cafe's present owner acquired it a few months ago when it ran afoul of the law for selling liquor after hours.

One of the city's two leading supper clubs, the Hotel Nicollet Minnesota Terrace, is being turned into a convention ballroom but, while abandoning floor entertainment as a steady and regular diet, will bring in five or six name performers from time to time if and when they're available.

The extent to which the Hawaiian bug has bitten here is reflected in fact that the Curly plans follow those announced by the Hotel Nicollet regarding the launching of a Don the Beachcomber replica to replace the Terrace.

'Ice Follies' Fat 384G, L.A.

Hollywood, Sept. 30.

The Shipstads & Johnson "Ice Follies" closed a 28-day stand at the Pan Pacific Auditorium, Los Angeles, with a socko $384,000.

Gross was somewhat under last year's figure because of rescaling of house. However, total take represents an increased attendance.

AGVA Offers Deal To Take Noel Sherman Off Its Unfair List

Noel Sherman, producer of "Water Follies," which met with financial difficulties on its recent South American tour, has been offered a deal by the American Guild of Variety Artists whereby he would be taken off the union's unfair list. At a meeting of the N. Y. Branch board, a deal was arrived at whereby Sherman would be permitted to work with AGVA performers if he reimbursed the union's welfare fund to the extent of $3,362, sum which was laid out by AGVA in order to get performers back from South America. In addition, Sherman would have to assume liability for all future claims resulting from the South American trip.

Union held that although "Water Follies" operated under a corporate setup which would legally absolve Sherman as an individual, from any financial claims, Sherman was morally responsible. When "Water Follies" tour folded, the U. S. Dept. of State brought back the performers and AGVA reimbursed the Government from its welfare dept.

Chi Theatre's H.O.'s

Chicago, Sept. 30.

In an unusual action, Nate Platt, Chicago Theatre booker, has retained two acts over from the previous show. Bill Snyder, composer and pianist, stays on, as does the Manhattan Rockets 16-girl line.

Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy headline the Oct. 3 show, Al Martino and Jan Murray share honors on the Oct. 17 bill with Frankie Laine and Nat (King) Cole set to follow.

Miami's Pre-Season Dope Sheet: Pessimism, Optimism, Yes-No Names

By LARRY SOLLOWAY

Miami, Sept. 30.

Winter seasons picture for this pastel playground—now extended via new motel and hotel building all the way to Hollywood (Fla., that is)—finds the cafe situation a mixture of muddlement, pessimism and optimism, with only hotel row seemingly set on policy. The straight niteries among the bigger spots are the most confused, due to legal and lease entanglements, an upsurge of late-hour intimeries, and general apprehension on part of most operators with resultant scaling down in the middle-budget groups.

That there'll be no gambling of any kind except sneak is an accepted fact; thus, bidding at top fees for toppers will be confined to just a few.

Copa on the Hook

Biggest club in the area, Copa City, is currently in litigation, with lock on door, pending applications for receivership upcoming in local courts. This may mean split of the Murray Weinger and Ned Schuyler combo which has run the spot for two seasons. Schuyler ailing, has taken himself out of active nitery operation. Weinger, currently in New York, is reported going ahead on tentative bookings and looks to be inheritor of the 750-seater's reins with "new money" coming in to take up the "claims" angle.

No matter what the legal windup, Copa City will be going this season, though no one at this time can name the date of opening. Which brings up status of the Schuyler Freres' Beachcomber, the former big rival for name bookings. Ed Fielding, who ran the bistro last year under a lease agreement which prevented him from utilizing any name acts in competish with Copa, has not as yet renewed his sublease from the Schuyler interests. If he does not, there is possibility that the original operators (Schuyler & Co.) will take it back

Newark Negro Vauder's Fast Fold; Bond Payoff

The Negro vaude venture at the Newark Opera House, Newark, was shuttered Friday (26) following failure to pay off the cast. American Guild of Variety Artists started shelling out salaries from a bond that had been posted with the union. House operated for one week.

Manhattan Paul was producer of the show. He went in with backing from several sources.

Bailey's 100G Suit Vs. N. J. Riviera

Singer Pearl Bailey last week filed a $100,000 suit against Bill Miller's Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J., charging that the cafe failed to provide her with adequate protection, which, she claims, led to her being beaten by an unknown assailant.

Miss Bailey contends that the nitery failed to police the spot properly. She states that she was followed backstage by an unknown person, knocked to the floor and then beaten and kicked. She was forced to cancel two engagements because of the assault, she declares in her N. Y. Federal Court action.

Incident occurred at the Riviera on Sept. 15, when she and a femme friend visited the cafe. In the lobby, one of a party of 14 assailed her after making an anti-Negro remark. She was escorted backstage by a busboy and after her escort left, one of the party followed her and beat her. A waiter captain, Jack Bruno, who attempted to chase the attacker, was also roughed up.

and again compete with Copa City, leading to top bidding for names.

All of which leads to the Clover Club and owner Jack Goldman's tour around the country seeking the best—with an open checkbook—for his mainland spot. He has already pacted Johnnie Ray, Spike Jones & Co., Billy Gray, Patti Moore & Ben Lessy, Jackie Miles, and is dickering with Rose Marie, Sophie Tucker, Tony Martin and others in the high brackets. One of his prize bookings may be return of Lena Horne for a seasonal date. That he's on first base and going, is obvious in the present situation.

La Rue's, last season's click, has set Los Chavales de Espana for winter run combining dance-show policy. Last year it was straight dine-dance. Ciro's looks to be under Maurice Pollak's direction again. Show idea is not set, though one star plus big orch have been talked about.

Felix Young is building a new swank supper club and will utilize two orchs. Lou Walters reopens the Latin Quarter in December and will adhere to last year's money-making Continental revue idea with new personnel in ranks.

Same Old Stand

The Vagabonds are due to return to their club in December with their former policy of booking newer faces and comedians for their class spot. Martha Raye at her Five O'Clock Club (in November) will also stick to policy of solid novelty acts and young upcoming comics. Set to come back with her are the Kirby Stone quintet and always standard Ben Yost Singers. Both Miss Raye and the Vagabonds are consistent money-makers, based on their draw, with the frenetic comedienne probably the most consistent in-the-black-act working this area.

Along the smaller cafes, Mother Kelly's is skedded to reopen with Pat Morrisey, who was discovered in the spot, plus other new-face acts as well as instrumental groups. Kelly's is reported for sale, but it is a good bet the present owners will be back in operation.

Bill Jordan at his Bar of Music, as per annually, will team with David Elliott as the feature at the Baldwin's, plus a variety group that doesn't cost too much but is clicko with the smarter crowd who flock here.

El Mambo (former Kitty Davis, Old Roumanian, et al.) was a click last summer with a pop price policy and will return same with local fave maestro Freddie Calo and his own Latin revue.

Alan Gale, who almost had his club sold to thrush Gracie Barrie, has decided to return with the show he is currently presenting in Manhattan, beginning in January. Though not presenting a splash production, his tariffs are on same level as the larger rooms with the name shows.

Cushion for Hotels

In best shape is the hotel group which features plush rooms accommodating from 250 up and featuring one or two acts and a top orch. All can afford losses, through absorption in regular hotel operation, marked off to "publicity." Most are worked in tight enough manner to reach a break-even point or short loss through season. They include Sans Souci, Nautilus, Casablanca and for this season, the Saxony.

The Saxony, which has enlarged dining room into a supper club layout allowing for some 350-400, may go all-out for acts such as play New York's better hotel cafes, with a Hildegarde, Edith Piaf, Morton Downey in mind; across the lobby the Shell-I-Mar, a 250-seater, will be devoted exclusively to Latinaddicts. It will be a one-show policy, plus those sumptuous room accommodations in the deal.

Best of the hotel line, including the new ones such as the Algiers, will follow the policy established years ago by the Lord Tarleton, of booking club dates with acts after they've completed runs in straight niteries. Possibility that some of the group (Monte Carlo, Sherry Frontenac, Algiers) may go in for full weeks if competition is too tough.

More & More Smallies

There'll be an upsurge of intimeries built as adjuncts to restaurants and some hotels which are allowed all-night liquor licenses. There's the Brook Club Lounge with Charlie Farrell moving over from the defunct Park Avenue Club (now strictly a restaurant) after eight years. Along with 79th St. causeway (not connected with city authority) there is the Bonfire, Chary's, Cork Club, Harbor Club and other spots building, all using instrumental and solo acts in the $150 to $500 range, depending on draw power.

In the hotel club-date and the aforementioned nitery bracket, it means plenty of work for the smaller acts which, if they click, may wind up in the larger spots once they've established themselves. Most of the booking agencies around the area complain that they cannot get enough talent in this bracket to fill their orders.

For the rest, the recent crackdown by the law on stripperies hasn't held up their operations; the strippers are more careful on amount of adornments taken off. Expected that with season time, all will be forgotten until the lull come spring. As for the "femmic" ideas, they'll be carefully policed, with all the types going in for male attire to keep within bounds.

It adds up to more places operating than ever, but on this trip, with more work for the middle-salary acts and the newer talents with enough potency to attract attention.

Miami La Vie?

A Miami Beach edition of La Vie en Rose, N. Y., is in the works, according to Monte Proser, room's operator. It's known that Julius Gaines, operator of the Casablanca Hotel, Miami Beach, was in New York last week negotiating with Proser to take over the Club Morocco in that hotel on a percentage basis. In addition, Proser stated he's been offered several other rooms.

However, Proser is still studying all propositions. He'd rather take over a nitery operation than a hotel room because earlier curfew in hotel spots cuts down the gross tremendously.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

gins takes no chances. He plants a few in the house that help him off off to better returns.

The Earles (2), good hand-to-handers, show fine tricks and hit some comedy falls for good effect. Betty Carter is under New Acts.

The band is a family affair headed by Duke Hampton, whose name suggests a union of two top names in Negro jazz circles. Crew comprises eight brothers and sisters, a brother-in-law and the rest are good friends. It's an interesting combo. The gals combine in dances, another sings blues and their formations suggest good preparation.

While not a musically ingenious group, with some unprofessional touches, they do present a refreshing facade. Their lack of musical sophistication and rough stage demeanor aren't serious faults at this stage. They are capable instrumentalists, have good arrangements and should get by in most situations. Jose.

Unit Review

Sally Rand Show
(MID-SOUTH FAIR, MEMPHIS)

Memphis, Sept. 24.

Sally Rand, Roland Drayer, Jimmy August, Fred Werner, Sally Rand Girls (11), Henry Rodidger; Sally Rand, producer-director; $1 weekdays, $1.50 Sat.-Sun.

Sally Rand is still boff at the b.o. She's demonstrating this aplenty during her stint at the annual Mid-South Fair, Sept. 18-27. The fan dancing topper is pulling terrif crowds and racked up a rousing record gross of $14,000 for the opening weekend.

And the payoff is that the show is tame enough for grandma and the old folks to take a gander at. The show savvy gal has surrounded herself with a line of 11 girls who are easy on the eyes and handle themselves in topflight fashion.

The layout is loaded with nifty numbers which have all been created and directed by Miss Rand. The costumes and scenery are far above the carnie or tent category. Production could easily hold better than its own in a name house and fare better than par over the applause and b.o. courses.

Neat opening finds a girl trio pouring out clever patter telling the customers that "people no longer are screaming for strip numbers but talent is what the public is after." And talent is liberally sprinkled throughout the 40-minute show. Highlight of the femme routines is the "Manhattan Scene" production by Miss Rand which scores heavily.

The girls are also spotted in "Fan Ballet," which is the builderoo for the star's entry with her fan routine. La Rand still handles her weapons in precision-like fashion and is socko in her grace, showmanship and selling style. She knows her biz—knows her audience and injects a "ladyship" atmosphere into her strip-fan portion. The audience was with her all the way at show caught.

Henry Rodidger, who accomps the entire production on the Hammond, is a show by himself. A one-man pit band, he moves the show along musically without a flaw.

Roland Drayer is spotted as emcee and featured singer, but is much stronger in the latter. He handles his patter sans any punch and occasionally goes aloof. But he bounces back in winning fashion with his pipes. He rocks 'em with his medley of "Oklahoma," and then stops them with "Ireland."

Fred Werner in the deuce spot is okay as a cello performer but weak in the comic role. He wields a neat bow on his cello, which is also loaded with laugh-getting props, but when he milks for applause with his comedy routine, he falls flat. Werner salvages his act with a slick rendition of "Kiss Me." Jimmy August, in a drunk dance and snappy military tap routine in the finale with the entire company, scores easily.

Miss Rand and troupe move on to Dallas for the Texas State Fair (Oct. 4-19). After that, she'll wrap up her show and take a hiatus until next year. Matt.

Peter Kourmpates, 33-year-old aerialist who died in Chatham, N.B., last August after an 80-foot fall, was partnered with his brother, William, in the act known as the Barrett Bros. The brother's name had previously been reported as Paul.

It's Not Illegal To Spike Drinks Mpls. Court Holds

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Local niteries that keep open after liquor hours, to serve food and on Sundays when the sale of any beverage stronger than 3.2 beer is prohibited, are affected by Municipal Judge Tom Bergin holding that a city council ordinance banning "spiking" is illegal.

The 1400 Club, which does the bulk of its business after niteries and other liquor spots are closed, had been raided for allegedly serving ginger ale and other setups and permitting patrons to spike them.

Judge Bergin dismissed the charges against the establishment's co-owner and a waitress. It was the second time in a year and a half that a spiking case has been tossed out of court on a legal technicality. Another judge had ruled the ordinance unconstitutional in a case involving a restaurant without a liquor license.

"Following BOB HOPE at the Palladium is a formidable task for an American comedian, but it did not daunt GEORGIE KAYE tonight.
"Working steadily from the ordinary to the extraordinary, with a calm and assured line of patter, he brought the house down in easy stages."

"His impressions are gems and he comes through to solid hit. His performance is a must and he should quickly be as popular here as he evidently is in his native America."

Limited Partnership Financing Rears Head in Burlesque Via N. J.'s Ex-Keith

Limited partnerships, a major method of legit show financing, has now hit the burlesque field for the first time. The Colony Theatre, Union City, N. J., is now attempting to raise $35,000 to capitalize the operation of that house. It was formerly the B. F. Keith vaude house and until recently was operated as a filmer.

According to the prospectus, general partner will be Harry W. Doniger, who has operated theatres in New York. Sam Steinman, New York flack, will do publicity and advertising. Shares in the setup ranging from one-seventh of 1% to $35,000 for 50% are available. Lowest unit is selling for $100.

Union City is already w.k. as a burley centre because of the Hudson Theatre, which for many years has drawn on New York for a healthy share of its audience. Gotham has been without an operation labelled "burlesque" or "follies" for a decade since the late Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia banned reissue of licenses to burley theatres.

Prospectus claims that operating permit has been assured following completion of stage alterations. It's planned to run two shows daily. House has been leased for 21 years. Rental, it's claimed, is $13,000 annually and outlay of $12,000 is necessary to get the house ready for business. Remainder will be utilized as working capital.

It's claimed that operation calls for $250 weekly rental and $750 for extensive advertising and total cost of doing a show will be less than $5,000. Union agreements require four stagehands and five musicians. Beckman & Pransky will book. Seating capacity is 901. A $1.75 top is planned on a reserved-seat basis.

There has been some pressure for reopening of N. Y. to burlesque. The Theatrical Fact Finding Committee has been working on that situation for more than a year, but no results have been attained as yet. However, the committee is still hopeful that the Gotham coin now going to Union City will stay in New York.

Video Names' 1-Niter Fling

Theatre and nitery operators within a wide radius of New York are hopeful of getting a flock of television names on a one-night basis. Managements have been encouraged by the booking offices to feel that they'll be able to get many headliners for a part of the week.

Patti Page has played some one-nighters between video assignments. Robert Q. Lewis is set for a series of dates, which included Hartford, over the weekend. It's expected that other headliners will be lining up dates to keep them occupied between video sessions.

EX-G.M. COLLIGAN SUES SONJA HENIE FOR 20G

Chicago, Sept. 30.

James J. Colligan, former general manager of the Sonja Henie ice show, has filed a $20,000 suit against Miss Henie in Superior Court here.

Colligan alleges that Miss Henie broke a verbal agreement to keep him as manager until the show ended its run next March. He claims he was fired Sept. 13, and Miss Henie's attorney, Jerry Giesler, said Colligan resigned.

The $20,000 is the amount Colligan would have received from his $600 weekly salary. Show closed its Chicago run Sunday (28).

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Sept. 30.

Dr. Homer McCreary, our house medico who is also head man with the Saranac Lake Rehabilitation Guild, has enlisted the following patients to do leather articles on order for Christmas gifts: Ken Derby, John (IATSE) Streeper, Ted (TV) Brenner, Joe Fenessey, Raymond (Loew) McCarthy and Thomas (Carnival) Lewey.

A bow to Jack Beck, manager of Globe Theatre, Atlantic City, for sending us good old salt water taffy.

Coleman Shirley Houff, Pitt-Roth technician who mastered major surgery, is off to Washington for his first furlough out of the san.

Jean Ellis (Interstate circuit) did her hitch in the observation domicile, took surgery and is now a full-fledged member of the ambulatory department.

Mac Kaufman, piano wiz who has memorized some 5,000 songs, in for a chat with this columnist and arranged for a concert to be given for the gang at an early date.

Colonial Inn, local nitery, has changed hands with Anthony R. Brindis the new operator and manager.

Theresa Loomis (Columbia Pictures) off to Gotham to attend the funeral of her uncle.

Double birthday party was tendered Audrey Lumpkin (IATSE) and this mugg in the main lounge of the VC hospital. It was a surprise classic, with buffet lunch, refreshments, and entertainment by Roberta. Party was sponsored by "We The Patients."

Sugar Ray Saves Cafe From KO

New York's Havana-Madrid, which passed into history last week and became the Club 500, installing a Negro show policy, had about as much misfortune as a nitery can undergo on its preem. Spot on opening night (25) couldn't locate the arranger who had taken all the music to his home. Cafe emissaries declared that they couldn't rouse him from his apartment.

Result was an improvised show that had little sense or form. Bill Bailey, Johnny Hudgins, and the Fontaines (2) went through the motions of their act, but with little satisfaction either from a personal or audience viewpoint. The line, however, couldn't hide the fact that it had looks and okay costumes.

The evening was saved from complete blotto by Sugar Ray Robinson, the fight champ, who aspires to do a dance act in the future. Robinson got on the floor, hosted graciously and persuaded some name performers in the crowd to contribute a few minutes. The American Guild of Variety Artists forbids talent to do their acts for free on nitery floors. So VARIETY isn't blowing the whistle by mentioning names.

CAPPELLA & PATRICIA BACK AFTER 4½ YRS.

Jacques Cappella & Patricia are returning to the U. S. on the Sept. 30 sailing of the Caronia from Europe, after four and a half years on the Continent. Ballroomers have played the Savoy Theatre and Hotel; the Hippodrome, London, as well as dates in the key Continental cities and North Africa.

Duo also played 15 days in Germany during that time.

Eck-Basie-Shearing Unit To Bow in Ft. Wayne Aud.

Fort Wayne, Sept. 30.

First entertainment to be offered in this city's new 10,000-seat War Memorial Coliseum, which was formally dedicated Sunday (28), will be the Billy Eckstein-Count Basie-George Shearing show, skedded Oct. 15. The package is being promoted by John Apt, operator of a local ballroom, who said he plans to present other talent shows later in the new arena.

A full week of programs is on for the dedication week, including a square dance jamboree, free to the public, and an ice skating festival, also cuffo.

A free industrial exhibit is being held in the basement exhibition hall from Sept. 28 to Oct. 2, sponsored by the manufacturers' committee of the Chamber of Commerce.

The 1953 Shrine Circus (Polack Bros.) has been booked for the Coliseum early in February.

Kaye's 5G for S. F. Crix; Big Advance for 2d Run

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

Danny Kaye's special benefit matinee, sponsored by the San Francisco Critics Council on Sunday (21), scored a sock $5,000. The 1,758-seat Curran was scaled to $4.80. The matinee was sandwiched between the afternoon and evening performances.

Kaye wound up his 21-performance stand that night with a record gross of $110,900. Advance sales for repeat two-week engagement starting Oct. 6 are already piling up with expectations that the second run will equal the smash of the previous.

'Opry's' 6G

Richmond, Va., Sept. 30.

First of four "Grand Ole Opry" units scheduled here this season played the 4,865-seat Mosque for two performances on Sunday (21) to a satisfactory gross of $6,000. House was scaled at a $1.90 top and the show was headed by Ernest Tubb, with The Carter Sisters, George Morgan and Little Jimmy Dickens.

Grand Ole Opry units are handled locally by Bill Railey, record shop owner, who has contracted to bring in three more of the hillbilly shows this season.

Rooney Unit for Reno

Mickey Rooney has been signed for the Riverside, Reno, starting Nov. 6 or 13. Rooney heads his own package.

Deal was set by the William Morris Agency.

Holiday On Ice

(MUNICIPAL AUD., K. C.)

Kansas City, Sept. 25.

"Holiday on Ice of 1953," produced and directed by George & Ruth Tyson; associate producer, Dolores Pallet; choreography, Don Arden-Ron Fletcher; costumes, Billy Livingston; music, Paul Summey; musical director, Ben Stabler; lighting, Doug Morris; scenic effects, Ted Meza. At Municipal Auditorium, Kansas City, Sept. 24-29; $3 top.

With Michael Meehan, Joan Hyldoft, Rudy Richards, Jinx Clark, Genevieve Norris, Bob Payne, Leo, Mae & Joan Freisinger, Paul Andre, Flip & Flop with Marvin Shaw, Bill Blocker, Phil Hiser, Bob Saccente, The Stuarts (2), Wayne Thompson, Glamour Icers (24), Ice Squires (16).

New version of "Holiday on Ice" is making a six-day stand here, after a few other midwest dates. It began with a well-loaded house Wednesday night (24), and likely will pull big for its seven performances. Performing on its own 60x125 portable rink, "Holiday" is an elaborate show living up to all the traditions of icers in cast, costumes, music, mounting, staging and spectacle in its 135 minutes.

Six production numbers are sprinkled through the show, beginning with the patriotic "Freedom Is Everybody's Business" which combines precision routines by the entire company with flashing costumes and stirring score. "Undersea Wonderland," closing first part, lives up to its name in reflecting the eerie depths of the sea in its costumes and setting all off with fanciful use of magenta. Blonde Joan Hyldoft carries a featured role ably in this, and sock windup is provided by sea of bubbles which float down from the rigging. Midway in the act, "Jung-Ri-La" provides flash in the fashion of Oriental costuming, has Michael Meehan for the required fancy figure skating and puts the line through unusually vigorous choreography.

Inserted along the way are the manifold specialties and individual performances which have come to earmark the big ice shows. Bob Saccente has a solo bit of leaping, twisting, twirling acrobatics, followed by a fairy tale sequence of "Goldilocks and the Three Pigs," a story in pantomime with recorded dialog and spotted for the juvenile set.

"Where There's Smoke There's" serves as initial comedy entry with Flip & Flop and Marvin Shaw making with the funny business and drawing a good share of laughs as eccentric firemen. Jinx Clark as one of the show's featured lovelies has her own solo inning in "Serenade to a Lovely Lady," a bit well taken. Session by four gals as "Pert Personalities" known by their hats is a lively bit, and segues into solo stint by Bill Blocker doing some ace figure work.

"Clown Jamboree" is the springboard for Leo Freisinger and his speed and jump skating in a make-believe tanbark arena climaxed with his leap through a spiked hoop. Outstanding bit is contributed by Rudy Richards doing an accentuated rhythm terp on blades with a line of eight backing. Acro adagio work in a highly polished version is forte of Genevieve Norris and stalwart Bob Payne. Paul Andre in comedy entry as a gob on blades for the first time raises a big mitt from the house. Stanza winds with the impressive undersea fantasy.

Sixteen members of the first act are followed by 13 in the second. "Dizzy Toon Fantasie" has the line in a production number out of which comes another of Rudy Richards' rhythmic icings and novelty musical effects, with each chorine a part of a huge xylophone and icemen ringing Swiss bells. In "Open Road" Mickey Meehan has a second solo flash to exhibit his finesse at figure and acro work. Sole straight vaude entry of the show is the Shaw twosome on their trampoline, roundly applauded.

Jinx Clark has a second number as "Woman of Distinction" in which she proves tops as femme rhythm stylist. The inevitable waltz interlude is provided by Mae Freisinger and Phil Hiser for the usual strong reception. In "Swan Lake Ballet" Paul Andre assays slapstick, but it comes off lightly. A more entertaining entry is Leo Freisinger and youngster Joan as Tyrolean skaters, their capers being smooth and applause-gathering.

Spectacle is the ingredient for "Springtime in Japan," with generous use of personnel, costumes and lights, and featuring the adagio of the Norris-Payne team. "Calypso Kids" is a repeater from previous show, and deservedly so as Clark & Richards cavort in a most unusual and energetic terp. Flip & Flop come back to lampoon TV wrestling, but register better with their acro skating which follows. Duet figure work of Miss Hyldoft and Meehan is a show highlight with the skillful pair at their best. "R.S.V.P. Cotton Ball" as the finale adds one more spectacle production and trots out the entire personnel.

Pace of the show is zingy except for one or two sequences. All of the necessary ingredients are present in generous amounts, with the possible exception of comedy which scarcely carries its weight in this lineup among the titans of polished figure work, dazzling costumes and a strong and pervading musical score. Admittedly a tough assignment for a blade show, comedy improvement could lift this fine show still higher.

Music is basically provided by a live orch, with Wayne Thompson singing some numbers and Artie Kane in special piano work. This is rounded out with a series of songs and sequences recorded by an eight-voice group and played in combo with the orch. Some dialog sequences likewise are recorded. Out of it all is "Holiday on Ice," a gigantic undertaking generally well done.

Quin.

New Owners to Reopen Boston Latin Quarter

Boston, Sept. 30.

Hub's Latin Quarter, which folded last New Year's Eve, has been leased by owner Michael Redstone to the La Palona Corp., a local group who plan an Oct. 16th opening. Spot will operate as in past with name policy but unlike previous setup, new lessees will bypass cover charge policy, relying strictly on minimum charge, figuring Hub cafe goers resent paying the added admish. Riviera, N. Y., show may move in for preem.

While the headliner for initialer hasn't been set, operators hope to tee off with a staunch lineup to insure fast getaway. While plans are to kick off on a Thursday night, succeeding shows will bow in on Monday. Spot will be managed by Carl Newman, who held the same post during the former regime.

Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J.

Ames Bros. (4), Gene Baylos, Szonys (2), Arden-Fletcher Line (12), Walter Nye and Pupi Campo Orchs; $3.50, $5 minimum.

The seasonal finale at the Riviera doesn't have powerhouse nitery names, but the entertainment values are potent enough to make this show look good at the tape. The Ames Bros. (4), whose Coral diskings have made them a strong item for the younger set, and Gene Baylos constitute the headliners, with the Szonys held over from the last session.

The Ames boys, when caught, stayed on for 45 minutes, which is stretching their stand a bit. Their turns were still going strong at the exit; but, let's face it, it's a lot of time for any act, especially after Baylos took advantage of a warm crowd by staying on longer than regulation length.

Their vocalistics are surefire and commercial. They make a strong impact with an assortment which includes pops and some of the evergreens they've etched. Foursome shows a strong comedic infusion in some of the numbers and do a spot of instrumentalizing to point up others. However, their forte is good individual voices and a blend of harmonics. They reprise "Because," "Clancy" and "Wanna Love You" and hit jackpots with a vocal takeoff on an oldtime vaude turn and another series of vintages. Despite the great variety of their act, their overtime chores gave the illusion of monotony. They were on about 10 minutes too much.

Baylos was on for a long term also, but he was there first—before the show became a sitzkrieg. Baylos gives the impression of being a naturally funny guy. His act is informal and undisciplined. He goes as the spirit moves him, providing real tradey stuff, doubletalk bits, familiar gags and lines that hit the audience sharply. He gets off to a strong mitting.

The Szonys perform their ballroom ballet with delicacy, charm and warmth. This is one of the top teams of its kind around. They are superior dancers with excellent routines and make a strong enough impression to take earned bows.

Walter Nye showbacks and the Pupi Campo orch does the Latin dance turns. The line's two efforts are appreciated.

Boniface Bill Miller has had a generally good season even though he was hit with some bad weekend weather at the start. Biz at this point is tapering off, but as the nights get cooler, the general run of nitery patron isn't hitting the road as frequently. Jose.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 24.

Jean Sablon, Gil Lamb, Andre, Andree & Bonnie (4), Sari, Leon Leonardi, Johnny O'Brien, Christina Carson, Kathryn Duffy Dansations (7), Normandie Boys (3), Al Jahns Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Surrounded by an elaborate layout themeing Gay Paree, Jean Sablon heads up an hour-plus blend of acts and production. Warbler winged into Vegas direct from Paris, and with fine personality knocks down all language barriers to insure top biz for his stay.

Sablon is one of the few male voicers around who doesn't have to resort to a contrived gimmick in order to sell. He has a natural one—his accent which makes the gals purr, and virile appearance which gets okay nod from males. No affectations mar his delivery.

Warmth and know-how are apparent as Sablon chants such w.k.'s as "Autumn Leaves," "C'est Si Bon," "Tranquil," "Le Fiacre," "September Song." Tickles risibilities with a ki-yippee "On Top of Old Smoky," with yodel tag. Audience comes in for innings [illegible] during participation in [illegible] and brace of requests [illegible] in medley form.

Gil Lamb, hampered slightly by time out, nevertheless romps into his long-limbed prancing and batch of jokes for good returns. Best bet is bebopper getting kicks during Benny Goodman jam session in theatre. Exits to fine flurry of mitts following his standard harmonica swallowing and beeping.

Andre, Andree & Bonnie impress with unique mannequin turn. Andre keeps illusion perfect during opening moments, then flings his dolls about for some eye-catching tricks, especially whirls holding two gals. Three-way ballrooming in Latin tempo drifts into work with Andre surrounded by terping femmes who, by this time, have doffed rubber masks.

Sari, well-stacked redhead, takes a slow build with her contortions, but grabs plenty of palms for expert winding and unwinding at finish.

Kathryn Duffy Dansations put sparkle into overall production with Montmartre doings, "Lucky Pierre," with vocals by Johnny O'Brien and Normandie Boys. Prior to Sablon entrance, gals go into costume parade with "Maxim's," spotting romps of Babs Warden. Finale is melange of "April in Paris" and "American in Paris," featuring excellent toeterps by Christina Carson.

Al Jahns orch displays precision in all scores, with Sablon's keyboard accomper and conductor, Leon Leonardi, moving into podium space for sympathetic backing. Will.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

As an interim booking between Martha Raye and Sophie Tucker (latter opens Oct. 13), Lou Walters has brought in comic Jack Durant to headline a pruned production. Sock supporting acts, attractive line and elaborate setup, however, maintain the LQ's position as one of the best buys in town.

Durant has walked into a tough assignment here and emerges with only a mild score. An LQ topliner needs a bit more than he's got to offer to stand out above the boff supporters and slick staging routines. In his 25-minute stint Durant just manages to reach the payoff wire.

He's a clever performer with expert delivery savvy. He can throw out an old line and pick up enough yocks to warrant its resurrection. Trouble is he relies too much on the tried-and-tested patter quips to get maximum impact. Material includes a wide variety of bachelor, marriage and mother-in-law jokes. Most of them are standard stuff that's been mouthed by dozens of comics before and that's reached print via Walter Winchell, Earl Wilson, et al. He occasionally lapses into a blue barrage but for the most part sticks to the kind of quip that's fit to print. A more selective approach to his material would aid his turn.

Durant is at his best in the zany pratfalls which he casually inserts between lines. Another sharp bit is a carbon of a dialog between screen thesps Greenstreet and Lorre. It's a madcap sequence that keeps 'em roaring.

Rest of the layout are holdovers from Miss Raye's production. Darvas & Julia (also holding for Miss Tucker's engagement) continue to amaze with their acro holds, spins and splits. Also effective is Sid Krofft and his puppet menagerie. Collette Fleuriot repeats her half-and-half dance specialty for okay response. Production numbers including "Bal d' Quatre Arts," "Circus Parisienne" and a can-can routine are all socko.

The Art Waner and Buddy Harlowe orchs share the podium in top style. Gros.

Mark Hopkins, S. F.

(PEACOCK COURT)

San Francisco, Sept. 23.

Dorothy Shay's solid local fandom, built up during five previous stands, is too loyal to quibble over any of the opening night bumbles that can scotch a performance. This includes the forgetting of a song at its midway point and lights which kicked back by shedding a gelatine film at the highpoint of a tune. To Miss Shay's credit, she handled both distractions as if they were part of the act.

Reeling off a compote of her oldies with a few new items in between, she has easy [illegible] the outpouring of devotees who gobble everything she has to offer. Miss Shay doesn't have to try, though her month's layoff on vacation shows her a trifle rough before she moves in for the final kill with her standbys. Opener nervousness also account for some unnecessary gabbing which slows her session. All told, however, the customers wound up Shay-happy and cooing for more when she begged off after 45 minutes at show caught.

Gowned in a white strapless sequin and beads beaut, Miss Shay's opener, "Friendly Feeling," is adequate as a warmer with her "If It Wasn't for Father" one down the middle for strike. "Television's Tough on Love" is less than sock as a ringer, but "Beverly Hills" clicks heftily. Her old reliables, "Pure as the Driven Snow," "Efficiency" and "Uncle Fudd" in the home stretch, are money in the bank, as always. Accompaniment by Russ Black is oke. Benny Strong orch is its usual tops for show and terping. Ted.

Last Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 24.

"Diamond Jim Brady Revue" with Edward Arnold, Buddy Lester, Joy Lane, Virginia Lee (2), Sid Marion, Dolores Frazzini, Eddie Gallagher, Devlyn Girls (12), Garwood Van Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

This vehicle built for Edward Arnold's nitery debut by Hershey Martin and Sammy Lewis is a moneymaker for the Last Frontier. As is, the package could do very well in most niteries throughout the country. Pared down from original 90 mins. to 75, the Arnold showcase bustles along utilizing the title as a handle only. Headliner's experience as thesp in pix and on radio proves a definite asset, as key man in the revue wins approbation for his affable charm and ability to sell in varied ways. (See New Acts).

Buddy Lester has never been accorded such yocks and healthy mitts in prior Vegas stands. From the moment he begins his rapid-fire chatter, the room is his. Task isn't easy, for he follows Arnold's dramalog of "Devil and Daniel Webster," and to switch mood from calm to tempest requires just the right kind of segue. Lester leaps in without spoiling effect of preceding turn, and carries the house through some mad hunks of business. Bit with trumpet blares in "Old Man River," having windjammer in Garwood Van orch answer challenge is a honey. Stripper sashay has 'em howling. His "Son of Ted Lewis" is another gem. Lester stamps an indelible impression with this display.

Joy Lane, former band chirp, comes up with a showstopping gimmick, using echo chamber voice track of herself in duo songology. Begins with straight thrushing, then deals her first good card with "Please Mr. Sun." Followup has her "conscience" asking for old time song, while she drives through with modern version. Result is double voicing of each style as measured in "When You and I Were Young Maggie Blues." Tosses in special cutie, "What Would I Ever Do Without Mike," inference being microphone, and closes with multiple noduling via tape of "Good Morning Echo."

Virginia Lee has another surprise act, when she finds a bashful guy in the audience and brings him up to work in some acro nipups. Yocks roll in as he becomes entangled, falls, finally makes it. Audience is not aware of male being a plant until close of act.

Sid Marion, vet comic with Teutonic lisp, breaks into an Arnold dissertation, and as the impudent waiter, tosses gags back and forth. Arnold's dignity vs. Marion's foolish gabbing tickles funnybones in the well-known "Jonah and Whale" sketch.

Town & Country, B'klyn

Joyce Bryant, Denny Desmond, Rosario Imperio, Johnnie Morris Orch, La Playa Sextet; $3-$4 minimum.

Ben Maksik has taken a spot in a remote and deserted area of Brooklyn and transformed it into a gusher. This 785-seater (650 in the main room) is far away from competition. A customer must be equipped with a car and [illegible] map for successful [illegible] this cafe [illegible] Maksik is wise enough to realize that a property in this [illegible] location must offer some powerful incentives to pull trade. He's doing just that with his purchase of virtually any name (within reason) that makes itself available. The policy has paid off.

The current bill isn't as potent at the b.o. as some of the other layouts he's had in this room. But it's extremely strong on entertainment with Joyce Bryant in the top spot. This Negro singer is a provocative stylist. She can create a variety of moods, but excels in highly dramatic tunes. In the latter type number, she shows a tendency to extract the last measure of drama. A little more restraint would be easier on the customers. However, it's her biggest tune and the customers reward her with salvos. Other numbers in her catalog are "One for the Road," "Porgy" and "Stormy Weather," which get similar treatments, and lighter items include "Tzena" and a French medley.

Denny Desmond (ex-Mack &) is testing out his material here. He's essentially a clever lad and has several lines of attack. He can hit through comedy pianistics, his standup funstering, and dancing. He's still to give his act a bit more form, but individual bits are good and can hold up. He has a nice bit of pantomime, accompanied by a tape recorder. Desmond also does well with a dance he bills as a Ray Bolger impression. He needs a stronger line of continuity to tie up the various bits. Gets off nicely here.

Other turn is Rosario Imperio (New Acts). Johnnie Morris showbacks well and La Playa Sextet provides the Latin moments. Jose.

Fairmont Hotel, S. F.

(VENETIAN ROOM)

San Francisco, Sept. 23.

Dorothy Dandridge, 4 Step Bros., Ernie Heckscher Orch (10); $2 cover.

This is an instance of top entertainment having its troubles at a preem due to fuzzy presentation. This included brash lighting for a star requiring sensitive framing, a dance platform over-accentuating terp footwork, and lack of liaison between performers and music. Undoubtedly succeeding stanzas ironed these, but at the opener they sideswiped the proceedings.

Dorothy Dandridge lives up to her billing as a thrusher and her lace bodice satin flare gown is a throat-lumper. But there would have been a greater impact if the showmanship angle had received more consideration. The dance foursome labors to overcome the effect of hoofing on a hollow elevation which yields a tom-tom resonance. And it takes several tunes for the singer to warm up the vocal session.

"I Never Knew I Could Love Anybody," Miss Dandridge's tee-off, manages to register by a fair margin and her second item, "I've Got You Under My Skin," comes a little closer to clicking, but it isn't until she tosses in "Talk Sweet Talk to Me" that she pulls the dish-rattlers over to her side. "Bye, Bye Baby" is in the clear and her overtime package of "Blow Out the Candles," an English novelty which includes a bit of biz with accompanist Marty Jacobs, "You Won't See Your Baby at All" and "Just One of Those Things" bring her home to a good mitt. It was hard work, but she done it!

The Four Step Bros., who open the seance, had equal hurdles to clear. A groaning dance platform that talked back at each step and a lack of coherence between the hoofers and orch (which first had one of the dancers signalling for a speedup and then another calling for a slowdown) didn't help. In spite of handicaps, the steppers got off to a good score. Their encore, a Latin tempo Charleston, was especially socko.

This can wind up one of the best of recent bookings in this hemstitched room, but the opener had holes in its head. Ted.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Sept. 24.

Jack Haley, Helen O'Connell, Allan & Ashton, Fluff Charlton, Joy Walker, Buddy Bregman, El Rancho Girls (8), Ted Fio Rito Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Jack Haley has meandered through plenty of show biz green fields before entering nitery pastures. With his first exhibit, which is marked by ropes-up biz at the reservation desk, the comedian looks good for another addition to his multi-faceted career. (See New Acts.)

Helen O'Connell, [illegible] blonde chirp returning [illegible] told after some [illegible] domesticity, makes [illegible] interlude court for terrif huzzas. Gowned and coiffed perfectly, thrush hits big with "Taking a Chance on Love," then goes into palpitating "Wish You Were Here." Revives style that made her top fave with Jimmy Dorsey's orch 10 years ago, combining "Green Eyes," "All of Me" and "Tangerine," for salvos. Ballads "Be Mine," and brings style she originated up-to-date with "Loveliest Night of the Year," winning cheers at bowof.

Allan & Ashton, couple of tyros in dance teaming, nevertheless show vet qualities of showmanship in their sock priming slot. Rely upon themes and patterns of moderne choreography instead of flash tricks. From sexy "Blues" opener, pair grab and hold rapt attention through "Just One of Those Things," and a moody "September Song." Comedy tag hits big at close when they exhibit "Streetcar Named Desire," with great with, and just short of knockabout.

El Rancho Girls flounce around in brief "Varsity Drag" opener, but make grade with sexy "Blues in the Night." Pairing of Fluff Charlton and Joy Walker does much to enhance impact of glittering terps. Ted Fio Rito orch takes show in good musical stride. Will.

Mapes Skyroom, Reno

Reno, Sept. 25.

Borrah Minevitch's Harmonica Rascals with Johnny Puleo, Roger Ray, The Skating Ryles (4), Mapes Skylettes (7), Eddie Fitzpatrick Orch; no cover or minimum.

Some rich harmonica blending carefully mixed with the slapstick clowning of Johnny Puleo sets up an amusing 20 minutes. Nobody gets hysterical, but the pleasant little smiles of comfortable enjoyment indicate the success of the quiet comedy and music.

With little Johnny Puleo forever squeezed out of the act and his irrepressible attempts to star, the Harmonica Rascals pantomime all their comedy in the midst of playing "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," "Sweet Sue" and "Peg O' My Heart."

While serious solos ensue, little skits occur in background. With the crew lined up across stage to hear leader play, Puleo is shoved back and forth along the line for a series of laugh-laden devices. Among their other numbers are "Star Dust," "Mr. Callaghan" and "Swanee River." Room comes to life when it appears the boys are leaving, and enthusiastic mitting brings them back twice.

Roger Ray, with his xylophone, never quite gets around to playing the instrument to any advantage. Leaning casually across it to the mike, sometimes lying on it, and occasionally beating it, he evolves some clever comedy. During an explanation of "Indian Love Call" he breaks down and cries. In a piece with orch accompaniment, he winds the number up with the last sock on the vibes. In a segue with the tooters, he registers big yocks.

Ray does Red Skelton's "Guzzler's Dry Gin" routine almost to the word and to perfection. This is an encore bit and should be the last. But with reception obviously hot at this point, he comes back and fades quickly with some material that can't follow. He should have stayed off while ahead.

The Skating Ryles do business rapid-fire on a small platform. Danish mixed four produce smash acrobatics aboard the rollers. Centrifugal force allows some amazing tricks as they stand out horizontally from the centre, sometimes hanging simply by a foot caught behind a neck. Music is a continuous mad whirl, too, which never changes in tempo or pace. Some of more exciting rollering would be best sans accomp.

Mapes Skylettes open the show with a slinky, skin-tight red gown getup and close at opposite end of the spectrum with a school days bit. Mark.

Bagatelle, London

London, Sept. 23.

Lind Joyce, Arnold Bailey Swingtet, Edmundo Ros Rhumba Band; $5.50 minimum.

Having revised her routine since her previous West End appearance, Lind Joyce has substantially strengthened the character of her act. There still are shortcomings which need to be corrected by trial and error, and while, like most British cabaret artists, she faces the problem of original material, she reveals a deft touch for putting over a pop tune with verve and charm.

Miss Joyce is [illegible] known locally for her [illegible] stint as principal [illegible] Tommy Handley's radio [illegible] and to some extent she capitalizes on that substantial credit. A short medley of bits from that program is one of the best features of her performance.

The chanteuse has included one or two sexy lyrics which don't register too happily. These are obviously not her metier and she is more at home with straight material. Her closing number, "If I Am Fancy Free" is easily her best; the least successful is a cockney version of "Poor Little Fatherless Fanny."

Sugar Hill, Boston

Boston, Sept. 27.

"Sepia Scandals" with "Rubberneck" Holmes, Peggy Thomas, Princess Orelia and Jose, Eddie Gilbert, China Doll, 10 Sugarettes; Sabby Lewis Band (8), 3 Sharps; no cover or minimum.

With fall season now in full swing, Sugar Hill bonifaces have reverted to previous policy, discarded during summer lull, of including a line of sepia chorines to lineup with result a fast moving lively show with accent on terping, mostly of hip swinging variety. In fact, only act to bypass footwork during stint, is vocalist Eddie Gilbert although he's conned, obvimuch to lower respect for the trade in Parliament and in the nation generally. It charged omission of salient facts, with "twists of wording, too numerous to mention, designed to impress non-critical or ill informed readers with the shortcomings of British producers and how much exhibitors co-operate and assist them."

After giving examples of the "misleading character" of the CEA pamphlet, Sir Henry French's draft concluded with the assertion that the CEA claim that their pamphlet was useful for reference and debate could be true only for a small minority of persons not concerned with facts.

The draft reply, which was circulated to members of the BFPA executive, was marked: "Confidential until approved for release." That approval never will be given.

the spots between records. He plans to telephone them wherever they may be, interview them via phone, with both sides of the conversation amplified. Incidentally, he contends FCC has ruled he doesn't need to use the "beep" attachment which interrupts the conversation since the interviews will be direct and not recorded.

Jay added that if performers are in the restaurant, he'll summon them to a telephone booth in the place and conduct his telephonic interview over a distance of a few feet.

20 Mins.
Last Frontier, Las Vegas

Edward Arnold, vet film thesper, has a neat package built around his personality in "Diamond Jim Brady Revue." Put together by Hershey Martin and Sammy Lewis, show is designed to present Arnold in the character he portrayed on the screen years ago, and to capitalize upon his in-person appeal.

Dressed in garb of the famous Gay '90's bon vivant, with diamonds flashing, Arnold makes a charming host for the first half of the revue, introing various acts. He then heads into a comedy sketch with Sid Marion. Latter, as impudent waiter, lisping in Teutonic accents, interrupts a monology. Patter back and forth has moments of high humor, with Arnold playing straight into the standard "Jonah and the Whale" sketch.

After setting the scene for serious dramalogy Arnold holds pin-drop attention with excerpt from "Devil and Daniel Webster." Received ovation at finish when caught.

Finale is built around "Diamond Jim for President," containing a three-way comedy-song sequence set to "Gallagher & Shean," with Buddy Lester and Sid Marion asking questions and Arnold giving answers. Although stretched a bit too far, scene has merit and enough laughs to keep interest alive.

Within the borders of this package, Edward Arnold is a natural; however, as a single and unsupported by comedy foils, scope is limited. He has his way with the drama dept., which could pay off, if properly produced, and including the right readings for his manner of presentation. Will.

JACK HALEY
Comedy
40 Mins.
El Rancho, Las Vegas

Jack Haley had one more portal to cross in order to complete his show biz circle. Having been on the scene for years, dishing up his sly comedy in pix, musicals, radio and TV, the only field remaining was the nitery. His showcasing at El Rancho should put him in clover.

Special frames for his comedics were constructed by writers Phil Shuken and Jerry Seelen. He laces over jokes to bind his varied types of song intros. Established and underway Haley chortles [illegible] of "Just My [illegible] passages aroo [illegible] and a solid sock- [illegible] Health with Bernarr MacFadden. Mother Goose gets a share of ribbing as Haley expounds via a brace of warbles, "Little Miss Muffet" a la Cole Porter; Rodgers & Hammerstein and Metopera. Tossaway, "Man's Gotta Have It," fills in before the flashback into picts and musicomedies with songs introed by Haley. Accomping at the 88 is handled by Buddy Bregman.

Haley looks great on a nitery floor and socks over with showmanship. Will.

KAREN CHANDLER
Songs
12 Mins.
Billy Gray's, L. A.

Newest of the recording chirps, Karen Chandler makes a decided impression in her nitery debut. Working in a spot where singers are strictly the breather between comics, she earns attention on her own with an okay 12-minute stint that is nicely balanced between ballad and rhythm stuff.

Miss Chandler, naturally needs to learn more ease in front of an audience but the important attributes of voice and rhythm are there. She gives a winsome projection to such items as "You Belong To Me," and displays effective rhythm sense on "Sitting On Top of the World" and "I Get a Kick Out of You."

A few more Coral disks probably will help give her the assurance she needs for personals. Kap

BETTY CARTER
Songs
8 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

Betty Carter has an interesting idea. She takes standards and musical comedy tunes and strays far from the melodic line into a swing and bop form. Some of the Negro singer's stuff is ingenious, but much shows little imagination.

Her major number is "Perfidia," which has moments of delicacy and charm. Her bop excursions are strong enough to warrant an encore in this house. Jose.

BUD McCREERY
Songs
15 Mins.
One Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

Special material writer for several top performers, Bud McCreery impresses as having sufficient merit on his own to rate as good bookings as his customers.

Accompanying himself at the piano, McCreery doesn't have much of a voice, but he doesn't need one. Emphasis is all on his own material and the engaging way in which he sells it, and he's socko all the way. His "sophisticated singer" tag might be reminiscent of Dwight Fiske, but while his delivery is basically the same, he has an infectious showmanship of his own.

He tees off here with a clever ditty titled "My Girl Contortionist," but really hits paydirt with a scathingly funny indictment of the old cafe society set—about "Elsa" and "Noel," etc. "Tale of Marian Mouse," all about the stress on animal actors in pix, emerges as a socko dig at Hollywood. His closer, "Sadie Thompson," is no more irreverent than the play ("Rain") at which it pokes fun, and earns him a solid begoff. Stal.

HERB & BETTY WARNER
Songs
10 Mins.; One
Palace, N. Y.

Husband-wife song team is young, refreshing and good-looking, in addition to having good legit voices. They sing the pops well and suggest that they can do the heavier stuff as well.

Betty Warner is a pretty and petite blond with a classy chassis that's shown off well in the white bouffant gown she wore when caught. Mate is attired in midnight-blue dinner jacket. Open with "Can't Take It With You," then go into "Over the Rainbow" (with a curtsy to Judy Garland), followed by the male's "Street Song."

They've obviously given their presentation an ambitious format, since they try to break it up with some simple dance maneuvers around the stage, in musicomedy fashion, but this is something at which they show obvious inexperience. But that's okay; they should keep trying if they ever intend to get places. In these times of expanding talent needs, singing alone frequently isn't enough. Kahn.

ROSARIO IMPERIO
Dance
9 Mins.
To[illegible] & C[illegible]ntry, Brooklyn

Rosario Imperio, emigre from the Coast, has a good line of terps that should carry her into the flossier spots. Miss Imperio exhibits jazzed-up flamenco and some modern ballet. Both are good audience fodder that win applause.

Miss Imperio opens with the flamenco, which is difficult to follow with the ballet. Latter items, which show good form and technique, are not as commercial as her opening gambit. At times, she postures too much. Perhaps a modification which permits her to close with the Iberian terp or something similar would get her off in a top fashion. Jose.

FISHER & MARKS
Comedy
9 Mins.; One
Palace, N. Y.

Fisher & Marks are a two-man comedy team whose material is unfunny as well as too familiar. They sing and dance, too.

Fisher opens on stage, then Marks emerges as the familiar audience plant to indulge in the usual fol-de-rol. Marks goes through a series of impressions (Cagney, Churchill, Martin & Lewis, Crosby & Fitzgerald, etc.), but all of this has been done to death.

Perhaps there's nothing wrong in doing old material—the trick is to do it better than the ones from whom you've done the borrowing. Kahn.

TEX & HELEN WILLIAMS
Lariats, Whip-Cracking
8 Mins.; Full
Palace, N. Y.

Tex & Helen Williams comprise a male lariat-tosser and whip-cracker. Helen Williams is his foil for the whip-cracking.

Williams opens with the varisized ropes which he twirls dexterously. He closes with his cracking of the whip in a number of maneuvers. He snaps wooden stems, for instance, held by his mate in various postures.

Act is okay for standard turns of this type, but could use more showmanship and humor. But for the rodeos and carnies, it's okay. Kahn.

Plays Abroad

Hanging Judge

London, Sept. 24.

Michael Powell and Walter P. Chrysler, Jr., production of drama in three acts by Raymond Massey; based on book by Bruce Hamilton. Stars Godfrey Tearle. Directed by Michael Powell. At New Theatre, London, Sept. 23 '52. $2 top.

|---|---|
| Sir Francis Brittain | Godfrey Tearle |
| Major Gilbert West | Henry Caine |
| Sir George Sidney | John Robinson |
| Col. George Archer | James Raglan |
| Sir Alfred Parkinson | Bartlett Mullins |
| Keith Nottingham | Peter Williams |
| Miles Lamprey | Jack Melford |
| Ronald Pond | Julian Somers |
| John Teal | John Byron |
| Mary Reddish | Jane Griffiths |
| Roberts | Denis Shaw |
| Hendrey | William Pearman |
| Governor of Gaol | John le Mesurier |
| Foreman of Jury | Hamlyn Benson |

Despite the intensity of this dramatic story and the skill displayed in adapting it to the stage, it is strongly apparent how much better this was in its literary form and how improved it could be if given the wider scope of the screen. The play is confined to one full set, supplemented by blackout and spotlighted vignettes denoting frequent change of locale. While speedy and economical, this tends to diminish realism. With Godfrey Tearle secure in popular standing and the current vogue for thrillers, it stands an even chance. For the U. S., the odds might not be so favorable.

Theme, which marks Raymond Massey's debut as a playwright, is forceful and gripping, although variations of the idea have been used before. The early scenes are cluttered with a surplus of characters which serve to provide background before the wheels are set in motion. Most of the action is in an exclusive London club, the central figure of which is a high court judge, severe and aloof. He is dubbed the "hanging judge" because of the number of murder cases over which he has presided. He is feared and respected for his fanatical belief in the integrity of the law, asserting that no innocent men ever pays the supreme penalty. Hence, if convicted, he must die.

A ghost from the past materializes in an illegitimate son who, knowing that he is dying, craftily plans suicide to look like murder, implicating his father through a maze of circumstantial evidence. Although government officials plan to smuggle the judge out of the country to avoid scandal, he is caught, brought to trial and condemned. When he has endured all the agony he has so oftened witnessed in others, the father realizes the boy's revenge for his mother's betrayal is complete. But he is saved on the eve of execution by a last-minute confession corroborating the father's innocence. Reprieve comes too late to the fallen giant, who would rather cling to the findings of the courts of justice than to life.

Godfrey Tearle is all majestic dignity in the leading role. The only phase that does not ring true is a liaison with the young housekeeper in his country retreat. His early indiscretion that causes the tragedy is feasible, but the May-November alliance seems out of character.

Supporting players have little to do but come and go, alternately helping and hampering justice. Best of these are John Robinson, Henry Caine, Jack Melford, Peter Williams, James Raglan, Julian Somers and John Byron. Jane Griffiths, making her first West End appearance, is a gleam of brightness in an otherwise all male cast. Michael Powell directs the play with vigor. Clem.

Second Threshold

London, Sept. 25.

Jack de Leon, in association with Marcel Hellman, production of drama in two acts by Philip Barry with revisions by Robert E. Sherwood. Stars Clive Brook and Margaret Johnston. Directed by Wendy Toye. At Vaudeville Theatre, London, Sept. 24, '52. $2.25 top.

|---|---|
| Toby Wells | William Sylvester |
| Malloy | John Kelly |
| Miranda Bolton | Margaret Johnston |
| Joseph Bolton | Clive Brook |
| Thankful Mather | Patricia Owens |
| Jack Bolton | Derek Blomfield |

There has been a surfeit of psychological dramas in recent years and only the very best now have a reasonable chance of weathering the critical storm. "Second Threshold" does not fit in this category, and its main chances depend on the personal draw of the two stars, Clive Brook and Margaret Johnston, both of whom have substantial West End followings.

Brook repeats the role he played early last year in New York, but even his skillful and forceful interpretation of the father with suicidal tendencies, does not succeed in raising audience sympathy for the character. And with that weakness predominant, the play itself, with its verbose treatment of the father-daughter relationship, doesn't come across. There is a total lack of suspense or surprise, and the few touches of whimsy seem out of place. Occasionally the dialog rises well above the average, but such passages are too infrequent.

The complex character of the daughter is played in highly theatrical fashion by Miss Johnston, an able actress. In the opening scene where she plays the role on a provocative note, she is excellent. The later switch to a near-hysterical key is within her range, but not her style.

William Sylvester fills the part of the young doctor in polished style. There is a standout job by Patricia Owens as a flighty piece of fluff and the only character in the play free of complexes. Derek Blomfield and John Kelly round out the able cast. Play has been efficiently directed by Wendy Toye. Myro.

Gelliebte Hexe
(BELL, BOOK AND CANDLE)

Vienna, Sept. 23.

Theatre in der Josefstadt production of comedy in three acts by John Van Druten; translated by Alfred Polgar. Directed by Peter Preses; costumes and setting by Edith Almoslino. At Kammerspiele, Vienna, Sept. 19, '52.

|---|---|
| Gillian Holroyd | Ursula Schult |
| Queenie Holroyd | Adrienne Gessner |
| Shep Henderson | Leopold Rudolf |
| Sidney Redlitch | Hans Ziegler |
| Nicky Holroyd | Robert Rober |

While Peter Preses, from a considerable Stateside experience as actor and director, has given "Bell, Book and Candle's" Viennese incarnation a lot more reality and life than is usual in the dreary present-day theatre here, lack of acting resources leaves the charming play gasping for breath and the audience yearning for the doors. Only Adrienne Gessner is standout in a play which should give all its characters, especially the juicy male and female leads, a field day for knocking viewers out with comedy and charm.

Ursula Schult, playing the apartment-house witch, gives the part a nervous, irritable quality which her querulous voice intensifies. Leopold Rudolf does the lover boy from upstairs with hysterical intensity, often stepping into the idiotic when things should be more dramatic. The two are in each other's arms necking so continually, as to make one wish for censorship.

The sure-footed Miss Gessner's appearances are a distinct relief. Her talent and feeling for underplaying the subtle comedy of her role as the mundane hex aunt is a breath of air in the murk of Viennese stage antiquity and a much needed hypo to the almost strangled humor of the van Druten script. The other parts are negligible in importance and played commensurately.

The set looks more like New York than is usual here. But it's so cluttered with furniture and lamps as to hamper the cast. Isra.

Love From Judy

London, Sept. 26.

Emile Littler production of musical in two acts (11 scenes). Book by Eric Maschwitz and Jean Webster; music, Hugh Martin; lyrics, Martin and Jack Gray; scenery and costumes, Berkeley Sutcliffe; choreography, Pauline Grant; orchestrations, Phil Green; Directed by Charles Hickman. At Saville Theatre, London Sept. 25, '52. $2.50 top.

| Loulie Jean | Anne Foley |
| Don Mize | David Karry |
| Ballet Jervis | Rex Reid |
| Ballet Judy | Irene Claire |
| Ballet Magnolia | Frances Pidgeon |

The entry of this new British musical into the West End arena is not to be considered as a threat or chanllenge to the established Broadway productions now playing at two major theatres. Emile Littler's new venture is in a different class. Equally spectacular, it is less sophisticated but it has a charm which many British people will enjoy to the undoubted amazement of visiting Yanks.

The book is based on the play, "Daddy Long-Legs," and much of the naive charm of the original finds its way into the new version. The score was done by an American, Hugh Martin, who also collaborated on the lyrics. Although the music is pleasing to the ear,

'Wagon' in Columbus

Columbus, Sept. 30.

"Paint Your Wagon" goes into rehearsal here today (30) in preparation for opening its road tour at the Hartman Thursday (2). Show was set Monday, and cast, including Burl Ives, were to arrive in town this morning.

Also expected for the opening are co-authors Frederic Loewe and Alan Jay Lerner, film star Nancy Olson (Lerner's wife) and choreographer Agnes DeMille.

Plays Out of Town

The Time of the Cuckoo

Wilmington, Sept. 25.

Robert Whitehead and Walter Fried production of comedy-drama in two acts (six scenes) by Arthur Laurents. Stars Shirley Booth. Directed by Harold Clurman. Setting, Ben Edwards; costumes, Helene Pons. At Playhouse, Wilmington, Sept. 25, '52; $4.20 top.

|---|---|
| Signora Fioria | Lydia St. Clair |
| Eddie Yaeger | Donald Murphy |
| June Yaeger | Geraldine Brooks |
| Giovanna | Silva Gaselli |
| Leona Samish | Shirley Booth |
| Mrs. McIlhenny | Jane Rose |
| Mr. McIlhenny | Daniel Reed |
| Mauro | Jose Perez |
| Renato Di Rossi | Dino DiLuca |
| Vito | Ruggero Romor |

Shirley Booth gets star billing, and deservedly so, in Arthur Laurents' new play of an American secretary on the hunt for romance in Venice. At present she is the show's prize asset, but it is doubtful that even she will be able to carry this one to success in the face of Broadway competition.

There are a number of excellent individual scenes but they fail to add up to the desired overall effect, which is further damaged by a weak ending.

Show gets off to a bright start with its picture of American tourists abroad. The plot revolves around Leona Samish, who realizes a lifelong ambition to tour Italy. However, historic ruins and famous buildings leave her with a sense of something lacking. That something turns out to be romance, and she falls in love with a graying Italian charmer who has a strictly Continental viewpoint on affairs of the heart.

There is the inevitable clash of divergent moral outlooks when Leona learns her Romeo is married. She finally offers herself anyway, but is rejected by her admirer. There is a secondary love affair, involving the sophisticated landlady who has little trouble seducing a married American artist.

The thin story line places the entertainment burden on the players, who come through in fine fashion for effective individal scenes, but the final curtain leaves the impression of something vital lacking.

It is Miss Booth's show the entire time she is on the stage. In her hands Leona is a warm, appealing character. She achieves a nice balance between the comedy and dramatic demands of the role, and pulls out all the stops in a telephone pantomime bit, and as a slightly inebriated lady throwing a party.

Dino DiLuca, as the Romeo, makes a good impression in his American debut, although he hasn't much to do except make pretty speeches to Miss Booth. Lydia St. Clair is effective as a worldly woman on the make. Donald Murphy, as the object of her affections, and Geraldine Brooks, as his wife, play with gusto.

There is an engaging characterization by young Jose Perez as a street urchin wise beyond his years, while Daniel Reed, Jane Rose, Ruggero Romor and Silva Gaselli in bit roles round out the top-grade cast.

Harold Clurman's direction makes the most of Laurents' script, and there is an attractive Venetian setting by Ben Edwards. Klep.

Nina

Portland, Ore., Sept. 30.

Randolph Hale presentation of farce-comedy in three acts by Andre Roussin, adapted from the French by Samuel Taylor. Staged by Edward Everett Horton. Setting, Gus Schneider, costumes, Maurice Sands. At Mayfair, Portland, Sept. 25, '52.

|---|---|
| Wife | Marta Linden |
| Husband | Edward Everett Horton |
| Lover | Christopher Plummer |
| Redon-Lamur | Edgar Iverson |

With Edward Everett Horton in the top role, "Nina" made its Coast debut here last week. French farce-comedy had Gloria Swanson in the title role on Broadway last year, but Horton discerned that the husband's role was just as hot as the wife's. When the play folded, he got together with the author, made a few changes, and has an evening's entertainment on his hands.

After more than 100 performances in summer spots, the play opened here at the Mayfair and will then travel to Seattle, and Tacoma, and sit down for a le[illegible] date in San Francisco. If the "Nina" clicks there, as it should, the company will no doubt work its way back to Broadway.

There is nothing particularly original about the plot—a French farce about a husband, his wife and her lover. Horton plays the part of the hypochondriac husband to the hilt.

The timing, snappy lines, ges-[illegible] and personal style of Horton, [illegible] a hot supporting cast, make this one of the top comedies. Cast keeps the pace going at a fast clip. Marta Linden does a nifty job as the wife with a husband and lover on her hands, while Christopher Plummer scores as the sleek lover who admires his femme's husband. Edgar Iverson is on during the last few minutes of the play as another wronged husband. The new "Nina" is Horton comedy at its best. Feve.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Enid Bagnold, 60-year-old British authoress who wrote the novel, "Serena Blandish," which S. N. Behrman made into a hit in 1925, has an unusual article in the October Atlantic, titled "The Flop." In it Miss Bagnold describes her harrowing emotional experiences last year in the U. S., when her play, "Gertie," starring Glynis Johns, ran on Broadway for four days. Before the first rehearsal, the producer-director (Herman Shumlin, although he's never named in the article), said: "I want to tell you—though I shall hate it to happen—that you and I will end in dreadful battle, that you may leave America loathing me." (He was wrong on the second count, she says.) Miss Bagnold describes the usual bewilderment of hasty and frequent rewriting New Haven and Boston tryouts, battles with director, etc.

Scene designers she called "my particular enemies." She made a written memo at the time, "Good God—has an old Englishwoman got to argue with a young American about taste! It comes to something! Georgian, Regency, Empire, Boulle, just plain Victorian . . . it comes from us! From your old homes in England, Germany, France. If you can't remember it through your haze of radio, television, supermarkets and whining sirens—when I come here to tell you, you've got to take it!" Wistful about the flop of "Gertie," she says: "Success would bring money, and pride to my family. I hoped deeply for it. But nothing could take away what I had felt in the theatre." She ends with: "Some mystical thing I had seen when I'd written the play—that he (Shumlin) had seen when he took it—had broken in our fingers, or perhaps had never after all been there."

Backers of "Bernardine," Guthrie McClintic's production of the Mary Chase comedy, include Ben Marden, owner of the Playhouse, N. Y., where the show will play, $7,200; playwright and radio scripter Clifford Goldsmith and his wife jointly, $2,100; producer Elaine Perry, orchestra conductor Harry Salter, theatre executive Louis A. Lotito, Theatre Guild co-director Theresa Helburn, stage manager Windsor Lewis, director Margaret Perry and Katharine Cornell (Mrs. McClintic), $1,200 each; Theatre Guild associate director Armina Marshall, producer Ted Adoue, company manager Manning Gurian and actress-singer Peggy Fears, $600 each, Rebecca Franklin, wife of N. Y. World-Telegram & Sun drama columnist Ward Morehouse, $300; radio-tele-legit actress Ruth Rawson, producer Gertrude Macy, authoress Nancy Hamilton, Mildred Sigman Jacobs (widow of producer Irving Jacobs, who was originally slated to produce the play) and Charles G. Strakosch, company manager of the show, $300 each. Venture is capitalized at $60,000, with provision for 20% overcall. McClintic, who will also direct, and Stanley Gilkey, his general manager, are general partners.

In an article titled "John Golden's Plan To Help the Theatre," in the upcoming Oct. 11 issue of Saturday Review, Henry Hewes interviews the vet producer on the ills of current legit. Golden feels that new plays and playwrights will solve most of these ills, and comes up with a three-pronged approach. First, Golden is starting to raise a $100,000 Playwright's Loan Fund to tide over "writers who have talent and time to put in hock." Next, he's urging Actors Equity to change its rule against presentation of new plays at Equity Library Theatre. Third, he wants more encouragement for such groups as Howard Lindsay's New Dramatists Committee, Mrs. Martin Beck's American Theatre Wing classes, and Dr. Milton Smith's School of Dramatic Arts at Columbia "I'm going to try and do all of these things with the cooperation of all the fine people we have in the theatre. I don't say it will cure, but I'm sure it will help a lot more than sniping," Golden says.

Backers of "Dial 'M' for Murder," Frederick Knott's London melodrama hit being presented on Broadway by British producer James P. Sherwood, include theatre owner Howard S. Cullman, $12,500; Maurice Evans, who will star in the play, $1,500; Mrs. Boris Karloff, $1,000; San Francisco financier Louis R. Lurie, $3,500; Armina Marshall (Mrs. Lawrence Langner), associate director of the Theatre Guild, $1,000; producer-theatre owner Gilbert Miller, $10,000; playwright John Patrick, $500; A. Gerald Renthal, son of theatrical accountant Charles Renthal, $2,000, and John F. Waters, representing theatre owner Lee Shubert, $15,000; Emmett Rodgers, actor and production associate of Evans, is listed as general partner, representing Sherwood. The venture is capitalized at $50,000, with provision for 20% overcall.

In connection with the current "Mr. Pickwick," Playwrights Co. production of the Stanley Young comedy at the Plymouth, N. Y., Samuel Stark, of Dana Point, Cal., notes that two previous plays based on the Dickens characters and stories appeared in New York many years ago "Sam Weller; or The Pickwickians," starring William Rufus Blake, was presented at the old Park Theatre, opening March 16, 1838; and "Pickwick Papers," adapted by Augustin Daly, was presented at the old New York Theatre, Jan. 22, 1868. Already reported was a comedy titled "Pickwick," by Cosmo Hamilton and Frank C. Reilly, produced by the latter at the Empire, Sept. 5, 1927, for a run of 72 performances. It was pressagented by author-playwright Arthur Kober.

John Steinbeck, author of the just-issued novel, "East of Eden," told Lewis Nichols (in Sunday's (28) N. Y. Times) that: "I'm just determined I'm going to learn something about the theatre. Last time out we were kicked around like dogs ("Burning Bright" 15 performances in 1950), but I still want to do it. This shows a truly pure quality of stupidity. Just nuts. I'm so fascinated by everything about the theatre, I don't really care if the show's a flop." Steinbeck also told Nichols that he and Elia Kazan will do a film script of "Eden." He also wants to do the book for a musical version of his novel, "Cannery Row," to Frank Loesser's music, which Feuer & Martin are interested in producing.

Presentation at the Arts Theatre Club in London of "Two Loves I Have" recalls a $1,000,000 lawsuit instituted in New York when the Dorothy and Howard Baker play was staged in Gotham in 1944 under its original title of "Trio." The play was forced to close at the Belasco Theatre on intervention of the late License Commissioner Paul Moss, and legal proceedings were initiated by Lee Sabinson. As the Arts Theatre Club operates on a membership basis, plays staged there do not require censor's approval. Script of the play, however, has been sent to the Lord Chamberlain and if his approval is forthcoming, it will probably transfer to a regular West End run.

Joan Blondell in "A Tree Grows in Bdooklyn" won't open the subscription season at the Nixon, Pittsburgh, Oct. 13 as announced after all. Actress won't be finished with her vidpix series, "Calamity Jane," in Mexico in time to get up in the show. As a result, the musical, which originally starred Shirley Booth on Broadway, will tee off instead in Chicago late next month and won't hit Pitt until February, because house is booked almost solid until then. Theatre Guild-ATS series at the Nixon will bow with "Gigi," Oct. 13, followed by Katherine Cornell in "Constant Wife," week of Oct. 20.

Bali Dancers Continue SRO Pace On B'way, Pacted for Las Vegas

Fred Schang, Columbia Artists Mgt. prez, inked pact on Monday (29) with Hal Braudis, manager of the Thunderbird, Las Vegas, for an engagement at the nitery of the Dancers of Bali Nov. 20-26. Troupe will do a 50-minute show twice nightly, for 14 shows, in excerpts from the current Broadway program.

Date for the stylized Bali group at this type of entertainment spot is considered quite a novelty in dance circles. But engagement, according to Schang, solves several problems, such as breaking up the one-night stands on the troupe's tour to the Coast, and keeping the Indonesian troupe out of cold climates en route to L. A. Deal was set up through the Baum-Newborn agency in N. Y., for reputed price of $15,000.

Meantime, the troupe is doing sock biz on Broadway. The five-week N. Y. run was sold out after one week, so that an added return fortnight has already been set. Troupe closes at the Fulton Oct. 18, and plays a week split among Boston, Hartford, Newark, Philly and D. C. Then it will return for the extra two weeks, starting Oct. 27. Cold weather will prevent its staying in N. Y. longer.

There's been demand for a special orchestral program by the gamelan orchestra accompanying the dancers, and there's possibility of a Sunday afternoon concert before troupe's departure.

In its first week at the Fulton, troupe took in $17,800 in six shows and a preview. Last week, also in seven shows, it grossed over $21,000, which is capacity-plus, with standees at every show. Sock biz for what was regarded as a limited-draw longhair event has been the season's biggest surprise.

22-Year-Old U.S. Maestro, Four-Year Vet of Opera, To Debut With NBC Symph

Thomas Schippers, who is only 22, will conduct the NBC Symphony Orchestra for the first time next Saturday (4). Young American maestro, who joined the N. Y. City Opera Co. last season, when he batoned for the stage preem of "Amahl and the Night Visitors," conducted his first classical work last week (26), batoning for "La Boheme."

Schippers conducted "Amahl" last season for its world premiere over NBC-TV. He's batoning for "Amahl" again this fall, and for the N. Y. City Opera preem of "The Consul."

Young maestro heads for Europe next, to conduct there Dec. 5 through Jan. 10. He'll do the London preem of "Amahl" Dec. 5, as well as baton a BBC concert. He'll also preem "Amahl" in Paris. Schippers will be back in N. Y. to conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra at Carnegie Hall in a concert version of "The Consul" Jan. 14, then go abroad again, to conduct in Spain. He'll be back for the spring season of the N. Y. City Opera Co., prefacing it by conducting in his home town Feb. 20, with Kalamazoo Symphony.

Schippers started batoning in 1948, when he was 18, as conductor with the Lemonade Opera Co. in N. Y. He preemed Kurt Weill's "Down in the Valley" and some Haydn and Mendelssohn works with the Greenwich Village outfit. He conducted "The Consul" on Broadway for four months in 1950, then went abroad to baton the Menotti work there.

Albanese, Conner in Met Italo-English 'Bohemes'

The Metropolitan Opera Assn. has picked the femme lead for its novelty presentation of the coming season—Puccini's "La Boheme," to be done both in English and Italian.

Licia Albenese will sing the lead in the Italian version, Nadine Conner in the English presentation. English version will be done to the new libretto written by Metro ad-pub veepee Howard Dietz, and not heard hitherto anywhere. The two "Bohemes" will be offered on successive Saturday afternoons (when Met performances are broadcast).

Gingold's Fix

London, Sept. 30.

Hermione Gingold has a problem. Already set to star in a new revue with Boris Karloff as leading man, the comedienne would also like to take an option on a new play, but can't find out who the author is.

The new revue is called "The Thing and I," with the sub-title, "A Monster Revue." It's to open in London around New Year, after a provincial tryout tour. In several of the sketches Karloff is expected to portray the sort of creepy character he played in films.

Miss Gingold's difficulty about the straight play is that the first three pages of the script are missing, so she doesn't know the author's name. The piece is titled "Royal Fandango," but the actress don't recall who sent it to her. She doesn't believe it has been produced anywhere.

(A comedy called "A Royal Fandango," by Zoe Akins, was presented by Arthur Hopkins, Nov. 12, 1923, at the Plymouth, N. Y., with a cast including Ethel Barrymore, Spencer Tracy and Edward G. Robinson. It played 24 performances.)

Wilmington's Local, CLT Drives Seen Paying Off; Sock 'Cuckoo' Attendance

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 30.

Click attendance for last week's tryout of "Time of the Cuckoo" at the Playhouse here indicates that the promotional efforts of the theatre management and the Council of the Living Theatre may pay off if satisfactory shows continue to be forthcoming. House is making a determined effort to build it as a tryout and touring spot.

Gross of almost $10,000 pulled by "Cuckoo" was rated particularly impressive because the show was on Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription, which entitled members to a reduction on the tickets. Otherwise, the 88% attendance for four performances in the 1,223-seat house would have topped $12,000, despite mixed reviews in the local dailies. The play drew standees at all evening performances, with good attendance at the Saturday matinee.

Aside from the CLT campaign, which boosted the subscription list and presumably hypoed legit interest generally, a positive factor in the situation is figured to have been the heavy radio ballyhoo (52 spot plugs in 10 days) and the exploitation via the theatre's 10,000-name mailing list.

Stressing the longrange value of the promotional drive is the fact that a single performance last night (Mon.) of the Charles Wagner touring "Carmen" opera troupe was sold out in advance, and that the new Moss Hart play, "Climate of Eden," due Oct. 9-11, already has a heavy sale.

FINAL LOSS $16,631 FOR OLIVIA 'CANDIDA' RUN

"Candida," Thomas Hammond revival last season of the Shaw comedy starring Olivia de Havilland, represented a loss of $16,631. A final accounting, issued to the backers last week, revealed that the venture had returned $19,369 on its $36,000 investment.

Final payment of $7,369 accompanied the accounting, $12,000 having been returned last winter. The loss on the windup four-week engagement at the National, N. Y., closing last May 17, came to $15,431, plus $2,263 closing expenses. Total gross for the stand was $26,359. Thus, the Broadway run wiped out a small profit the show had built up on tour. Sale of scenery and props brought $250.

'Stalag' Broadway Reprise Remote

Prospect of a new company of "Stalag 17" to play a return engagement on Broadway appears remote. Matter will probably not be decided, however, until producer Jose Ferrer's return next week from London, where he's been starring in John Huston's film, "Moulin Rouge."

With the original "Stalag" production apparently set for an extended run in Chicago, it was proposed to form a new troupe to play the Donald Bevan-Edmund Trzcinski comedy-melodrama at the 48th Street, N. Y., where it played a 471-performance engagement ending last June. Click of the show this summer on the subway circuit was a factor in the suggestion of returning it to Broadway.

However, it was figured that the subway circuit edition might not stack up too well in comparison with the original, and the formation of a new troupe might be prohibitively expensive, considering that it has only until next January to recoup its cost. The film version of the play is due for release then.

Although Ferrer will decide on the "Stalag" question and other matters while in New York, his principal purpose in the trip is to stage Kermit Bloomgarden's touring production of "The Shrike," starring Van Heflin. Ferrer produced, directed and co-starred with Judith Evelyn in the original Broadway presentation of the Joseph Kramm prize-winner last season. Following his New York visit, the actor-director-producer will return to London, where he plans productions of "Shrike," "Stalag" and a musical in partnership with British manager Jack Hylton.

Milhaud Opera's U.S. Bow In Concert Form by N.Y. Orch

American premiere of Darius Milhaud's opera, "Christopher Columbus," based on the play by Paul Claudel, in concert form, will be given by the N.Y. Philharmonic-Symphony at Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Nov. 6, 7, 8 and 9. Mack Harrell will sing the title role, with Dorothy Dow, Norman Scott, John Brownlee, David Lloyd and Adolph Anderson in support. Dimitri Mitropoulos will conduct.

Opera will be sung in English, in translation by Arnold Perry. Milhaud will come to New York from California for the performances.

B'way 'Rye' Try Plans Still On Despite Author's Death

Kenneth Banghart and Warren P. Munsell are going ahead with plans for a Broadway production this season of "Comin' Through the Rye," comedy-drama with incidental music, by Warren P. Munsell, Jr. The play was tried out shortly after the author's death last summer at the Olney (Md.) Summer Theatre, where he was manager. The strawhat is operated by Banghart and Evelyn Freyman.

Script revisions, mostly of a structural nature, are being made by TV writer Stephen De Baun.

Hammerstein Sued for $233,800 By Playwright on 'King' Collab Claim

Milton Herbert Gropper, author of various Broadway shows, including two collaborations with Oscar Hammerstein 2d, has sued the latter for $233,800 for alleged share of profits from "King and I." In an action filed last Friday (26) in N. Y. Federal Court, the plaintiff charges that he contributed parts of the hit musical, including the conception and writing of the "Small House of Uncle Thomas" ballet. Hammerstein asserts the entire claim is false and that he will prove so in court.

According to Gropper's complaint, he agreed in June, 1950, to collaborate with Hammerstein on the book of a new musical to be ready for rehearsal the following Jan. 1. He claims he agreed not to get billing or public credit, but was to have received a portion of the royalties, with $75 a week in advance.

When "King and I" became a hit, the suit alleges, Gropper demanded his "share" of the profits, but Hammerstein asserted that reports of the show's success were not true. He charges that the defendant, who had by that time paid him a total of $3,000 in $75 weekly amounts, then gave him $1,500, plus $10,750 in weekly installments, for which he signed a waiver. Altogether, he received a total of $16,200, he claims.

On the allegation that his "rights" are worth $250,000, Gropper is suing for the difference, or $233,800. The action, first filed in N. Y. Supreme Court, was subsequently moved to Federal Court. Gropper's attorneys are Bondy & Schloss, while Hammerstein is represented by Howard Reinheimer. Besides collaborating with Hammerstein on "New Toys" and "Gypsy Jim," Gropper authored one hit, "Ladies of the Evening," in 1924-25, also writing or collaborating on "Every Minute Counts," "Wolf at the Door," "We Americans," "Mirrors," "Big Fight," etc.

Hammerstein's record, numbering some of the biggest hits of theatrical history, includes "South Pacific," "Carousel," "Oklahoma," all in collaboration with Richard Rodgers, plus "Show Boat," "Rose Marie," "Sunny," "Desert Song," "New Moon," "Music in the Air" and "Carmen Jones." He and Gropper were classmates at Columbia U.

Swimming Pools Onstage

Vancouver, B. C.

Editor, VARIETY:

Have been noticing all the fuss about the swimming pool being used on the stage in "Wish You Were Here," some reports claiming that this was the first time on any stage that this has been done.

I remember a twice-nightly revue in England in 1912 called "Miss Paris in London" in which one scene was a swimming pool right on the stage—25 ft. long, 12 ft. wide and 7 ft. deep. The girls used to dive from a diving board into this tank. A duplicate tank was sent ahead each week, and a crew to install it on the next stand, much to the disgust of the local stage managers who used to hate to see their stages cut up.

Also, the London Palladium used a large tank set down into the stage in a spectacular production entitled "Mexico," the climax of which was a horse and rider jumping from a high cliff into the tank much to the discomfiture of the boys in the pit who were liberally sprinkled at each performance. The musical show, "Chu Chin Chow," also had a swimming pool scene.

B'way Crix Again Aren't Seeing 'Em Eye-to-Eye; Mgrs. Start to Mutter

The New York drama critics are apparently off on their annual steeplechase. Reviews of the recent opening, "Mr. Pickwick," not only were an even pro-and-con split, but included one of those braces of diametrically opposed notices from the Times and Herald Tribune aisle-sitters.

The reactions of Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, and Walter F. Kerr, of the HT, caused some head-scratching on Broadway. Atkinson relished the entire show, spreading praise among virtually all elements in the production. Kerr, on the other hand, gave the offering a general panning and dished out raps for nearly all the aspects that Atkinson liked. Of the other critics, John Chapman (News), John McClain (Journal-American) and Arthur Pollock (Compass) were favorable, while Robert Coleman (Mirror), William Hawkins (World-Telegram & Sun) and Richard Watts, Jr. (Post) turned thumbs down.

Atkinson's notice enthused over the play as a whole, the opening paragraphs citing the Stanley Young dramatization, the "refreshing" Dickens characters, John Burrell's "lively" staging and the "taste and gusto" of the acting. Among the individual cast citations were plugs for George Howe in the title part, as well as Nigel Green, Estelle Winwood, Jacques Aubuchon, Clive Revill, Louis Hector, Basil Howes and Nydia Westman. The review mentioned virtually every actor.

Kerr's reaction, after giving a mild okay to Young's adaptation, panned the direction and was the

Cronyns Bow to Crew

Chicago, Sept. 30.

In a special 10th wedding anniversary celebration mood, Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy brought out the entire "Fourposter" backstage crew for a bow at the end of Saturday night's (27) performance. Included were the general manager, press agent, stage manager, assistant stage manager, dressers, carpenter and electrician.

Pair said they wanted credit where credit was due, and that "not just two people make a play."

Ballet Theatre's $41,400 Points to Boff N.Y. Run; De Mille Preem Tonight

Ballet Theatre, which opened a three-week N. Y. engagement at the Met Opera House last Thursday (25), looks to rack up one of its best Manhattan seasons to date. In six performances Thursday through Sunday (with two of them matinees at reduced prices), troupe grossed a robust $41,400.

In addition, advance as of Monday a.m. was $61,000, with big lines steadily at the boxoffice. Opening night top was $6 (although the press list cut into it), with other evenings at $4, and matinees at $3. First three nights were sellouts, and Sunday night very good in spite of the Jewish holiday. By Monday night, ticket sale was virtually clean for this week.

Good b.o. is being attributed to fact that it's the first ballet troupe into N. Y. for the season; excellent notices Friday and Saturday; good promotion; glamor of guest stars like Alicia Markova, David Lichine and Tatiana Riabouchinska; and good shape of the company, plus draw of its regular stars Alicia Alonso and Igor Youskevitch.

Troupe this week will premiere the two new works skedded for this engagement. Tonight (Wed.) it will offer Agnes de Mille's "The Harvest According," and tomorrow night (Thurs.) Edward Caton's "Triptych."

Miss de Mille's "Harvest" is a three-part ballet, dealing with birth, childhood and war. The third, or war, scene is an amplification and altered version of Miss de Mille's Civil War ballet which she did for the 1944 Broadway legiter, "Bloomer Girl."

Love From Judy

there is hardly a whistleable tune in the show.

Production has been staged on lavish and ambitious lines. Settings are and look expensive; the costumes provide a blaze of color, and a general atmosphere of warmth and sincerity is adroitly created by director Charles Hickman.

Jean Carson, an upcoming local gal, has her really big chance in this show and has taken advantage of it squarely. She plays the part of the orphan child who is taken away from her grim surroundings by an unknown (to her) benefactor with whom she subsequently falls in love. Her dominating personality, good looks and spirited vocals have lifted her to the front rank in musical comedy, and she deservedly received a thunderous opening night ovation.

Plot is unmistakably thin and there are fewer side issues than usual. But it appears quite adequate to hold the production together with a big chorus and dancing troupe to keep the action rolling.

Male lead is nicely played by Bill O'Connor. He is a proven singer with a pleasing stage presence. Adelaide Hall plays a Negro maid with her familiar assurance while other roles are capably filled by Linda Gray, Audrey Freeman, June Whitfield, Johnny Brandon and William Greene who head an efficient cast.

Production is staged in two acts, with the action taking place in New Orleans during 1903. The American accent may not be the real thing, but is good enough to deceive many Britishers. Myro.

The Player King

Actor-poet Christopher Hassall has written here his second full-length drama in verse. It is poetic, but in language that the modern playgoer can well understand. Piece, written specially for the Edinburgh Festival, is set in the 1490's and deals with a new theory regarding Perkin Warbeck, pretender to the throne of the British king, Henry VII. As set together in an intriguing plot, it becomes an absorbing story, with a good part for a new young actor, Tony Britton.

Theory, briefly, was discovered through state archives in Milan. It's as yet unproved, but suggests that the boy Perkin Warbeck, who aspired to the throne of England, was in reality the illegitimate son of Bishop Henry of Cambrai and Margaret, Dowager Duchess of Burgundy (sister of Richard III). They are said, according to this theory, to have goaded him on to overthrow the Tudor king, Henry VII.

Playwright has pieced together an interesting drama, with passages of rare beauty. He draws his canvas of history wide, peopling it with a variety of principal characters. One major fault is that there are too many main roles, thus not defining the piece as firmly as possible.

Love interest is created via romance between good-looking young Warbeck and Lady Katherine Gordon, high-born Scots noblewoman. Scenes between these two are delicately woven, both by playwright and players, and Heather Stannard, in the femme role, gives a worthwhile performance, expressively speaking her lines.

Clarity of enunciation is a standout. In his long oration to the Council, Tony Britton, as the young pretender, holds the stage in expert fashion, scoring in the difficult highlight of this portion of play.

Best femme portrayal is Cathleen Nesbitt as the scheming, power-seeking Duchess of Burgundy, sending young Warbeck out on his mission. It is near-perfect in tenderness and moods of passion and scorn.

Noel Howlett's precise characterization of the dignified Tudor king, Henry VII, is notable, while experienced thespers like Milton Rosmer (in a dual role as Sir William Stanley and an Abbot) and Andrew Faulds (speaking authentic Scots as James, King of Scotland) maintain the high acting standard. There is a rich cameo from Peter Bryant as an English yokel.

Anthony Holland's settings are noteworthy. Action of play ranges from 1492 to New Year of 1500, with a finely-done melodramatic final curtain. Piece brings history to life without suggestion of ancient dusty tomes, and while of stronger interest to British stubholders through its native story, has nevertheless limited appeal to others through beauty of verse and strength of story. It is one of best plays of recent Edinburgh Festivals. Gord.

The Green Valley

Dublin, Sept. 9.

Illsley-McCabe Productions presentation of musical comedy in 2 acts (11 scenes). Book and lyrics by Frank Byrne; music by Michael Coffey. Stars Cherry Lind and Jack O'Connor. Production, Stanley Illsley; sets, Joss Farrell; choreography, Ivy Bourke. At the Olympia, Dublin.

A new musical comedy by Irish writers is a rare enough event, but the belief that a musical comedy is a couple of whistleable numbers in the middle of a thin story still lives on. "The Green Valley" is another in this tradition although it has some odd moments and good numbers which the majority of the cast were unable to put across.

Locale is an Irish village where all looks set for Cherry Lind, daughter of the tavern-owner, to marry a wealthy character she doesn't love, Nigel Fitzgerald. A boyhood sweetheart, Jack O'Connor, who has made his pile singing in the U.S., arrives, with romance following. When he returns to U.S., Fitzgerald and village postmistress set up conspiracy not to deliver his letters to girl, and to forge replies. Miss Lind pines away, Fitzgerald reforms and flies to U.S. to bring back O'Connor (about to wed another woman). All conforms to pattern and ends happily.

Miss Lind, femme lead imported from London, looks pleasant and sings likewise. Same applies to O'Connor, playing opposite her, but the general level of performance lacks snap. "I'll Meet You in Coolnadreena" and "Eileen" are the best of about 15 numbers in the show. They have zest and should be popular on disks. Some of the others are pleasant, but the cast did not do them well enough. Fitzgerald, usually seen in legit, and Patty Ryan give good performances in improbable roles while Rory Kilkenny is a typical village bar-keep who might have added to the fun if the book had given him something to do. Ralph McKenna and Philip McGirr as manager and stooge to the singing boy make a great deal of the little comedy given them. They hint talent that might be cultivated.

Dances are not inspired. Production gives the impression that the producer worked long and hard, but the cast lacked confidence in the book. This probably partly is due to the fact that musical comedy work is unfamiliar to most of them. Mac.

Wild Horses

Linnit & Dunfee production of two-act farce by Ben Travers. Directed by Charles Hickman Sets, Elizabeth Taplay. At King's Theatre, Glasgow.

Direct from Germany, this new farce has a large quantity of laughs although not in the classic tradition of some previous works by Ben Travers. As light entertainment, it adds up to material with a fair chance of boxoffice success. However, Travers has given audiences cleverer stuff than this.

The partnership of Ralph Lynn and Robertson Hare in this play is a "natural." The two comedy actors shine with their usual assurance, the bigger role going to meek little Hare as a bald-headed type coping with family problems, a yen for philandering and a valuable painting of two wild horses which causes all the fuss through too-frequent change of ownership.

Action takes place in a drawing-room in Knightsbridge, fashionable London residential area. The settings by Elizabeth Taplay are brightly adequate.

Highspot of the farce comes in the second act, when Hare is called on to dress up as a femme, impersonate the daily cleaning woman and make conversation in his own drawing-room while attired in a woman's garb.

Joan Haythorne contributes a capable study of a woman visitor, Mrs. Ingle, with whom Hare tries unsuccessfully to flirt. Lynn, with a huskier voice than in recent years, has a real flair for farce. Dialog is fairly good, and sometimes bright. Staging maintains a generally brisk pace. Okay for tastes which don't go in for too subtle material. Gord.

3 New Stages Building At Isleworth Studios

London, Sept. 23.

Three new stages, which will fill the gap caused by the recent shuttering of Isleworth studios, are being built by London Films at Shepperton. The new unit will be entirely self-contained and will include administrative offices, make-up and dressing rooms. With the new extensions Sir Alexander Korda's group of producers will have seven stages available, with a combined area of 75,000 square feet. It is hoped that work will be completed and buildings ready for production by the end of 1952.

Two films currently are in production at Shepperton and two other units are on location. A further six are being readied for inclusion in the new schedule. These include productions by Carol Reed and David Lean.

ously self consciously, into participating in the free-wheeling finale.

Following fast teeoff by Sugarettes, paced by China Doll, floor is taken over by Princess Orelia and Jose with femme displaying provocative gyrations winding on hands and knees while partner prances around ala a matador. Pair returns later to combine with chorines in a frantic Voodoo number.

Held over from previous layout, vocalist Eddie Gilbert, a local lad, scores nicely. A comparative newcomer, the tall, neat appearing youth has okay pipes but a more relaxed stage manner would hypo his overall impact. Peggy Thomas, a vivacious thrush, clicks with songology that includes "I'm Going to Live Till I Die," "Trust in Me," "One Sweet Letter" and "Undecided," interweaving her vocalizing with bits of uninhibited terping.

Bill is emceed by "Rubberneck" Holmes, longtime fave here, whose zany antics aid in moving show along at accelerated pace. Guy grabs himself a spot midway to uncork some slick eccentric terping, but his clincher is a tricky bit with a lighted cigarette. Comic secretes the butt in his mouth, drinks water ostensibly swallowing it, with lighted cigarette reappearing. Bit registers solidly with ringsiders.

Musical portion is adeptly handled by Sabby Lewis, who has revamped his lineup adding a trumpet and saxman. Elie.

One Fifth Ave., N. Y.

Nancy Andrews, Bud McCreery, Bob Downey & Harold Fonville, Hazel Webster; no cover or minimum.

This most intime of all N. Y. intimeries unleashed a socko show to SRO biz last week to tee off its fall season. Talent lineup, as usual, is small numerically but, topped by singing comedienne Nancy Andrews and coupled with the spot's no cover-no minimum policy, makes for probably the best show buy in the city. Standout work of Bud McCreery, so-called sophisticated songster, and No. 1's perennial Bob Downey, Harold Fonville and Hazel Webster, add to the overall quality of the layout.

Miss Andrews, who's played this bistro several times before, is still relying on her special material and deft comedic antics to bulwark what would be a fine set of pipes anyway, and makes the total pay off for top results. Some of her stuff gets a little blue at times, and she's uninhibited in her gestures to point up that color in her work. But the patrons come here for that, so it actually never dips down from good taste.

Comedienne disports strong dialect ability in some of her tunes, plus a couple of standup jokes which she tosses in as fillips. She whams across such specials as "I'm Just a Cockeyed Bigamist" (parodying the "South Pacific" tune) and "I'm Just a Juvenile Delinquent," in which she mimes Judy Garland's classic treatment of "You Made Me Love You." Her "Model on the Cover of a Novel" is ultra-blue but non-offensive. Strangely, her closer, "A Gal's Best Friend Is a Man," emerges as weakest in the lot, and should be spaced earlier in her repertoire.

McCreery is a personable young special material writer who belts across his creations to his own piano accomp, a-la Dwight Fiske or Abe Burrows. (Incidentally, he penned Miss Andrews' "Juve Delinquent" number.) McCreery is reviewed under New Acts.

Downey & Fonville, at their twin pianos, score solidly with a "Wish You Were Here" medley and indulge in some real piano pyrotechnics with an almost classical rendition of "Ritual Fire Dance." With Downey as emcee, Fonville also registers on his own with some interlude 88'ing. And Miss Webster, as usual, displays a surefire treatment of showtunes, standards and the best of the new pops, deserving much more attentive listening than she gets from some of the noisier customers. Stal.

Mount Royal, Mont'l

Montreal, Sept. 26.

George Guest, The Foursome, Max Chamitov Orch (8) with Norma Hutton, Bill Moodie trio; $1.50 cover Sat. only.

Before starting their new policy of name attractions for the winter season (Evelyn Knight opens Oct. 6), the Sheraton Mount Royal brings in George Guest and the Foursome to the Normandie Room and this two-acter makes for good eintertainment.

George Guest and his marimba are no strangers to this particular hotel and guy is as busy as ever knocking out everything from "Twelfth Street Rag" to the "Ritual Fire Dance" in a variety of tempos and volume. Mostly it is the volume and break-neck tempo that sets up an offering like this but there are times when something a little quieter and less-hurried would be as effective.

The Foursome, two guys and two gals, are right up there with the current wave of dancing-singing combos now making the nitery circuits. Their style is breezy, pacing okay and songalog, including "Sit Down" from "Guys & Dolls," "Love Is Sweeping the Country" and "Rustle in Her Bustle," makes for good listening in this room. Group break up warbling with a hep boogie terp which picks up biggest reception and then bow out aptly enough with a song called "Breathless."

Femcee Norma Hutton sparks the Max Chamitov orch with her songs during dansapation sets and the Moodie trio does relief chores. Newt.

Reno, Sept. 24.

Victor Borge, Ben Yost Royal Guards (5), Peiro Bros. (2), Golden Girls (7), Sterling Young Orch; no cover or minimum.

In 50 minutes of suave but hilarious humor, Victor Borge casually doubles up even the most hardened patrons. His humble self-spoofing, tossed off like a half-embarrassed kid, builds on the laugh barometer. He capitalizes on every item and makes a mint on chortles and guffaws.

Feeling his way with intro chatter, Borge tests with good jokes and ridiculous stories. The continuous piling of gags, sustained them for several minutes, keeps crowd alert for the next mumble which may be the one that splits the girdle.

With a "grand concert" imminent, Borge keeps devotees hanging mercilessly until those who really want to hear his piano are ready to scream. When he finally gets around to the 88, music lovers can never quite relax for fear the next note will be the last, or that he will fall off the bench. Even in the midst of a boff arrangement, with his face a study of serious attention to his craft, there is an air of impending mischief. The combo of piano and humor is woven into a smooth entertainment for multi-encores.

The Ben Yost Royal Guards are shattering the room with their strong pipes. Fronting tenor, bass or baritone on mike as they do, the featured singer usually drowns other four. When the quintet steps back for unison blasting, the orch keeps real sound at bay. Nevertheless, customers are impressed with the big voices which take turns on the medleys. They're dashing in their red jackets.

Peiro Bros. get this show off fast with some sensash juggling. They build up to a period of double juggling of hats and cigs while tossing Indian clubs. A brick-building routine in which they keep adding bricks in a vise between hands is clicko.

Golden Girls are sexy in opener and Latin wiggle proceding Borge. Mark.

Sans Souci, Miami B'ch

Miami Beach, Sept. 26.

Jimmy Burrell, Ann Herman Dancers, Mal Malkin Orch; $2 minimum.

Personable Jimmy Burrell sets well with the regulars who make this smart hotel room a habit. Though tending to over-deliver some of his material, he keeps them mitt-happy all the way with an intelligent blending of tunes. He easily embraces the high ranging arrangements set up for him, which include "Lovely Way To Spend An Evening," "Pigalle," "Wish You Were Here," "Gonna Live Till I Die" and for the encore segment "Belles Of Duena," medley of pop ballads, "Yiddishe Momma" and for the palm-payoff a sock "Granada."

Ann Herman dancers set up mamba and samba ideas for the Latin addicts in artful style. Mal Malkin's pianistics and orch ideas keep the floor well filled for the dansapation. Lary.

Chi Legit Scene Perks; 'Guys' $37,800, 'Fourposter' $24,200, 'Camera' $18,900

Chicago, Sept. 30.

Chi legit scene picked up, with "Fourposter" hypoing the take with almost capacity business for the first subscription week. "Guys and Dolls" also jumped with the last six weeks' notice, with the Wednesday matinee going very well.

Since last week, the booking office has been very busy, and has set "The Fig Leaf" into the Selwyn, Oct. 8 and "Tree Grows in Brooklyn" at the Great Northern Nov. 10. It looks likely that "Top Banana" will follow "Guys and Dolls" in November, but "Call Me Madam" might get the nod. This means that all the available houses will be full for the next two months, unless some attraction drops by the wayside.

Estimates for Last Week

"Fourposter," Blackstone (1st wk) ($4.20; 1,534). Sparkling $24,200 for the first week.

"Guys and Dolls," Shubert (32d wk) ($6; 2,100). Wednesday matinee was excellent with $37,800 for the week.

"I Am a Camera," Harris (2d wk) ($4.40; 1,000). Very bright $18,900.

"Stalag 17," Erlanger (4th wk) ($4.40; 1,334). Brisk $20,000 for eight shows.

'PACIFIC' SOCK $45,200 IN FULL WEEK AT FRESNO

Fresno, Cal., Sept. 30.

Normally a fair one-night stand for strong touring shows, this town turned itself virtually upside down last week for "South Pacific," shelling out $45,200 for eight performances at the Memorial Auditorium. It was strictly SRO all the way.

The Rodgers-Hammerstein musical, with Janet Blair and Webb Tilton starred, is playing Seattle this week.

Israel's Philharmonic Opens in Tel Aviv, Oct. 6

Tel Aviv, Sept. 30.

The Israel Philharmonic will open its winter season here Oct. 6 with Jasha Horenstein conducting and pianist Rudolf Sorkin as soloist. Josef Rosenthal is the newly-appointed general secretary of the orch. Opening concerts in Jerusalem and Haifa will be Oct. 9 and 13 respectively.

reverse of Atkinson's regarding the performance. Where the Times critic had merely suggested that the playing was "almost too reasonable" and might have been "more intensely stylized in the spirit of caricature," Kerr chided the troupe for overacting, and commented, "A too severe attention to manner has driven all the heart out of the piece, and after we have taken our pleasure in looking at these porcelain figures, we find it almost impossible to listen to them."

Except for a few favorable observations of individual actors "who sneak in something independently amusing," he rapped the leads, noted that the between-acts music by a strong ensemble is "chaste and altogether genteel" and concluded that "quaintness and charm have been substituted for gusto, and the Pickwickian revels have been turned into a self-conscious costume ball."

Thus far, the traditional barrage of letters-to-the-editor has not erupted, nor have any of the disagreeing critics begun needling each other in print (not about this show, at least). But there are already mutterings in managerial circles along the general lines that the reviewers themselves don't know what they like. Also, referring to the sellout business being done by "Wish You Were Here," which was generally panned, there have been a few suggestions that the aisle-sitters have "lost touch" with the public.

'Roberts' Fair $18,100 In Three-Way Split

Worcester, Sept. 30.

"Mister Roberts," with Tod Andrews in the title part, grossed a fair $18,100 last week in eight performances spread over three stands. The Thomas Heggen-Joshua Logan play, produced by Leland Hayward, is continuing one-nighters this week.

Show got away to a nice $10,700 in four performances Monday-Wednesday (22-24) at the State, Portland; added $2,200 in a one-nighter Thursday (25) at the Palace, Manchester, N. H., and wound up the string with $5,200 in three times Friday-Saturday (26-27) at the Elm Street Theatre here.

'Girl' $15,800, 'Moon' 17½G, S.F.

San Francisco, Sept. 30.

"Don Juan in Hell," which opened Monday (22) at the Curran, got smash crix reviews.

"Bell, Book and Candle," with Joan Bennett and Zachary Scott, opened last night (29) at the Geary. Show is scaled to $4.20.

Estimates for Last Week

"Don Juan in Hell," Curran (1st wk) (D-$4.20; 1,758) (Charles Boyer, Charles Laughton, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Agnes Moorehead). Hefty $33,500.

"Country Girl," Geary (3d wk) (D-$4.20; 1,550) (Robert Young, Dane Clark, Nancy Kelly). Slipped to $15,800. (Previous week underquoted; was $19,400).

"Moon Is Blue," Alcazar (1st wk) (C-$4.20; 1,157) (David Niven, Diana Lynn, Murray Hamilton). Good $17,500.

'JOLLYANNA' OK $46,700, 'BELL' THIN $14,400, L.A.

Los Angeles, Sept. 30.

Start of a new legit operation in town tonight (Tues.) by veteran Henry Duffy is being eyed hopefully by local legiters. Duffy, who opens a projected season with "Affairs of State" at the Carthay Circle, has long had a wide following here.

Estimates for Last Week

"Bell, Book & Candle," Biltmore (2d wk) ($4.20; 1,636) (Joan Bennett, Zachary Scott). About $14,400 for a thin $29,500 on two weeks; around 40% of capacity and dangerously close to the break-even mark. Replaced last night (29) by "Country Girl."

"Jollyanna," Philharmonic Aud (3d wk) ($4.80; 2,670) (Bobby Clark, Mitzi Gaynor. Did $46,700 in the next-to-closing frame. Winds this Saturday (4) to end the 1952 Civic Light Opera Assn. season.

'Nina' Lukewarm $12,000 In Portland Premiere

Portland, Ore., Sept. 30.

Edward Everett Horton in "Nina" grossed a mild $12,000 in five evening performances and one matinee at the Mayfair Theatre last week (22-27). This was the Coast premiere of the play, with Horton directing as well as taking the starring role.

The 1,500-seat house was scaled at $3.60.

'Paris' $14,300, Mont'l

Montreal, Sept. 30.

Cornelia Otis Skinner's solo production, "Paris '90," drew $14,300 at Her Majesty's Theatre last week, with prices in this 1,704-seater scaled to $3.38.

"Bagels and Yox" is current, with a good advance registered.

'Blondes' $26,700, Toronto

Toronto, Sept. 30.

"Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," with Iva Withers, grossed a very good $26,700 at the Royal Alexandra here, with the 1,525-seater scaled at $4.50 top, tax included.

Though matinees were poor, piece picked up at mid-week, with Friday-Saturday nights sold out.

'LADIES' 10G, PHILLY

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.

"Good Night Ladies" dropped to $10,000 in its third Erlanger week, but will remain for a fourth, with a nice profit to all at the figure.

Regular stage season opened Monday (29) with "Time of the Cuckoo" playing to capacity at the Walnut. Show is being presented here under Theater Guild-American Theater Society auspices.

B'way Up Again; 'Wish' SRO $52,200, 'S.P.' Gets Hot $49,800, Fonda $26,400, 'Animal' $19,300, 'Fourposter' $18,400

Business took another spurt on Broadway last week. Conditions were better from the start than for the previous healthy stanza, and several shows registered their best grosses in recent months.

The total gross for all 14 shows last week was $415,400, or 83% of capacity. Week before last the total for all 14 entries was $396,900, or 81%, compared with previous week's 382,300, or 82% for 13 offerings.

A year ago last week the total for all 14 shows was $409,300, or 80% of capacity, a drop of 6% from the week before.

Of the new shows, "Mr. Pickwick" had a fair first full week and is a prospect for at least a moderate run, with intensive promotion efforts a factor. "An Evening with Beatrice Lillie" opens tomorrow night (Thurs.) and next week brings a revival of Somerset Maugham's "Sacred Flame" and the Jule Styne-George Abbott production of "In Any Language," an Edmund Beloin-Henry Garson comedy starring Uta Hagen. "Top Banana" closes Saturday (4) to tour.

"Wish You Were Here" again topped itself last week, for the first time having standees at all performances and leading the gross list for the third successive week. "Guys and Dolls," "King and I" and "Pal Joey" also went clean and "South Pacific," now well into its fourth year, zoomed to near-capacity.

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical Comedy), MD (Musical Drama), O (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to top prices; number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 20% amusement tax, but grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of tax.

"Fourposter," Barrymore (49th wk) (C-$4.80; 1,060; $24,996) (Betty Field, Burgess Meredith). Over $18,400 (previous week, $15,200).

"Guys and Dolls," 46th St. (97th wk) (MC-$6.60; 1,319; $43,904). As usual, $44,000.

"King and I," St. James (79th wk) (MD-$7.20; 1,571; $51,717). Over $51,700 (previous week, $51,600).

"Male Animal," Music Box (22d wk) (C-$4.80; 1,012; $25,903) (Elliott Nugent, Martha Scott, Robert Preston). Over $19,300 (previous week, $17,000).

"Moon Is Blue," Miller (82d wk) (C-$4.80; 920; $21,586) (Donald Cook, Barry Nelson, Janet Riley). Nearly $12,300 (previous week, $10,800.

"Mr. Pickwick," Plymouth (2d wk) (CD-$4.80; 1,063; $29,019). First full week, $12,200 (previous week, first five performances got $9,100).

"Mrs. McThing," Morosco (25th wk) (C-$4.80; 912; $26,800) (Helen Hayes). With the star's illness forcing cancellation of one performance, the show drew $19,600 in seven times (previous week, $20,100 on eight performances).

"New Faces," Royale (20th wk) (R-$6; 1,035; $30,600). Almost $29,800 (previous week, $29,300).

"Pal Joey," Broadhurst (39th wk) (MC-$6.60; 1,160; $39,602) (Vivienne Segal, Harold Lang). Nearly $39,900 (previous week, $39,700).

"Point of No Return," Alvin (37th wk) (D-$4.80-$6; 1,331; $37,924) (Henry Fonda). Almost $26,400 (previous week, $22,700).

"South Pacific," Majestic (180th wk) (MC-$6; 1,659; $50,186) (Martha Wright, George Britton). Over $49,800 (previous week, $45,800).

"Top Banana," Winter Garden (44th wk) (MC-$6.60-$7.20; 1,519; $51,881) (Phil Silvers). Nearly $39,800 (previous week, $34,400); closing Saturday night (4), to tour.

"Wish You Were Here," Imperial (14th wk) (MC-$7.20; 1,400; $52,080). Complete sellout for first time, with standees at all performances and again the town's top grosser at $52,170 (previous week, $51,800).

OPENING THIS WEEK

"Evening with Beatrice Lillie," Booth (R-$6; 900; $26,000) (Beatrice Lillie, Reginald Gardiner). Edward Duryea Dowling production of program of sketches and songs from the co-stars' former shows; opens tomorrow night (Thurs.).

'Language' $11,800, 'Bern.' $13,100, Hub

Boston, Sept. 30.

Two newcomers, "Bernardine" at the Wilbur and "In Any Language" at the Plymouth, bowed into town last week with satisfactory but not outstanding results. Each received lukewarm critical nods. "Bagels and Yox," in its final frame at the Shubert, rebounded from its second week, which was slapped by the Jewish holidays.

Bowing in next Monday (6) are "Jane" at the Colonial, "Paris '90" at the Majestic, and Gilbert & Sullivan Co. at the Shubert. Two week stands are skedded for each.

Estimates for Last Week

"Bagels and Yox," Shubert (3rd wk) ($3.60; 1,700). Picked up for the the finale, winding with an okay $21,000. House currently dark.

"Bernardine," Wilbur (1st wk) ($3.60; 1,200). Nabbed $13,100 for the initialer. Final week current.

"In Any Language," Plymouth (1st wk) $3.60; 1,200). Fairish $11,800 for first week.

'MADAM' HEFTY $47,000 IN MINNEAPOLIS WEEK

Minneapolis, Sept. 30.

Second of the Theatre Guild subscription offerings, "Call Me Madam" drew virtual capacity for six nights and two matinees here last week. At $4.80 top (less for season subscribers), it grossed just under $47,000, a hefty figure, in the 1,859-seat Lyceum.

Attraction moved over to St. Paul from here, for an entire week at the Auditorium, ordinarily a two-night stand.

The South Dakota Black Hills Passion Play is current for a fortnight under Knights of Columbus sponsorship.

'Cuckoo' Fine 10G in 4 In Wilmington Teeoff

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 30.

Combination of first attraction of season and first in Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription series, Shirley Booth in "The Time of the Cuckoo," drew excellent $10,000 gross in four performances at the 1,223-seat Playhouse Sept. 25-27. All three nights were sellouts and the usually weak Saturday matinee also came through in fine fashion.

Next premiere will be Moss Hart's "The Climate of Eden," in for three days beginning Oct. 9.

'Okla.' $18,800, Cleve.

Cleveland, Sept. 30.

Cleveland's legit season got off satisfactorily with "Oklahoma" last week at the Hanna. House has gone dark again until Phil Silvers in "Top Banana" arrives here Oct. 20.

Touring edition of the Hammerstein-Rodgers musical rolled up an excellent $18,800 on its eighth visit here. It played at a $4.35 top in the 1,500-seat house, managed by Milton Krantz.

the non-Negro rule might be allowed to drop.

Entire matter was handled in that way, and has been played down subsequently. Those instrumental in the move hope to remain in the background, primarily to avoid involvement in possible future incidents which might impair their usefulness in similar situations.

Under the revised policy, Negro members of the "Eden" cast, numbering 12 of the 27-actor troupe, will not only be accepted as guests at the hotel, but will have the use of the dining room and all other facilities of the establishment. It's regarded as an encouraging move in the efforts of actor-manager groups to improve the hotel situation for Negroes on the road, particularly in southern and semi-southern cities.

terms of a 52-week contract, it's the equivalent of a $35,000,000 deal.

A source close to the deal said this week "the money is pouring in."

Ted Bates is the agency handling the $2,000,000 spot splurge.

Chevrolet's Mutual Deal

Meanwhile, Chevrolet division of General Motors will pick up the tab for the Mutual coverage of the elections on Nov. 4. Web will cancel out its regular shows (except for news periods) after 7 p.m.

It means added coin for the web, which had no national sponsor for its conventioncasts and instead co-opped the Chicago pickups. On the other skeins, Admiral (ABC), Philco (NBC) and Westinghouse (CBS) are sponsoring Election night coverage.

MBS will feed its 560 affiliates and also pick up numerous points to give full reports on important local, state and county contests. Full stable of MBS commentators and newsmen will be used and 20,000-25,000 miles of additional hookups will be used. Agency is Campbell-Ewald.

Radio Reaps Bonanza

Politicos are using more radio this year than in the 1948 Presidential campaign, according to ABC sales toppers. Dollar volume already booked on the web as of this week is running 33% ahead of the same period in the last Presidential race.

Purchases for candidates on ABC and ABC-TV already exceed the figure for the entire campaign on the web in '48. However, at that time the video skein was not yet on the air.

Bulk of the political coin is going to radio, which the AM boys are citing as evidence that the sound medium is still potent from the point of view of its coverage, economy and impact.

Local stations are also witnessing a boom in spot biz from the candidates, with coin coming from the national committees as well as the local organizations. National Assn. of Radio & TV Station Representatives has been making presentations to the agencies involved, on the basis of helping them to use selective spotting of AM and TV to best advantage. Talk was given last week to Tucker Scott, of BBD&O, and Linnea Nelson, of Kudner, both working on the GOP timebuying. Yesterday (Tues.) the spiel was made for William White, of the Joseph Katz agency, which is handling the Democrats' purchases.

Presentations will also be made to independent citizens committees and other groups buying time for their candidates. Idea is to brief the execs concerned on availabilities in spot broadcasting.

founded by the turn of events. Performers who in the past were only too anxious to embrace a cause on behalf of their favorite candidate, it's claimed, are now beating a hasty retreat when requested to throw in their support.

"It's as though they're afraid to commit themselves for fear of reprisals," one of the key committeemen told VARIETY. "Maybe 'Red Channels' and the McCarran Committee have thrown a scare into them so that they now fear publicly expressing themselves on any political issue, even if it's Democrat vs. Republican. Maybe the advertising agencies and their clients, serving both Republican and Democratic consumers, don't want to risk having their talent identify themselves with one or the other. Whatever the reason, there's an almost ominous cloak of secrecy and silence veiling the retreat of show biz personalities."

From the networks and the agencies, however, have come categorical denials of any pressure being exerted on talent to "lay off" either on behalf of Stevenson or Eisenhower. Some of the agencies assert that such dictation would be preposterous in view of the fact that the key agency personnel are themselves divided in favor of one or the other candidate.

The networks take the same view. At CBS, for example, it's no secret that, while board chairman William S. Paley's sympathies lie with the Eisenhower camp, the network's president, Frank Stanton, is a Stevenson supporter.

Ardrev Group Produces Stevenson Pic for Tele

Screenwriter Robert Ardrey and a group of associates have turned out a 15-minute documentary on Gov. Adlai Stevenson at a cost of $3,500. Unusual twist, according to Ardrey, is that Hollywood professionals had estimated a $15,000 budget would be required.

Ardrey and an associate, Joseph Parker, lensed the film, "The Stevenson Story," in Illinois. Also participating in the production were Philip Dunne, Ernest Pascal and Julius Epstein. Film is designed for TV-ing.

taken by the West towards intolerance since the freedom-loving countries went to war in 1939 to put down totalitarian ideas." The paper concluded with a plea to America not to copy the Hitler tactics, because Chaplin "uses his genius to preach the gospel of peace and plenty in a world arming for war." The Observer said that should the American authorities revoke Chaplin's permit to return, they would be acting "within their own rights but rather shabbily and with little sense of logic."

Reynolds News made the Chaplin story its front-page lead and carried quotes from prominent British film personalities, all of whom were unanimous in extending a welcome to Chaplin to stay and work in London.

All the national press covered the Chaplin arrival from Cherbourg and followed up with further feature stories following his Savoy press conference.

The Chaplin welcome has been spontaneously echoed by the press of the country and this has been followed by an invitation from the corporation of Blackpool, leading northern pleasure resort, for the Hollywood star to visit the city. Assurance has been given that the entire promenade would be closed, so that Chaplin could drive comfortably through with his family. This is the first time in the history of Blackpool that such an assurance has been given.

Dems, GOP Spending 'Every Nickel They Can Raise' on AM-TV Windup

Despite charges and countercharges of "the other fellow is spending more money than us on a radio and tele blitz," both major political parties are going ahead with plans for heavy broadcast campaigns to push their candidates in a dozen critical states. Each will spend "every nickel they can raise," according to informed industry sources.

Although a $2,000,000 plan had been blueprinted for the Republican candidate, the expenditures in behalf of Gen. Eisenhower will probably not reach that figure, due to the fact that the funds may not be raised. It's likely, however, that several hundred thousand dollars will be collected for this purpose and the plan scaled down accordingly.

National Assn. of Radio & TV Station Representatives during the past two weeks held spot clinics with Tucker Scott, of BBD&O, and Linnea Nelson, of Kudner, for the GOP; and with William White, of Joseph Katz agency, for the Dems. Both parties asked the reps to provide them with data on availabilities and the individual stations' policies regarding political spots. Both said that orders, accompanied by checks and instructions, will be in the hands of the reps by this week.

No Time Relinquished

The Dems' blast at the GOP plan questioned the ethics of big corporations giving over their time to the Republicans. However, NARTSR conducted a survey of its members Monday (6) and reported

$50,000,000 'Gamble' Hit For Video; Films Might Take the Hint—Sarnoff

Brigadier-General David Sarnoff, for all of television's inroads on the picture business, adheres to the premise that "give the public outstanding pictures and they'll leave their homes to see them."

On the subject of subscription TV, he repeats that "since we all know that the industry has several devices for so-called tollvision or paid TV, obviously the public demand for it is limited, else we would have been compelled to service the public."

"Of course," he continues, "whereas the broadcasting industry put $50,000,000 on the line before a dime came back to it from TV, Hollywood refuses to give its best pictures to TV, on a sponsored or subscription basis, for the very good reason that a $1,000,000-$2,000,000 production gets back $3,000,000 to $10,000,000 at the theatre boxoffices. Obviously that is better business than the relatively few thousands from TV, but suppose also that, like TV, it experimented — maybe the grossing potentials will not be as limited as appears to be now."

Too Much Hubbub, Hub Station KO's Ray Vocals

Boston, Oct. 7.

As a result of phone calls and letters from femme listeners squawking that the wailing of Johnny Ray is not conducive to efficient housekeeping, general manager Norman Furman of indie WBMS has ruled that henceforth airing the singer's disks will be tabu over his station.

According to housewives, Ray's vocal calisthenics disturb the serenity of their homes, making chores difficult. Consequently, station is substituting the more melodic show tunes and light classical numbers for "Cry" and "Little White Cloud."

Candidate AM, TV Pull Blurred Till Campaign Windup

Comparative radio and television popularity of the two Presidential candidates, which might be judged from the size of the audiences tuned into their campaign speeches, will not be pinpointed until about a week before the election. Execs of all the rating services and major networks believe that any attempt to measure such popularity at this time would be foolhardy and at best would give only a confused picture of the actual situation.

Chief reason for their attitude is the fact that there are so many factors which could confuse the issue. It's pointed out, for example, that the choice of networks to carry

N.Y. French Casino Woos Sugar Ray's Fancy Dance

Deal is on for middleweight champ Sugar Ray Robinson to play the French Casino, N.Y., starting Nov. 7. Last week Robinson signed an exclusive theatrical representation deal with Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp. Boxer has been working on a dance turn which he has performed on television.

The French Casino has been angling for several names. Spot had put in bids for Milton Berle and attempted to get the Ritz Bros. Both turned down the offer and the cafe has been shopping around for another angle to hypo biz.

Glaser, incidentally, also worked out several one-night deals for Jersey Joe Walcott when he held the heavyweight crown.

NASHVILLE MINTS COIN FROM CORN

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Nashville, Oct. 7.

Nashville, population 200,000, is today the hottest music town in the country. While Tin Pan Alleyites have been singing the blues for the past few years, the self-styled hillbilly publishers and songwriters have their "Tin Pan Valley" here, mopping up with an unprecedented succession of country clicks that have turned all ears in the music biz southwards to Tennessee.

Nashville's music biz has already showed that it's no freak one-shot operation. It's demonstrated over the past 10 years that there's as much solid loot in the hominy-grits market as there is in the standard business. Although no precise statistics are available, trade execs estimate that the folk and country field now accounts for about one-third of the total sheet music and disk gross sales. That is the result not only of such spectacular hits as "Tennessee Waltz," "Cold Cold Heart" and the current "Half as Much," but in the stream of steady-selling hillbilly numbers which never even impinge on the metropolitan cities.

With Nashville as the core, country music fans out through the south, from North Carolina to

70,000,000 See Series on TV

World Series this year has won hands down the honor of playing to more television viewers than any other event in history. While actual ratings on the baseball classic are not yet in, preliminary estimates by the NBC-TV research department predict the games were seen by a cumulative audience of between 65,000,000 to 70,000,000 persons, topping the 51,000,000 attracted by the Republican national convention last July, the previous high.

NBC is basing its estimate on the size of the network it lined up for the games. Games are being beamed to the full complement of NBC's 64 interconnected markets, with only Albuquerque and Brownsville, Tex., excluded because they are not yet linked to the transcontinental network lines. In addition, NBC expects the Series to draw ratings of about 75, which would also boost the size of the total cumulative audience.

Another factor the web expects to hike the size of the audience is the Series' going past the first four games, which permitted for a Sunday afternoon contest. That single day probably brought in a number of viewers who previously had no chance to watch the games on their TV sets, which again would boost the overall total.

Legit Investors 'Suckers,' 'Idealists,' Sez Sherwood; New Writers Needed

Boston, Oct. 7.

Anyone who invests in the theatre today is either a "sucker" or an "idealist," with the entire setup a "dreary economic morass," according to playwright Robert E. Sherwood, who was luncheon guest speaker at the first annual convention of the New England Theatre Conference at Hotel Statler last week. However, he did add that while there are very few suckers around nowadays, fortunately, there are still some idealists.

Stating that grave financial problems confront the theatre today, Sherwood pointed out that such successful Broadway productions as "Street Scene" and "Lost in the Stars" lost money on the road despite good biz. Revealing the gloomy fact that he's lost more money investing in his own plays during the past 12 years than he received in royalties, he paralleled his case with the discouraging experience of the Playwrights Co., which produced five hits in six tries during the 1946-49 period but failed to make money.

Levelling a beef at dramatists who fail to keep pace with the times, he also bemoaned the dearth of new playwrights, placing much of the blame of this sorry condition on lack of opportunity of youngsters outside New York and a couple of other major cities to see professional plays. He also lambasted the defeatist attitude of some of the younger scripters, who have suggested to him that there is

Waldorf Wants Lillie; Dietrich, Coward Out

Marlene Dietrich has turned down making her nitery debut at the Empire Room of the Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y., and the Noel Coward possibility for this room is also up in the air, so Beatrice Lillie is being discussed.

The Waldorf's new talent operation is on a special plane, away from the general Hilton Hotels "route." The idea is to make the class room "the Palace" for unique cafe acts.

Bonifaces Beam Because Beizbol Boffs B'way Biz

The full seven-game subway World Series between the N. Y. Yankees and the Brooklyn Dodgers increased cafe business all over town. Hotels, although below capacity, also had a considerable hypo in bookings and the restaurant business took a sharp upswing during the baseball blowoff.

The heaviest increase came in the Broadway sector with the Latin Quarter hitting the biggest gain. Assistant manager Max Selette declared there had been turnaways over the weekend. Other cafes on the Stem got hefty upbeats.

Leon & Eddie's also noted a pickup from World Series crowds. The French Casino biz improved somewhat as did the new Club 500. The eastsideries, most of which were doing well even without additional series coin, also noted a rise.

Despite the pickup, bonifaces still feel that the ideal series for niteries is one in which only one New York team participates. A winner from another city brings in a lot of additional spenders. There were plenty of out-of-towners on hand for the event ending yesterday (Tues.), but the tourism increases considerably when a team off the subway beat wins in one league.

Samia Gamal, Pat King Team for Dallas Date

Dallas, Oct. 7.

Samia Gamal, Egyptian dancer, and sister-in-law Patricia King, 19, Houston heiress, have signed for a 10-night date at the Sky Club here.

They open Oct. 23, when Miss King debuts as a pro vocalist. Shepherd (Sonny) King, her brother, is married to Miss Gamal.

It's Just Like Old Times; Gal Even Tossed in Pool At Marion Davies' Shindig

By SHEILAH GRAHAM

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

No one knows why Marion Davies gave the gargantuan party for Johnnie Ray last Thursday Eve.. Least of all Mr. Little White Cloud himself whom she'd never met before, and who walked around with a dazed face saying, "It's crazy—but wonderful."

The party was too fantastic to remember who it was given for or why. This was the old Hollywood as we used to read about it. Two dance orchestras, 20 serenading violinists, a Roman sarcophagus filled with magnums of champagne, 60 servants, huge tents, replicas of El Morocco (without the zebra stripes). One room supposedly represented the Stork Club, another 21. Some 50 reporters (including a rep from the Brewery Gulch Gazette from Arizona, and their relations), 25 photogs, Look, Life, every wire service, newsreels, TV, nonstop, fan mag, flash bulbs, gaudy, bawdy, it cost Miss Davies anything from $15,000 to $25,000.

But something was missing—the ghosts of Arbuckle, Clara Bow, John Gilbert, Fairbanks, Sr., Nor-

Boom in Foreign Femme Film Stars As H'wood Fatales Fail to Develop

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

A whole new crop of femme stars, all foreign, may emerge from a group of Hollywood productions currently being filmed abroad. In a season when the hopper has turned out practically no new personalities of startling worth other than Marilyn Monroe—strictly American—the prospect looks promising, and Hollywood producers may well regard first glimpse of upcoming actresses with interest.

Four present Hollywood films have drawn upon fresh foreign talent, either totally or practically unknown to American audiences, for appearance opposite top male stars, and at least one more is in the immediate offing. Femmes have been cast, not because of any shortage here, but to impress new acting blood and because femmes fit more authoritatively into the story.

William Perlberg and George Seaton set a young Parisienne actress named Nicole Maurey for lead role opposite Bing Crosby in "Little Boy Lost," thesp's first American appearance. When troupe returns to Hollywood after about two weeks of locations in Paris, she will accompany it, with possibility she may remain here.

Stanley Kramer imported Italian actress Milly Vitale for "The Juggler," opposite Kirk Douglas. She arrived on Coast about four weeks ago, but now is in Israel with company, where several weeks will be devoted to exteriors.

Warners cast Beatrice Campbell, British player, with Errol Flynn in "The Sea Rogue," for her initial appearance in a Hollywood picture. Picture is being made entirely abroad, so Miss Campbell won't return here with troupe. If studio likes her work in finished product, it may then send for her.

Same studio assigned Joan Rice, whose only other American appearance was in Walt Disney's

Brahm's Anti-Lullaby

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Director John Brahm is having no trouble readjusting himself to the tempo of telepix.

Brahm had five-and-a-half months to direct "Thief of Venice," 62 shooting days on "Miracle of Fatima," but on his vidpix debut he readily whipped through 21 script pages the first day's shooting on a three-day sked for Edward Lewis Productions' "Drawing Room A."

W. Germany Still Favors U.S. Films

Berlin, Sept. 30.

The trend in film boxoffice popularity in West Germany's most important key cities (including West Berlin) last month showed American films still on top. U.S. pix had 43.6% of playdates as compared with 46.6% in July, followed by German films with 26.8%. French films handled 7.1% of dates while Italian pix got 3.4%.

The German pic, "Prince of Pappenheim" (Prisma) was released in a number of key cities and immediately went ahead to become first in grosses. The most successful U.S. film in August was "You're in Army Now" (WB). Next best grossing American pix were "Iwo Jima" (Rep), holding fifth spot; "Adam's Rib" (M-G), sixth; "Anne of Indies" (20th), seventh; and "Tokyo File 201" (RKO), 11th.

The most successful distributor last month was Prisma, a German outfit. Metro, which held top position in June and July, was pushed back to second spot while Warners jumped from sixth to the third. Gloria, which handles Republic product, reached the fourth place.

The public showed a preference for comedies in the month with a 35.6% ratio as compared with dramatic films, 32.7%, and adventure pix, 30.9%.

Chaplin Guest at Royal Film Showing; Busy Paris Schedule Set

London, Oct. 7.

After a week of indecision, it is now definite that Charles Chaplin will attend the royal film performance at the Empire, Leicester Square, on Oct. 27. He will be present as a guest but is unlikely to participate in the stageshow which will follow the screening.

There is still some doubt as to whether he will be available the following week to participate actively in the command vaudeville show at the Palladium. Chaplin has heavy commitments in Paris, but if an official invitation is forthcoming, will endeavor to rearrange his schedule to make a personal appearance. If he does, he will, with other stars, be presented to Queen Elizabeth and other members of the royal family.

Meantime, press and public comments on Chaplin's re-entry hassle are continuing. Tom O'Brien, MP., chairman of the Trades Union Congress and general secretary of National Assn. of Theatres and Kine Employees, told association members at a meeting in Morecambe (coinciding with the Labor Party conference) that the decision of the U. S. Attorney General to carry out an investigation had destroyed overnight his work and that of his colleagues in favor of Anglo-American co-operation. He described the utterances as undemocratic and unfair, alleging they were designed to discredit a distinguished world citizen.

"This sort of thing," he opined, "is going to do more harm to the efforts of all political parties in this country and individuals in promoting international understanding. The genius of Charles Chaplin, and many more like him is that of artistry which must re-

L.A. Red Hearings Recess to Nov. 17; Probers Assailed

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

House Red probers recessed their second Coast hearings today (Tues.) after again postponing the promised windup of "odds and ends" connected with the investigation of Communist infiltration of Hollywood. Bulk of film industry witnesses originally subpoenaed for current sessions have been notified to be on hand when the committee returns here Nov. 17 for more open hearings.

Committee delved into radio and television at yesterday's session that saw a parade of 13 "uncooperative" witnesses hurl charges of "conspiracy, blacklist, collusion" at two committee members who remained to wind up this phase of the hearings. Representatives Clyde Doyle, Democrat; Donald Jackson, Republican, both from the greater Los Angeles area, withstood a five-hour barrage of largely personal invective before prepping today's windup.

Highlight of the session was a blast levelled by character actor Ed Max, who flung upon the hearing room table his World War II medals, shouting: "Take these back to Truman. They used to be known as fruit salad, now they're known as fraud salad. I was proud of them but not any longer. You've negated their importance."

Final witness was grip Paul Perlin, ousted by his IATSE local for alleged Communist sympathies, who charged the committee with

Chi's Cantor-less Gala SRO for Israel; 1G Per Plate Brings $1,000,000

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Sale of $1,000,000 in Israeli bonds was made at the $1,000-a-plate testimonial dinner at the Morrison Hotel here Sunday (5) for Eddie Cantor.

Cantor, who was to have put on a one-man show, is ill on the Coast and couldn't attend. Subbing for the ailing comedian were a host of show biz names, headed by Edward G. Robinson and Sam Levenson, and including Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy, Monica Lewis, Danny O'Neill, Gene Raymond, Jack Carter, Jack Eigen and columnists Irv Kupcinet and Tony Weitzel.

Admission was by purchase or sale of $1,000 or more in Israeli bonds, and the room was SRO.

Bal Tabarin in Paris To Close Indefinitely

Paris, Sept. 30.

Bal Tabarin, 50-year-old Montmartre nitery and landmark of after-dark Paris life, shutters Oct. 31. Closing is announced as being temporary, but no date for reopening has been set and no performers engaged. Report that cabaret would not reopen started when 120 members of the stage personnel including famous French Can-Can dancers received notice that Tabarin would close after present 3-year-old revue, "Reflets," completes its run. The management explained the closure is similar to previous ones because the house must undergo redecoration and repairs.

Tabarin opened in 1903 and is the only nitery of, turn-of-the-century vintage still to be operating. Since the death of Pierre Sandrini, manager and producer, the cabaret has been jointly managed by his widow and Jacques Dubout.

CHEVALIER LOOKS COLD FOR PALACE; SET KAYE

RKO Theatres prexy Sol A. Schwartz talked with Maurice Chevalier for the Palace, New York, during his summer survey abroad, but is not too sanguine how well he will hold up, especially in light of the quick closing of Chevalier's attempt to bring back the Empire, Paris, as a revue theatre.

The Danny Kaye potential for post-New Year's is being worked out now on the Coast by Abe Lastfogel (William Morris agency).

Chevalier has been considering American dates, namely an offer to play El Rancho Vegas, Las Vegas, for four weeks, but the discussions were for him to play it shortly after the first of the year, which he will be unable to do. Meanwhile, he is still trying to straighten out his visa difficulties with the U. S. State Dept.

HAIL CINERAMA'S B.O. PROMISE

Cinerama—A New Milestone

Cinerama is undeniably a significant milestone in the development of the picture business and in the annals of show biz. Its likening to the impact of Vitaphone and the "The Jazz Singer" a quarter of a century ago is inevitable and obvious.

How and in what manner this new "third dimension" sound photographic technique will be adapted to the film industry, as we know it, has been answered, in a large measure, by showmen over the years because they have been traditionally resourceful in adapting all new advances. So, too, will it apply to this new invention. Maybe Cinerama will be feasible mostly for spectacles or outdoor operas. It's like saying that not every film feature has to be made in Technicolor. The current celebration of the diamond jubilee of Thomas A. Edison's recitative of "Mary had a little lamb" into a crude phonograph dramatizes what American ingenuity and industry have done to carry that forward into the $200,000,000 industry that the recording business is today. Many showmen remember the opinion of another doyen of the picture business that "this Vitaphone business can't last; people come to the movies to nap and the sound will keep them awake!"

The current debut of Cinerama at the Broadway Theatre is a collection of shorts, most of which force the conclusion that "this is the cheapest (and best) Cook's Tour possible," as it transports the audience from rollercoasters to La Scala, Milan; from Venice and Vienna to Scots drills, Spanish bullfights and, best of all, a "See America First" that is a honey.

Cinerama may not be limited to subjects of scope and size. Obviously, big musicals, under this system, could make some of those Metro and Warner Bros. filmusicals look like Fanchon & Marco units. But this new "third dimension" has other potentials, least of which is the same type of hypo for the film boxoffice as the advent of sound. The economics will fall in place thereafter if such is the case. True, there are the elements of equipment; three booths, sound-control engineer and picture-control engineer (all spelling out additional personnel); just as there is the realistic recognition that the panoramic screen, the extra booths, and all that goes with it, must cut down on the seats. The Broadway went from 1,600 to 1,250 capacity—but one thing is certain: the theatre is lit, there is a line around the block, they're getting $2.80 top on a reserved-seat basis and extra shows on weekends. This is the kind of b.o. impact that even showmen must recognize makes new scientific adventure a good payoff. Abel.

H'wood Doing Its Share, Now Up To Exhibs—Zukor

Chicago, Oct. 7.

"Good pictures won't do it alone—you must go to work," more than 100 exhibitors were warned at luncheon yesterday (Mon.) by Adolph Zukor, board chairman of Paramount Pictures.

Emphasizing that he was speaking for all Hollywood producers and not merely for Paramount, Zukor told the exhibs that "Hollywood is doing its share; and you must work, harder than ever—with greater showmanship, imagination and exploitation than you've ever used before, if you want to reap the bright future of the motion picture business."

Calling television, ballgames, and special events like prizefights and election results "temporary conditions," Zukor said preselling today's films will get crowds back into the pic houses.

He predicted "tremendous changes" in the film biz, citing Cinerama and other technical advances, but cautioned that even these innovations call for "solid exploitation."

Exhibs Stress Rise In Overhead as Key To Fight Vs. 20% Tax

While theatre business generally is taking on a firmer tone, the continuing rise in overhead is being stressed by many exhibs in their efforts to convince law-makers of the need to repeal the Federal 20% admissions tax.

It's pointed up that a flock of new pix are ringing up grosses of close to the peak 1946 level, but the operating expenses have climbed so considerably since that time that it's virtually impossible to avoid red ink in the ledgers. Only answer, say the showmen, is the tax relief.

Negro-White Theatre In Memphis Nixed By Binford on Walcott Pix

Memphis, Oct. 7.

Lloyd T. Binford, Memphis' baffling censor czar, last week tossed a lefthook at the Joe Walcott-Rocky Marciano fight pic, released by RKO. He banned the films from playing the downtown Warner Theatre because the local house has a Negro gallery—but at the same time he okayed the fight pix to play the downtown Strand, where there are no seating facilities for Negroes.

Carroll Beasley, manager of the Strand, said his theatre had bid for the pic, but was second to the Warner house. Beasley told VARIETY that since the Warner theatre was the highest bidder here, "we naturally expected the picture to play there. But the day before the fight

CINERAMA CAPACITY 35G IN N.Y. DEBUT

Cinerama will be a terrific grosser, judging from its first week ended last night (Tues.) at the Broadway Theatre, N. Y. Playing 17 shows, including three matinees Friday, Saturday and Sunday, it wound up its initial session with $35,000, or virtually capacity for the 1,250-seat house. It is playing two-a-day policy, strictly reserved-seat, with $2.80 top at nights and the lowest price 90c, for weekday matinees.

When the Broadway played legit musicals some years ago it had a 1,900-seat capacity, but for "This Is Cinerama" more than 600 seats have been removed. This was necessary to provide for the large, curved screen and additional projection booths, etc., on the main floor.

Long lines have swamped the theatres boxoffice. While the advance seat sale originally was for just eight weeks, it now has been extended to 16 weeks. Ticket agencies are flooded with orders.

For the first few days, when Cinerama had the World Series as afternoon opposition, the matinees were not completely sold out. But after the second afternoon show last Friday (3), every performance has been capacity.

COMPARE IT TO BIRTH OF SOUND

Public introduction of Cinerama, spectacular process which gives the illusion of tri-dimension, has served to underscore the "new" possibilities on the horizon for the film industry.

Large-screen television for theatres, home-subscription TV as a new outlet for producers, and technological advances in straight filmmaking, along with Cinerama, portend startling changes for the trade. But the big question facing industry leaders centers on Cinerama.

The new film process scored a smash debut at the Broadway Theatre, New York, last Tuesday (30). It obviously thrilled the audience, and reviewers likened it in importance to the advent of sound. Numerous dailies across the country gave it page one importance.

As for its future, a couple of pioneers, in statements to VARIETY, revealed themselves to be greatly impressed with Cinerama's potential.

Adolph Zukor, Paramount board chairman, said: "Those who say they can predict what Cinerama can do are wrong for they simply don't know. But I do believe it's an opening wedge on the future, and the possibilities are enormous,

'Blossom Time' Due For Mayer Filming, Maybe in Cinerama

Louis B. Mayer's return to the picture business will probably be in a tieup with Cinerama. He now has three properties, the latest of them "Blossom Time," the Sigmund Romberg operetta based on the Franz Schubert melodies and long a Lee & J. J. Shubert theatrical property. Mayer had to sign 39 different contracts to clear "Blossom Time."

The other properties are "Paint Your Wagon," Broadway legit musical of last season, for which he paid $200,000 and a percentage, and "Joseph and His Brethren."

RKO's New Mgt. Has No Qualms About Selling Pictures to Television

Newly-installed heads of RKO, already on record as declaring themselves "unbound by any dedication to the past" so far as television is concerned, frankly are out to grab a buck from TV if it's economically feasible over the long haul. And they'll have no qualms about exhib sensitivities.

On the Ralph Stolkin-Arnold Grant management side, there's been no pre-determination on which course the company will take concerning TV. However, persons close to the syndicate told VARIETY that it would be unwise to dismiss arbitrarily the possibilities of selling pix to video if it's to enhance the position of the company.

So far as possible exhib resentment is concerned, it's claimed that theatremen would unhesitatingly turn to entertainment other than films if it were available and if the profit potential were attractive.

"If they (exhibs) had a Walcott-Marciano fight every night for large-screen television, undoubtedly they'd take it," said a spokesman for the new owners. His point was that exhibs are not bound by any loyalty to distribs and the latter are under no compulsion to do business only with theatremen.

Part of the statement, which was

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Columbia has closed a deal with Robert E. Sherwood for an untitled original as a Rita Hayworth starrer. Price is reported to be $50,000.

MPEA Protests Italy Restricting U.S. Pix Imports

Italian customs authorities in recent weeks have begun to limit the importation of American films. Their action, which runs counter to the 1951 Italo-U. S. film pact, has brought a sharp protest from the Motion Picture Export Assn.

Violation of the agreement, as well as the problem posed by the reinvocation of the controversial Article X of the Italian film law, under which the Rome government fixes rental terms, will be the subject of discussion between John G. McCarthy, MPEA v.p., and Dr. Nicola de Pirro, director general of the Italian governments Entertainment Industry Bureau, this week.

De Pirro and the rest of the Italian government and industry delegation arrived in New York Oct. 6 to attend the "Salute to Italian Films Week." Among the matters he is discussing during his stay here is the proposed expansion of Italian Films Export to include actual distribution of Italo pix.

Italian customs action is a puzzle to foreign department toppers since their deal with the Italian government clearly provided for unrestricted imports. Indirect American financing of IFE to the tune of $2,500,000 over two years, coming from 12½% of the frozen U. S. earnings in Italy, was part of the same agreement. Money is

National Boxoffice Survey

Key City Biz Holds Strongly; 'Ivanhoe' No. 1, 'Quiet' Still 2d, 'Fatima' 3d, 'Pirate' 4th

Despite TV competition from the World Series for matinees, firstrun biz shapes up very strong this session in key cities over the country. Launching of new, virile product, some of it at upped scale, is enabling many houses to land big to socko trade. Several keys covered by VARIETY, such as St. Louis, Chi and Minneapolis, were aided by cold fall weather. However, some spots noted a dent being made in the boxoffice by avid interest in the Presidential campaign.

"Ivanhoe" (M-G), which was champ last week, again is No. 1 by a healthy margin. "Quiet Man" (Rep) held in second spot for the second consecutive week after being leader in the previous stanza.

"Miracle of Fatima" (WB), fourth a week ago, moved up to third position. "Crimson Pirate" (WB) was fourth, only a step behind "Fatima." Fifth money goes to "One Minute to Zero" (RKO).

"Just For You" (Par) is capturing sixth place, while "Somebody Loves Me," from same company, will land seventh. "Monkey Business" (20th) is winding up eighth, with "Son of Paleface" (Par) in ninth slot. "Sudden Fear" (RKO) rounds out the Big 10 list.

"Merry Widow" (M-G) and "Fearless Fagan," also from Metro, are the runner-up films in that order. Former was sixth a week ago.

"Because You're Mine" (M-G), which opened hefty in L. A. and nice in Providence, continued sturdy in second week at huge N. Y. Music Hall. However, one of biggest new entries is "This Is Cinerama," series of shorts in new dimension, preemed in N. Y. in past week. It is near capacity on initial round.

"Lusty Men" (RKO), launched this stanza in five key Texan cities, shapes a winner. This Jerry Wald production is running ahead of "Blue Veil" (RKO), Wald's most recent boxoffice champ. "Way of Gaucho" (20th) is rated fair in Minneapolis. "Beware My Lovely" (RKO), also new, shapes good in Boston. "Everything I Have Is Yours" (M-G) looms fast on initial week in Philly.

"Snows of Kilimanjaro" (20th) continues smash in third round at N. Y. Rivoli. "Untamed Frontier" (U) looms nice in Baltimore. "Les Miserables" (20th), nice in Cleveland, shapes mild in Minneapolis.

"Big Sky" (RKO), sharpe in Portland, Ore., is smooth in Buffalo. "Lady Vanishes" (UA), out on reissue, is doing nicely in St. Louis and in N. Y., latter on extended-run. "Don't Bother to Knock" (20th) looks fine in St. Louis. "Horizons West" (U) is rated good in Chi. "Strange Fascination" (Col) looks mild in Cincy.

"Duel At Silver Creek" (U) shapes stout in Chi and fine in Montreal. "My Man and I" (M-G) is rated poor in Detroit and mild in Frisco.

Snaper in Sharp Blast at Distributors Urges Allied Action on 'Practices'

In one of the strongest blasts yet levelled at distribs, Wilbur Snaper, prexy of Allied States Assn. of Motion Picture Exhibitors, on Monday (6) denounced at a New York press confab the "unsound business practices being used by the distributors," adding that it was the intention of many exhibs who will attend the Allied convention in Chicago, Nov. 17-19, "to urge as drastic action as necessary to correct the practices."

Pointing out that his office has been deluged daily with complaints from Allied's regional offices, Snaper asserted that "there's no sense in kidding about it any more." These complaints, he said, covered every facet of exhib-distrib relationships, ranging from bidding to print problems.

Although he did not elaborate fully on what the "drastic action" would consist of, Snaper said that some exhibs have already threatened to appeal to the Government for regulations to eliminate the "abuses." Other action contemplated, according to Snaper, would be a much stronger setup for the interchange of information regarding distrib policies. This interchange, he said, is now taking place on a broad scope, but he said he couldn't predict what would eventually evolve. Some exhib quarters thought that the new setup might result in some sort of co-relationship among the different territories in the buying of pix.

Although dropping the hint that Government regulations might be sought, the Allied prexy emphasized that his outfit didn't want Federal control. "This is an extreme," he declared.

'Criticized'

"I've been criticized for trying to work out things with distributors on a broad basis instead of narrowing the issues," Snaper de-

'Gum Removers'

"Gum removers," term for exhibs coined by producer Joseph Mankiewicz, was acknowledged by Wilbur Snaper, prexy of Allied States Assn., during his seething rap Monday (6) of distrib trade practices.

"Sure, we're gum removers," Snaper snapped. "With the pictures we've been getting we can't afford to hire help to do the job."

KEY STOCK BUYS BY KEY PIC PERSONALITIES

Washington, Oct. 7.

Austin C. Keough purchased 100 shares of common stock in Paramount Pictures last month to give him a total of 350 shares, the Securities & Exchange Commission reported yesterday (Mon.) in its monthly summary of insider stock transactions. Summary covers the period from Aug. 11 to Sept. 10.

Loew's, Inc., always on the market for stock of Loew's Boston Theatres, picked up an extra 57 shares, giving the parent company a total of 129,991. Steve Broidy purchased 2,000 shares of common in Monogram, now Allied Artists, to raise his holdings to 45,299. He also owns options for 2,000 shares. Norton V. Ritchey made a gift of 1,000 shares but still owns 2,954.

Milton R. Rackmil reported purchasing his first 1,000 shares of Universal Pix common. Joseph M. Viertel acquired 750 shares of Translux common.

While the RKO Theatres deal was on the fire, the David J. Greene Trust bought 5,000 shares of common, to raise its total to 30,800. Greene also has 10,000 shares in a partnership and 3,600 owned jointly with members of his family. A. Louis Oresman bought 5,000 of RKO common, which gave him 27,100.

Co. Prexies Would Bow to Exhibs On Arbitration Issue

Film company presidents appeared this week ready to yield ground on the arbitration front in an effort to win over exhib leaders who have balked over revisions in the projected arbitration plan made by the prexies last month.

Company heads and Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, take up the controversial subject at a New York huddle today (Wed.), with the apparent aim of appeasing the theatremen.

It's insisted in distrib circles that all parties are equally desirous of setting up an arbitration program for the trade, and a full accord is in early prospect. In contrast to this, Allied States prez Wilbur Snaper said in N. Y. on Monday (6) in effect that completion of an arbitration setup is many months away (see separate story).

Main points fanning the controversy are provisions dealing with awards which may be decided for exhibs in disputes over clearances and phraseology which could be interpreted as giving the Department of Justice or the Federal courts a stronger voice in industry affairs.

'Abitration Here'—Levy

St. Louis, Oct. 7.

Declaring that the plan needs only the finishing touches, Herman M. Levy, general counsel of Theatre Owners of America, stated here today (Tues.) that he sincerely believes that "arbitration is here. There are no suggested

Ross, Caulfield Named In 35G Damage Suit

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Ross-Stillman Productions, prexy Frank Ross, his wife, actress Joan Caulfield, director and stockholder, have been named defendants in a $35,000 damage suit filed in Santa Monica by company attorney Harry Fain.

Complaint relates to "The Lady Says No," starring Miss Caulfield, that she and Ross spent promotion money "extravagantly," converted film's wardrobe to their personal use, spent sums on travel not connected with the pic, used money for personal expenses and employed persons valueless to pic.

Dismiss Dave Loew Suit

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

David Loew's $202,862 suit against New World Productions, involving the Ginger Rogers starrer, "Heartbeat," was dismissed by Judge Harry C. Westover in Federal Court for lack of prosecution.

Plaintiff declared he had loaned the company $200,000 to produce the picture but had been paid only $17,135. Case had been continued several times.

COMPO Speeds P.R. Activity

Preoccupied the past few months with the campaign to repeal the 20% Federal admissions tax, Council of Motion Picture Organizations is now set to intensify its activity along the public relations front.

Three-man exec committee helming COMPO—Sam Pinanski, Trueman Rembusch and Al Lichtman—meets in New York shortly to set the time and place for a fullscale meeting of the 31-man board. Latter conclave will be designed to get the industry org rolling at an all-out pace.

Subjects prominent on the agenda will be the "Movietime" tours and COMPO's speakers bureau lectures. Also due for discussion is the outfit's "protective" work, such as its recent success in inducing a motor car corporation to drop a campaign which, in part, urged the public to see "the best movies on TV." Message had been carried in prominently-placed display copy.

Clark As COMPO Rep

M. R. (Duke) Clark, former Paramount division manager, has been named a special rep for COMPO, it's announced by Robert W. Coyne, special counsel. Clark, making his headquarters in Dallas, will cover the south and west in connection with COMPO's "Movietime" and tax-repeal campaigns.

FCC Tells Pix What TV Points It Wants Clamped

Washington, Oct. 7.

Points which the Federal Communications Commission want to hear from motion picture interests, when they begin presenting the technical and cost aspects of their case for motion picture TV channels on Oct. 20, were outlined over the past weekend in an FCC order. Commission said it would hear the initial phase of the case—presented by the Motion Picture Assn. of America and the National Exhibitors Theatre Television Committee—while sitting en banc.

There will be no cross-examination at this time, from A. T. & T., which is opposing the applications.

In the engineering testimony the Commission wants to know all about the technical requirements and standards for good theatre TV, including the argument on a wider wave band information about the audeo signal, the number of channels which would be required for a theatre system; suggested location of theatre TV service in the spectrum; and details of projection equipment in theatres, including film storage and Eidophor.

The accounting phase is to cover cost studies and use of the radio spectrum. Commission also asked for "A. T. & T. Co. price quotations." This is information the theatre people have not yet been able to obtain from the phone company.

May 1 NPA Ease

Washington, Oct. 7.

The delayed National Production Authority order, easing construction controls on theatres and other amusement projects, has set the effective date for May 1, 1953, instead of April 1, as was informally announced several weeks ago.

Order was put out last week, with NPA Administrator Richard A. McDonald, explaining that the one-month-shove-back was necessitated by the steel strike.

Only the very strongest product was able to contend successfully with the adverse conditions last month at the nation's boxoffices. First-run theatres had to compete, first, with the reopening of schools, then the launching of strong TV show, interest in the final stages of the major league pennant races, and then the starting of the gridiron season. An added handicap was the dent put in a single night's gross by Senator Nixon's national television talk.

Exhibitors found that comedy and light material came through strongest in September, with the top spots taken by "Merry Widow" (M-G) and "Son of Paleface" (Par), according to reports from VARIETY correspondents in 24 key cities. The combination of a musical in color and the venerable stage operetta, plus the Lana Turner name, enabled "Widow" to cop first place.

Close behind was "Paleface," the Bob Hope starrer having the added assets of Jane Russell and Roy Rogers.

"The Quiet Man" (Rep) finished third and would have been higher if it had been launched earlier in the month. John Wayne starrer, one of the first Republic pictures to rate so high in the monthly national b.o. survey, not only is cutting a deep impression all over the country, but is certain to be the company's biggest grosser this year and likely one of its all-time top-grossing films.

"Sudden Fear" (RKO), a big fourth in standings last month, saw Joan Crawford swing back to the top in boxoffice popularity. While it racked up some great playdates and was high grosser in some keys, the film never got past third place all month. "Big Sky," another RKO release, copped fifth despite the handicap of lengthy running time. Some 25 minutes

McDonald Cites Trend Toward Subscription TV

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Comdr. Eugene McDonald, Jr., Zenith Radio prexy and leading proponent of subscription television, has seized upon the success of the recent theatre beaming of the Rocky Marciano-Joe Walcott heavyweight bout as further evidence of the logical trend toward boxoffice video. Calling home TV the "world's champion wrecker of boxoffice attendance," McDonald warns that theatre TV will grab off more and more major sports events and other spectacles unless home sets are equipped to compete on a pay-per-viewer basis.

Zenith topper points out that the heavyweight contest grossed nearly $400,000 from theatre TV, showing in 49 houses. And when more filmeries become equipped for tele, it'll be impossible for the big network advertisers to compete with the theatre interests, he adds. So it's his contention that only by putting home video on a subscription basis will such events be available to the entire nation.

He argues that if every theatre in the country were equipped for TV, that would add up to only 12,000,000 seats. After five years of regular telecast service there are already more than 18,000,000 home sets with an estimated audience of 60,000,000. By making the shows available to both home video, via a pay-as-you-watch device such as Zenith's Phonevision, and theatre closed-circuit TV, the entire country would be covered, McDonald states.

Looking ahead toward the potential TV audience of 100,000,000 persons, McDonald asserts that home and theatre subscription TV could tap a $5,000,000 boxoffice at 10c per viewer if only half the audience participated.

LE VIEN UPPED IN WB NEWS SWITCHES

Plans for closer coordination of Warner News activities was seen behind the executive realignment at Warner Pathe News, with news editor Jack LeVien taking over as assistant general manager. Change puts LeVien into a position as second in command under Warner Pathe prexy Norman Moray. Le Vien will continue as news editor of Warner Pathe newsreel but takes on the added burden of running the administrative end of the company.

Two other changes put Charles Van Bergen into assignment editor's job and Andrew Gold into position of chief of the special productions division, which is concerned with making commercial pix. The department was formerly run by Ned Buddy who has joined a company in Canada making sponsored films.

Last major assignment for Le Vien outside the country was as director of the International Newsreel Pool at the Helsinki Olympic Games, where he was the only U. S. newsreel rep on the pool which fed game coverage to western nations.

SPEED RKO EXEC OVERHAUL

Some Solace

"One thing we know," said an RKO vet, "with Howard Hughes it was a case of borrowed time, but with the Stolkin-Grant management we know just where we stand—sudden death, or else."

The fast moves currently going on at RKO indicate a still faster schedule than the one announced last week by the new management. The latter had timetabled itself for "30 days to get the homeoffice operation properly screened and fully appraised; 60 days for the exchanges; and 90 days for the studio."

The jury is still out within the industry as to what degree RKO plans to continue as a film-maker and not a liquidator.

New York Salutes Italo Filmites In Gala Opening Wedge for U.S. Mkt.

Unique merger of the European film festival technique and American-style glamor ballyhoo launched the Italian industry's big pitch for the American market this week as "Salute to Italian Films Week" opened at the Little Carnegie, New York, Monday (6) for a seven-day stand.

Event, which has the blessing and cooperation of the U. S. industry, is designed to showcase the wide variety of Italian film accomplishments, and demonstrate the rise and progress of what is now Rome's largest single industry.

"Salute Week," arranged by a distinguished sponsoring committee under the chairmanship of Winthrop W. Aldrich and with the cooperation of Alberto Tarchiani, Italian Ambassador to the U. S., got started Monday (6) with a gala premiere of Alberto Lattuada's "The Overcoat," starring Renato Rascel.

Flanked by a color guard, Mayor Vincent Impellitteri addressed the Little Carnegie audience from the festively decorated stage and extended the city's greetings to the members of the Italian delegation who had come from Rome. On the dais with the Mayor were Floyd Blair, president of the New York Philharmonic and representative of the sponsoring committee, and Comm. Nicola de Pirro, director general of the Italian government entertainment industry bureau.

Present here for the festival week are a number of Italy's pic stars, including Silvana Mangano, Marina Berti, Lea Padovani, Carlo Del Poggio, Eleonora Rossi Drago, Gino Cervi and Rascel. Directors imported for the occasion include Lattuada, Luigi Zampa, Renato

New Ceiling on French Cinema Ducats May Hit 'Limelight' Paris Preem

Paris, Oct. 7.

The Pinay regime, in its drive for economic stabilization here, has just slapped a ceiling on film theatre admission prices. According to the decree, the scale now can not be raised above the level of Aug. 31 this year. This might put a crimp in release plans for the Charles Chaplin film, "Limelight." Film is set to open here Oct. 30 at four of the biggest theatres, the Rex, Normandie, Marignan and Marivaux. With the enormous prestige behind it, the great publicity of Chaplin and the rarity of his film appearances, this could easily have qualified for an advanced-price format, with the public probably paying it without a squawk. The freeze puts the top price at $1.

When Metro released "Gone With the Wind" here two years ago, it was done in the wake of the repeal of price ceilings at film houses. Running at a $2 top the film cleaned up in its first exclusive run. Pic has since been spotted in various theatres around town in a sort of continuing first-run. Film is now on the Champs-Elysees at $1.75 top, and still doing big biz. New law will probably not be retroactive, and pic will probably run on for some time.

New ruling also will put a crimp in new spectacle and top product which could be eligible for upped prices on the appeal and scope of a film. This would include such pix as "Quo Vadis" (M-G) and "Snows of Kilimanjaro" (20th).

Dusk to Dawn Show

Albany, Oct. 7.

A dusk-to-dawn show was presented last week by Harry Lamont at the Riverview Drive-in at Rotterdam.

For the regular admission price, the chain operator screened six features. Free coffee and doughnuts, at dawn, were added.

Italo Export Co. May Let Indies Handle 1st Runs

Distribution organization to be set up by Italian Films Export may let independent foreign film importers handle first-run, key-city situations and content itself with taking over from there on in.

Policy was outlined yesterday (Tues.) in New York by Dr. Renato Gualino, general director of IFE, in announcing the agency's plans to establish its own distribution outfit in this country. Setup would get under way with from five to seven exchanges and would be expected to handle anywhere from six to 12 pix annually, most of them dubbed and of the type likely to attract artie and circuit bookings.

Press powwow at Plaza Hotel was attended by Dr. Eitel Monaco, IFE prexy and head of the National Assn. of the Motion Picture and Allied Industries; Comm. Nicola De Pirro, director general of the Italian government's entertainment industry bureau; Comm. Italo Gemini, prexy of the Italian General Assn. of Show Business, and others of the IFE staff.

Gualino explained the decision to enter distribution was based partly

Court Ruling Settles Stockholders' Suit Vs. Col Prexy Harry Cohn

Proposed settlement of a minority stockholders' suit brought in N. Y. Supreme Court against Columbia Pictures prexy Harry Cohn, the company, its officers and directors won approval yesterday (Tues.) from Justice Morris Eder with one exception. This toned down a release contained in the settlement which would have tossed out all claims against Cohn and other defendants after April 11, 1950.

Justice Eder granted the exception after attorney Samuel H. Levinkind, representing William B. Weinberger, holder of 166 shares of common stock, informed the court that he was about to bring a stockholders' derivative action against certain individuals and Columbia as defendants. Levinkind said his complaint concerned matters which are in no way related to the settled suit.

Otherwise, Justice Eder confirmed recommendations of Referee Arthur G. Klein that Cohn's offer of settlement as of Feb. 11, 1952, be adopted as "fair, reasonable and

PICKER EXEC V.P. VICE REISMAN

New RKO controlling group, moving with unexpected speed in its executive personnel realignment, this week made several major changes, including the removal of Phil Reisman as foreign department v.p. and the appointment of Arnold Picker as exec v.p. Action followed by one week the bowout of Ned E. Depinet as president.

Reisman had been abroad supervising RKO's "goodwill foreign sales" drive. He's due in N. Y. from Paris today (Wed.). Picker, whose appointment is effective Nov. 1, has been in charge of United Artists' foreign department, where he overhauled the entire operation. He'll give up his minority stock ownership in UA upon bowing out. Picker and RKO board chairman Arnold Grant are first cousins.

Trade-wise, both the Universal and United Artists echelon believe that RKO "seems to be emulating both companies; U did well by sweeping clean and so did UA." The latter and RKO have in common the fact that legalists—Arthur B. Krim, as prez of UA, and Grant, as RKO board chairman—are at the helm of film companies.

Position of Robert Mochrie as domestic sales chief appeared doubtful though there were no official announcements. Described by observers as "logical candidates" for sales posts with RKO, among others, are Columbia's Rube Jackter; Charles Feldman, Universal's domestic sales topper, and A. J. O'Keefe, pard with Ted

Depinet Gets 18½G Pension

Ned E. Depinet's payoff from RKO will be via the corporation's pension plan, which will give him $18,525 annually. Depinet, who stepped out of the presidency last week, had been drawing $105,220 in salary and other payments.

Following the RKO board meeting Wednesday (1) Depinet joined the new owners at a cocktailery at 21, N. Y., and subsequently escorted his successor, Ralph Stolkin, on the rounds of the RKO homeoffice. He introduced Stolkin to Gotham visitors Samuel Goldwyn and Roy Disney, among others associated with the film company.

Additionally, in a swansong statement to RKO employees, Depinet tossed some posies at the new syndicate in control. He expressed appreciation to the personnel for devotion and loyalty over the years, and added: "In turning over my duties to the new management I do so in the confident knowledge that no finer or more competent group of men and women exists in the motion picture field, and I ask for, and know that they will receive from you, the same loyalty and earnest endeavors that you have given me, and I shall always feel that I am still a member of the RKO family."

DISNEY'S WAITING GAME ON 'NEW' RKO

Until the new RKO management shows its hand, the Disney organization plans to play a waiting game concerning future releasing arrangements with RKO. Indication of this came last week from Roy Disney, Walt Disney Productions prexy, who at the same time admitted Disney would want to stick with RKO.

"Peter Pan," Disney's latest all-cartoon feature, is Disney's last commitment with RKO under the present deal. Remaining deliveries include one subject in the True Life Adventure series and several shorts.

Methods of Selling Pictures Abroad For Top Deals Revealed By Frankovich

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

An American indie producer can more than double his European take if he has the know-how to do his own selling there, Mike Frankovich, who has been turning out his films abroad for the past five years, and "state-righting" them for two, reported prior to his return to Rome this week.

Citing his own experience, Frankovich, who recently finished production on "Decameron Nights" in Spain and England and made a special trip to Hollywood to discuss a distribution deal for his European and Western Hemispheric rights to the India-produced "Aan," said he now has sales offices in London, Paris, Rome and Madrid, for concentration on those and neighboring countries. Move to establish his own organization was motivated by certain restrictions which American distribution companies face abroad, and for a greater penetration of sales than most of these firms offer.

Different offices in the four countries where he is centering his attention have a minimum staff, but it's sufficient for efficient selling, producer stated. Staff of each includes a sales manager, an accountant and attorney.

'Dual Nationality Cos.'

To aid in selling his product abroad, Frankovich also has formed what he calls "dual nationality companies" in each country where he makes his picture. Thus, he currently has an Anglo-American, a French - American, Italian - American and a Spanish-American company, and pictures may be sold either as an American or the nationality of that particular country where feature is filmed.

This is very important, producer pointed out, due to the fact that

L. B. and RKO

Louis B. Mayer, now visiting New York, disclosed last week that he had recently been approached by the new syndicate in control of RKO in connection with his possibly taking over production. This was before the deal with Howard Hughes went through.

"I told them to buy it (the company) first," Mayer recalled.

Neither has been in touch with the other since the sale.

Ask Smaller Cos. Trade on Permits To Nip Jap Snarl

Washington, Oct. 7.

Possibility of a break in the Japanese stalemate over the number of import permits allowed the U. S. distributors was seen this week with the suggestion that one or several of the smaller companies give up the necessary four licenses in return for adequate compensation from the rest of Motion Picture Export Assn. member companies.

Crux of the problem, which so far has found every one of the distribs unwilling to part with any of their allotted permits, is the Japanese government's reduction of major company imports from 63 during the first half of the fiscal year to 59 for the second half.

Idea behind the proposed solution, which will be discussed at an MPEA board meeting in New York tomorrow (Wed.), is that the earning potential of some of the smaller companies' pix is within range of possible compensation by the rest of the distribs.

At the last MPEA board meeting, the foreign managers decided to delay action until Oct. 14 at the latest. Meanwhile, Irving Maas, MPEA v.p. was to continue his efforts in Tokyo to get the Japanese government to bring the allocation for the second half-year up to par with the first half. Foreign execs don't put much faith in his ability to convince Tokyo of the need for any change.

Allocation for the first six months of the fiscal year gave Loew's nine permits, 20th-Fox eight, Paramount and Warner Bros. seven, Columbia, RKO and Universal six, Republic and United Artists five each and Allied Artists four.

Wesco to Supply NT With Its Major Income; C. P. Skouras Optimistic

Difficulties facing the film industry today are no more serious than "many we have been able to surmount in the past," according to National Theatres' prexy Charles P. Skouras. His optimistic note is contained in a proxy statement welcoming new stockholders in the National fold as a result of the latter's recent divorcement from 20th-Fox.

NT's principal source of income, shareholders were informed, will be dividends from Wesco Theatres Corp., a wholly owned subsidiary which either operates or has an interest in about 500 houses principally in some 17 western states. It paid a cash divvy of $500,000 last June to 20th-Fox. But certain restrictive agreements will limit further melons this year to a maximum of $650,000.

Skouras said he was pleased to state it's anticipated Wesco's earnings for the quarter ended Sept. 27 will show considerable improvement over the previous three-

U.S. Pixites Hopeful Of Mex Courts Nipping Again 50% Native Quota

With the stringent Mexican quota law, approved last week by the Congress, set for passage by the Mexican Senate, American distributors this week were sitting tight and riding out the storm.

Feeling in New York was that while the Senate would most probably approve the measure setting up a 50% playing time quota for native pix, the goverment's latest attempt at boosting the local industry at the expense of Hollywood would again run afoul the courts.

Motion Picture Export Assn. spokesman said it hadn't yet been decided whether the American distribs themselves would take action or whether they'd let the local exhibitors carry the ball. The last time the government tried to push through a quota, Mexican theatremen with the aid of the U.S. distribs obtained a permanent injunction against the measure.

The MPEA is convinced that the current law will again be found unconstitutional and that the same court will again grant the relief requested by the exhibs.

If the Senate passes the quota bill and it is gazeteered, opponents of the law will have 30 days in which to file injunction appeals.

General tenor of the reaction here is that the Mexican government has an unrealistic slant on the situation since, with an output of about 100 pix a year, it can hardly hope to meet the quota requirements. Reaction is typified by one company executive, who called the Mexican action "another instance of rash nationalism without practical thought or consideration."

Burger Tours for Loew's

Samuel N. Burger, Loew's foreign sales topper, takes off today (Wed.) on a global inspection tour.

He's due back in New York in about 10 weeks.

Limelight

It's all Chaplin and deserving of stout b.o.

United Artists release of Charles Chaplin production, starring himself (Claire Bloom featured) in story written, directed and scored by Chaplin. Camera, Karl Struss; production manager, Lonnie D'Orsa; asst. director, Robert Alrich; editor, Joe Inge; musical asst., Ray Rasch. Tradeshown Sept. 15, '52. Running time, 135 MINS.

|---|---|
| Calvero | Charles Chaplin |
| Terry | Claire Bloom |
| Neville | Sydney Chaplin |
| Harlequin | Andre Eglevsky |
| Columbine | Melissa Hayden |
| Clowns | Charles Chaplin, Charles Chaplin, Jr. and Wheeler Dryden |

Nigel Bruce, Norman Lloyd, Buster Keaton, Marjorie Bennett

Charlie Chaplin's first production in five years is probably derivative of Chaplin's personal career over the years. Its backdrop is the British stage, from which he was launched, and the serio-comedics herein are suggestive of the star who first revealed his unique pantomime in motion pictures via the Keystone two-reelers. "Limelight" is Chaplin all the way. It's deserving of stout b.o.

Departing from most forms of Hollywood stereotype, the film has a flavor all its own in the sincere quality of the story anent the one-time great vaude mime and his relationship with an aspiring ballerina. There also is some slapstick that reaches classic heights.

Production-wise, "Limelight" is a one-man show since Chaplin does almost everything but grow his own rawstock. As producer he endows the pic with a setting that has every appearance of authenticity. The British music hall milieu of 1917 and the third-rate rooming house, where a good deal of the story unfolds, come through as honest reproductions.

As writer and director, Chaplin presents a well-constructed and logical story of the quondam vaude star, now too long "at liberty," and his rescue of a femme ballet student from a suicide attempt and subsequently from great mental depression.

As the focal character on the screen Chaplin is, at times, magnificent. He has departed from the baggy-pants but still manages to work in some sock pantomime stuff. However, the role he gave himself calls for too much talk, and some of this grows tedious.

While Chaplin is the star, he must surrender some spotlight to Claire Bloom, recruited from the British stage, for the second lead. As the frustrated terper, the delicately beautiful young actress (she's 21) gives a sensitive and memorable performance.

Chaplin's real-life son, Sydney, is gentle and shy as the composer in love with Miss Bloom, but she professes love only for her kindly, elderly benefactor and not this young admirer. All the other performances are competent.

Film opens as Chaplin staggers up the stoop of his rooming house, detects gas and hastily calls a doctor to revive Miss Bloom. At this point he gives a vivid portrayal of a drunk suddenly turned clumsily sober and pale from shock. He gives the young dancer refuge in his walk-up flat. And he deftly kills off any suspicion with the aphorism, "When you reach my age a platonic friendship can be maintained on the highest platonic level."

"Limelight" includes all the gamut, from the Pagliacci legend to the Harlequinade where Andre Eglevsky does his excellent balletmania to Melissa Hayden's Columbine, and where Chaplin doubles as one of the clowns along with his son, Chaplin, Jr., and Wheeler Dryden.

There are many socko values, particularly as the film gets rolling. Its forepart is slow and the 135 minutes are too long. (It is reported he has agreed to some further cuts but that is not official with the UA bunch).

Some of the dialog is brilliant, almost like fine prose writing than celluloid wordage. For example: "We're all amateurs; none of us lives long enough to be anything else." And "I hate the sight of blood, but it's in my veins."

Chaplin's performance is a tour-de-force as the inebriate; the proud ham who won't concede his professional outmoding, which is in contrast to his lack-of-pride as a musician-mendicant with a street band trio—he in outlandish, checkered theatrical garb. He is compelling in his psychosomatic succoring of the girl whom he takes from a low-ebb condition and instills with pride and achievement until she becomes the prima pirouetter in London's top ballet.

Chaplin also works in a single, an act with a flea which is imaginative and funny for the most part, though sinks to low burlesque when the imaginary insect goes below the belt.

The finale offers a unique death scene. Chaplin, having collapsed dies in the wings while Miss Bloom takes over a huge London audience with a ballet turn (terped by Miss Hayden).

Nigel Bruce, as the impresario; Buster Keaton as a comedy aid in the Williams & Wolfus-type of vaude bit they do; Norman Lloyd and Marjorie Bennett round out the small but effective cast.

Chaplin's musical achievements include a concert, besides the score; an excellent ballet, "The Death of Columbine" which rates recording, and undoubtedly will be; along with three music hall folderols about "sardines," "animal trainer" and "spring."

On technical grounds, the film is done effectively, although editing should have been tighter. Photography and lighting are strong assets, particularly in the closeup shots. Gene.

The Stooge
(SONGS)

Amusing Martin & Lewis comedy, more subdued than recent entries but solid boxoffice potential.

Hollywood, Oct. 6.

Paramount release of Hal Wallis production. Stars Dean Martin, Jerry Lewis, Marion Marshall, Eddie Mayehoff, Polly Bergen; features Richard Erdman, Frances Bavier. Directed by Norman Taurog. Screenplay, Fred F. Finklehoffe, Martin Rackin; added dialog, Elwood Ullman; from story by Finklehoffe and Sid Silvers; camera, Daniel L. Fapp; editor, Warren Low; new song, Jerry Livingston, Mack David; musical direction, Joseph J. Lilley. Previewed Oct. 1, '52. Running time, 100 MINS.

| Bill Miller | Dean Martin |
| Ted Rogers | Jerry Lewis |
| Mary Turner | Polly Bergen |
| Frecklehead Tait | Marion Marshall |
| Leo Lyman | Eddie Mayehoff |
| Ben Bailey | Richard Erdman |
| Mrs. Rogers | Frances Bavier |

Martin & Lewis venture into a straight story-line comedy in "The Stooge" as a change of pace from their usual frenetic clowning. The results, while more subdued than the fun usually dispensed by the team, are amusing, and with the comics currently red-hot at the ticket windows, solid returns are forecast.

The change of pace, mixing as it does schmaltzy sentiment into the fun, will make a favorable impression of those, particularly the femmes, who heretofore have not wholeheartedly accepted the team's uninhibited antics. Staunch M&L fans will wish for more of the usual broad slapsitck, but what they do get is good slapstick. There are several sequences that generate bellylaughs to go with the frequent smile and chuckle bits brought out by Norman Taurog's adroit direction.

Plot of the story in the Hal Wallis production poses somewhat of a parallel to the Phil Baker-Sid Silvers team, an angle that would seem to follow naturally Silvers' presence as co-author with Fred F. Finklehoffe of the story. In the script by Finklehoffe and Martin Rackin, with added dialog by Elwood Ullman, Martin plays a crooning, accordion-playing comic who flunks as a single and only becomes a success when he acquires a dumb stooge to work with him from the audience.

Martin, just married to Polly Bergen, ditches his old partner to win fame on his own. Bookings obtained by his agent (Eddie Mayehoff) prove flops until the comic, big-headed but in a nice way, is persuaded to try the stooge gimmick. He is fortunate in landing Lewis as the patsy, and it isn't long before the act, still billed as a single at Martin's insistence, becomes a big success. Plot conflict mostly revolves around Miss Bergen's and Mayehoff's displeasure at Martin's selfishness, and things follow an obvious line until he wises up that he is only a part of an act, not the whole cheese.

Lewis scores as the wistful ugly duckling who adores the man who gave him a chance in show business, pulling many a scene together that might otherwise have fallen too far into trite obviousness. He's particularly outstanding when he subs for Martin as a single during a vaude stand, and in the mirror sequence when he admires and fancies himself as a dashing hero. Martin pleasantly projects his chores as the likeable swellhead, and dishes out capable vocals on the standard pops that make up the song list, such as "Who's Your Little Whozis," "Just One More Chance," "With My Eyes Wide Open I'm Dreaming" and others. Newer is "A Girl Named Mary and a Boy Named Bill," which he does with an assist from Miss Bergen. Also, she joins in on "Eyes Wide Open," and both vocal stints please. Lewis gives raucous attention to "Louise" and "I'm Yours," as well as "Whozis."

With Martin having Miss Bergen as a romantic partner, Marion Marshall neatly fulfills the same role for Lewis. Mayehoff is okay as the agent friend. Spotted briefly are Richard Erdman, the partner who is brushed off at the film's beginning, and Frances Bavier, Lewis' mother.

Technical credits are competent, from Daniel L. Fapp's lensing through the editing. Joseph J. Lilley gives the music score and tunes good direction. Brog.

My Wife's Best Friend

Anne Baxter, Macdonald Carey toplining in coy, frivilous romantic comedy; average chances.

Hollywood, Oct. 6.

20th-Fox release of Robert Bassler production. Stars Anne Baxter, Macdonald Carey; features Cecil Kellaway, Casey Adams, Catherine McLeod, Leif Erickson, Frances Bavier, Mary Sullivan, Martin Milner. Directed by Richard Sale. Screenplay, Isobel Lennart; based on story by John Briard Harding; camera, Leo Tover; editor, Robert Simpson; music, Leigh Harline. Previewed Oct. 1, '52. Running time, 87 MINS.

|---|---|
| Virginia Mason | Anne Baxter |
| George Mason | Macdonald Carey |
| Reverend Chamberlain | Cecil Kellaway |
| Pete Bentham | Casey Adams |
| Jane Richards | Katherine McLeod |
| Nicholas Reed | Leif Erickson |
| Mrs. Chamberlain | Frances Bavier |
| Flossy Chamberlain | Mary Sullivan |
| Buddy Chamberlain | Martin Milner |
| Katie | Billie Bird |
| Pugs | Wild Red Berry Henry Kulky |
| Pilot | John Hedloe |
| Co-Pilot | John McKee |
| Cab Driver | Phil Hartman |
| Mike | Michael Ross |
| Dr. Smith | Junius Matthews |
| Steward | Joe Haworth |
| Police Chief | Ed Dearing |
| Dr. McCarran | Morgan Farley |
| Hannah | Ann Staunton |
| Walter Rogers | Emmett Vogan |

This is a rather frantic romantic comedy, with an all-stops-out emphasis on coy frivolity, that shapes to about average chances generally other than in the top key situations. A mild brand of diversion is stirred up, principally because of the strongly stressed, obvious farcing of a battle-of-the-sexes theme that springboards from a husband's confession of a romantic slip when he should have kept his mouth shut.

Anne Baxter, better known (and more impressively) for straight dramatics, switches to comedy with only fair success as the flightly heroine of this John Briard Harding story, scripted by Isobel Lennart. More assured and at home in the comedy demands opposite her is Macdonald Carey, the suffering husband who talked too much. Richard Sale gives the fluffy nonsense very broad direction, with a stress on frenetics, to get as much as possible out of the farcical situations and characters.

Miss Baxter and Carey take off via plane for an eighth wedding anniversary celebration in Honolulu. She's a small-town, would-be sophisticate, and he's a stolid, successful, smalltown business man. Only a few minutes in the air, the plane develops engine trouble, bringing about a "deathbed" confession between the couple. Miss Baxter begs forgiveness for being a supercilious, selfish wife and, under this emotional spell, Carey confesses to a near-affair three years back with Catherine McLeod, the wife's best friend, thus bringing on himself the ensuing tortures devised by a vengeful wife after the plane returns safely to its home airport.

The first torture is the silent treatment, and Carey, not knowing when he's well off, gets Cecil Kallaway, Miss Baxter's minister father, to intercede. He points out the virtue of saintly forgiveness, so she becomes a diabolical "Joan of Arc," When the fun of that impersonation wears off, she becomes the plain, simple helpmate, working her fingers to the bone for a slave-driving husband. Next is a sort of "design for living" torture during which she makes a big play for Leif Erickson, a rich man with whom Carey has business dealings. This situation is milked to a farethewell, and then comes the reconciliation and fine clinch after Miss Baxter learns Carey passed out from too many martinis before he could make something of his romantic impulse for Miss McLeod.

Featured and supporting cast figure well in delivering the hoked-up demands of script and direction. Miss McLeod is very good as the best friend, and Kellaway has his moments as the father, bothered himself by a wife in the person of Frances Bavier. Casey Adams is excellent as a lawyer friend. Erickson, Martin Milner, Mary Sullivan, Billie Bird and others are competent.

The Robert Bassler production features some smart settings and art direction, particularly in the home of the starring couple, and Leo Tover's photography is good. Styles given the femmes to wear are unimpressive. Brog.

Cinerama's Socko Kickoff

Irrespective of Cinerama's future, the impact with which the new film process scored at its New York unveiling immeasurably bolstered the industry on the public relations front. For Cinerama is being hailed as a dynamic new achievement within the framework of the picture business.

The press reception was strictly rave. The New York Times report appeared on Page 1. Radio and TV commentators all were very much plus. The public couldn't help getting the message anent the aggressive stroke in cinematic progress.

Cinerama, in short, achieves the most realistic photographic effects and absolute illusion of third dimension. The captivated first-night audience at the Broadway Theatre, New York, last week, clearly felt a sense of participation in events depicted on the huge screen, beginning with a rollercoaster scene, continuing through various European sequences including a La Scala "Aida" operatic scene, gondola commerce in Venice, a bullfight in Madrid and winding up with a thrilling airplane view of the U. S. from coast to coast.

Showmen expressed belief this new process heralds a new era in the film industry, and promises to hypo biz as did the advent of sound and color—and even to possibly a greater extent in view of the fact that Cinerama enthralled customers despite absence of story or characters.

Process gave onlookers better cosmic view of the Rockies, Venice, Vienna and other global points than if actually visited. The viewer felt as though he were actually sitting in the Madrid bullfight arena or actually experiencing aquatic sports in Cypress Gardens, Fla.

The two-hour performance opens with a prolog on a conventional screen, with Lowell Thomas, Cinerama board chairman, acting as narrator and going back through the history of the scenic art form to shots of "The Great Train Robbery" and Valentino-Banky silents.

Prolog leads suddenly into new process with electrifying rollercoaster sequence. Some members of the audience turned away from this, testifying to their feeling of immediate presence in what's transpiring on the screen.

Action is thrown on a curved screen via three projectors in back of theatre, and herein lies a flaw. Vertical shadow line appears between frontal view pic and the images to each side of it. The engineers, of course, are working on this.

Main consideration is that here is little more than a travelog, and yet audience was moved to applause at various points because of the great advance in photography and sound. Latter, incidentally, is billed as "Stereophonic Sound" and reproduction at even greatest volume is absolutely true.

Cinerama is the invention of Fred Waller, who had developed the projection method for aerial gunner trainees in the armed forces during World War II. Thereafter experiments were conducted in a specially improvised theatre in Oyster Bay, Long Island, with the view of perfecting the system for paying customers, such as at the Broadway.

Object of Cinerama is to "surround" the viewer with sight and sound. The screen is six times normal in size and speakers behind it and at both side of the theatre, at about a midway point, provide spectators with the effect of hearing the sound from all directions. In a church scene, for example, the choir voices first emanate from the back of the theatre and then move forward as the choir progresses to the altar upstage.

In the shooting, one camera is used with a set of three 27m lenses, designed to duplicate human-eye vision with its frontal and "corner of the eye" view. Each lens takes a third of the picture's total width, the one in center pointing straight ahead, with those on each side focusing in so that the left lens takes the right side of the picture and the lens on the right takes the left images. Following through, three coordinated projectors are used, throwing the synchronized pix onto the giant screen which, instead of being flat surfaced, is made up of 1,100 vertical strips of perforated tape.

First offering of Cinerama, name of the sponsoring corporation, is "This Is Cinerama," billed as a Thomas-Merian C. Cooper presentation, produced by Cooper and Robert L. Bendick. It's a travelog in content, in effect comprising 12 different shorts in as many settings. European sequences, which were supervised by Michael Todd and Todd, Jr., lead to the climactic "America the Beautiful" flight across the U. S. Latter was supervised by Fred Rickey. Development of the superb sound is credited to Hazard E. Reeves, head of Reeves Sound Studios. Harry Squire did the camera work for the history-making entry. Running time, exclusive of intermission break between European and American scenes, is 120 minutes. Caught at the Broadway Theatre, N.Y., opening night, Tuesday, Oct. 30, 1952. Gene.

Lensed-in-Argentina outdoor drama with fair entertainment values.

Hollywood, Oct. 2.

20th-Fox release of Philip Dunne production. Stars Rory Calhoun, Gene Tierney, features Richard Boone, Hugh Marlowe, Everett Sloane. Directed by Jacques Tourneur. Location-lensing in Technicolor of Argentina's rugged pampas and the Andes mountains are the chief assets of this offering, which otherwise is just a fairly entertaining feature. It has a number of exploitable angles in the plot, plus the use of actual story locales, to rate it coin in some bookings but, overall, the outlook is not overly strong.

The Philip Dunne production took principals and crew to the Argentine site of the Herbert Childs novel for on-the-spot lensing, thus obtaining values that are better than Dunne's script treatment. The natural story locales, some excellent native casting and enough suspense development, however, keep the film mildly interesting. Jacques Tourneur's direction is occasionally laced with exciting action, but his pacing, like that of the script, is uneven.

Rory Calhoun and Gene Tierney costar in a story that deals with a gaucho's resentment of encroaching civilization on the traditional ways of the pampas and his romance with a high-born girl while he leads a gang of other rebels against the oncoming law and order. Calhoun's hero is rather dumb and stubborn, detracting from the natural sympathy that should accrue to the character, but he does what he can to make it likeable. Miss Tierney's heroine character has more validity, so she fares slightly beter.

Conflict begins its slow march when Calhoun is jailed for a stabbing done while he is settling a matter of honor in typical gaucho fashion. Influential friends arrange for his recruitment into the militia so he can escape the killing rap, but he resents authority, in the person of Richard Boone, and deserts. A romance blooms when he rescues Miss Tierney from an Indian abductor and, later, she joins him in flights from authority and the building of a rebel band. The couple is thwarted several times when attempting to be married but, finally, when Miss Tierney becomes pregnant and the influential friend, Hugh Marlowe, is killed

'NEW ERA' IN FILMS-VIDEO TIES

COMPO Needs Depinet

While the trade is wondering about the new RKO setup, the industry has been accorded a windfall through the freer services of Ned Depinet to reassume his role at COMPO. And to be paid for it this time. It won't be a tough financial rap all-around because there'll be no benefits ever played for the ex-RKO president who, it says here, is now in a "consultative" post with the company he so long headed.

Whatever the destinies of RKO—and it is hoped that it will continue to be a virile, functioning production-distribution source for the business—fact of the matter is that a slick emeritus job can now be done by Depinet for the Council of Motion Picture Organizations. Depinet long held COMPO together just as he had been doing of late, at RKO, under the Howard Hughes control. He enjoys an unique respect among the top-echelon and the rank-and-filers alike.

This week marks the first anniversary of "Movietime USA," whose tours Bob O'Donnell so efficiently administered. O'Donnell and Marvin Schenck, as the Hollywood coordinating chairman, have streamlined the in-person tours of the film personalities who go out to meet the public and the exhibitors, on a local level. "Movietime" and the tax fight have been the most realistic campaigns of COMPO. But there is a continuing good job to be done by the Council. It needs the strongest manpower to direct its forward strides. What a natural spot for Ned Depinet! The industry would be a big gainer through this undivided guidance.

Smalltown B.O. Prospects Better With a Number of Reopenings

B.O. prospects for smalltown exhibitors appear to be improving in light of a number of theatre reopenings the past few weeks in the New York exchange area. Among houses again in operation are the Hudson, Cold Spring, N. Y.; Storm King, Cornwall, N. Y.; Palace, Netcong, N. J., and Summit, Union City, N. J.

Jules E. Liggett, whose Liggett-Florin Booking Service buys film for the Hudson and Storm King Theatres, declared this week that his clients relighted their premises because "product is better and television is a lot worse." He added that there's general confidence in the future and an upswing is indicated.

Most of L-F's 103 theatre customers are located in small towns within a 100-mile radius of N. Y. Allied States from time to time cites the plight of the smalltown exhib whose operation, more often than not, is a marginal one. Thus, when the 300-seat Hudson in Cold Spring is reopened, with a population of little more than 2,000 to draw upon, it may well represent a turning point, L-F points out. A theatreman wouldn't dust off his projection machine if he thought he's not going to make a profit.

Also back in operation are the People's Cinema, Brooklyn, and the New Opera House, Newark.

Indiana Allied Ired By New ASCAP Drive To License Exhibitors

Indianapolis, Oct. 7.

New drive of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers to license exhibitors for the use of recorded music has drawn the ire of Allied Theatre Owners of Indiana. While admitting that ASCAP's rates are comparatively inexpensive, the ATOI nevertheless warns theatremen that if exhibition "nationally accedes to this new ASCAP extraction, it will open the door for future payment of license fees to two or more licensing organizations."

ATOI explains in its current bulletin that ASCAP recently sent exhibitors applications for licenses covering the use of recorded music before, during intermissions and after regular film programs. In

John Ford to Africa

Director John Ford arrived in New York yesterday (Tues.) and takes off today for Africa to begin work on "Mogambo," which he'll direct, with Clark Gable and Ava Gardner starring.

Director will spend several days in Ireland visiting relatives before continuing to Nairobi.

Team 'Stooge' in 1-Shot Holiday, Regular Dates

Paramount is connecting the regular runs of "The Stooge," Hal Wallis production starring Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, with special one-shot New Year's Eve engagements.

In sending out requests for exhib offers of terms, Par wants the theatremen to specify that the pic will be played the holiday spot in addition to the regular run. General release of "Stooge" is skedded for February, consequently there'll be a gap of over a month between the one showing of the film and its standard engagement.

Pixites on TV 'Help Downtown Draw, But Not in Nabe Runs'

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

Paradoxically, according to local exhibitors, film stars' appearances on TV help their film theatre drawing power downtown, or at least don't hurt it, but in the neighborhoods and suburban runs it lessens their boxoffice pull.

A case in point is Martin & Lewis' latest release, "Jumping Jacks." The picture did big business downtown, but now that it's reaching the neighborhood and suburban houses at the same time that the comedy stars have returned to TV it's doing a comparative Brody, declare the local exhibitors who have just finished playing it.

Sidney Volk, co-owner of the Terrace, highly successful suburban house, says the fact that "'Jumping Jacks' did nothing for the Terrace" bears out his contention that "when the public can see the stars on television for nothing they'll not come to the theatre and pay to see them, except in isolated instances."

Volk points out that Lucille Ball, for example, is a great TV favorite, but she's on television regularly, and her last picture and reissued ones were not draws in neighborhood theatres here. The same thing goes for many others.

Moira Shearer for 'Brig'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Metro signed Moira Shearer as femme lead in "Brigadoon," to be filmed in Britain next year with Gene Kelly as male star.

Kelly returns to the home lot next spring to topline "Huckleberry Finn." Currently he is busy with "Invitation to the Dance" abroad. On completion of "Finn" here he will go back to Europe for "Brigadoon."

SMPTE STRESSES MUTUAL BIZ AIDS

Washington, Oct. 7.

With increased cooperation between the picture and TV industries, and with pleas for increased aid in national defense ringing in its ears, the Society of Motion Picture & Television Engineers has teed off its biggest convention.

Heralding a "new era of progress," president Peter Mole told assembled engineers that "movies and television cannot only live together but can supplement and strengthen one another." As examples of the "record of cooperative engineering" within the group, Mole, head of Mole-Richardson Co., Hollywood, cited last week's unveiling of Cinerama and the record-breaking b.o. of the Marciano-Walcott televised bout.

Calling these cooperative efforts "the most encouraging symptoms to appear in the past 10 years," Mole hailed them as evidence of "a new, widespread, and healthy interest in the technical futures of both motion pictures and television."

Get-together luncheon yesterday (Mon.) was highlighted by talks from photographic chiefs of the three branches of the armed forces. The military toppers lauded the engineering group for its technical assistance and called upon both represented industries for increased help.

Ready New Test Of Ohio Censors

Film industry is readying a new test of Ohio's right to censor newsreels although it has received no indication whether or not the state plans to appeal the decision of a Toledo municipal court which declared the snipping of reels "unconstitutional." Friday (10) is the deadline for the state to enter its appeal.

Nature of the new test, form it will take and when and where the move will be made are factors that are still being worked out by film legalites. Meanwhile, no positive plans have been set as to what action the industry will take regarding newsreels should the Ohio Attorney General fail to make an appeal. Even at this late date there is considerable difference of opinion among attorneys concerning the state's right to enter such an appeal.

Lengthy study of Ohio's statutes has brought forth conflicting views even among industry lawyers. While the question remains unsettled, the film companies have continued to submit all newsreels to the Ohio censorship board. Previously, the industry said that it would make a formal announcement when it decided to send newsreels into Ohio without first obtaining the official censorship seal.

Meanwhile, filmites have no immediate plans for setting up test cases in other states which continue to censor films, the feeling being that it is wiser to tie up one action at a time before proceeding to another.

Ed Sullivan Succeeds Silliphant at 20th

Edward E. Sullivan, 20th-Fox publicist, has been upped to eastern publicity manager, replacing Stirling Silliphant, who has resigned to enter independent production.

Sullivan has been with 20th since 1946 and for the past three years has been assistant publicity manager. Silliphant, who announced his resignation last August, will remain with the company in an advisory capacity until January. His first indie pic will be "The Joe Louis Story," biog of the former heavyweight champ.

Frisch, New Prez of N.Y. Exhib Assn., Sees One Overall Org as Inevitable

Terming the establishment of one overall exhibitor organization as "the ultimate goal," Emanuel Frisch, newly-elected prexy of New York's Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatre Assn., declared this week that the achievement of that aim will occur "sooner than everybody thinks."

Frisch, an exec of Randforce Amus. Co., said there is a better chance of achieving that unity now than ever before. Already, he noted, there have been many efforts of cooperative ventures among the many exhib outfits, and he believes it will be only a matter of time before complete amalgamation takes place.

The MMPTA topper asserted that the new attitude among exhib orgs, heretofore divided on many industry questions, stemmed from the arbitration conferences. Throughout these talks, Frisch pointed out, the exhibs had a unanimity of opinion in the proposals presented to the distrib outfits. The only differences that existed, he noted, were among the distribution outfits.

After a meeting of the minds at the arbitration sessions, the "romance" blossomed further as the many exhib orgs unanimously condemned the Government's attempt to force the filmeries to sell 16m films to video, Frisch commented. Another industry problem that is uniting the exhibs, the Randforce exec said, was the fight to eliminate the 20% admission tax. He declared that arbitration, the 16m and the 20% tax fights were the three things that have served to bring the exhib outfits closer together.

Frisch's prediction of the formation of one overall exhib group was

Legion Condemns French 'Triangle'

National Legion of Decency this week tossed a French import into its Class "C" (condemned) category and rated four other films as Class "B" (Morally objectionable in part for all).

Condemned was "Savage Triangle," which Joseph Burstyn is distributing in the U. S. Directed by Jean Delannoy, "Triangle" concerns a prostitute and her young son. Rating "B's" were "Captive Women" (RKO), the Italian-made "Father's Dilemma" (Arthur Davis), "Limelight" (UA) and "Night Without Sleep" (20th). Principal objections to all four are that they contain "suggestive situations and sequences."

Easy Money Turns H'wood Writers Into Hacks, Sez Bromfield

Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 7.

The $500-a-week Hollywood paycheck was said to be one of the causes for the sorry plight of the present-day novel by Louis Bromfield, novelist, while here last week to address a meeting of the Friends of the Land.

"Hollywood seeks out the most promising young writers, offers them a tempting $500 a week, and then tosses them out when they begin to write like hacks, in 10 years or so. I can name 20 men who should be writing our major novels today who were killed off, ruined. You can blame Hollywood for the fact that there are no major novelists much younger than I am. The same thing is happening in music," he declared.

"The writers were off on a wrong track. Even the best-paid Hollywood writer doesn't make as much as a good novelist. And a good novelist can go on writing as long as he chooses," Bromfield said.

He said Hollywood was not the only reason for the dearth of good fiction. One of the reasons that fiction isn't selling well is that too much bad fiction is being published, he said. "The daily newspaper is more exciting than most novels," he declared.

Bromfield currently is in the midst of writing three books of non-fiction, one on economics, another on Brazil, and the third on the pleasures of country living. Bromfield said that he would like to begin another novel, but he hasn't the time to "live with it and let it grow."

He said the lack of real critics whom the public follows is a serious weakness in today's literary circles. "There are many book reviewers, but no major critics. No one is setting standards," he said, adding that some of the best criticism is coming now from the small papers rather than the large ones.

"If a novelist has the power to create in one to three pages a world that is just as real for the reader as the one in which he lives, he is competent," Bromfield said.

Bromfield acknowledged that radio and television were somewhat distracting forces. "They work on me," he said. If a book does not catch his interest in 10 pages, he tosses it aside.

Ava Abroading for 2

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Ava Gardner will make at least two pictures abroad for Metro. Following "Mogambo," in which she will costar with Clark Gable in Africa, actress will play the top role in "The House on Humility St.," to be filmed next spring in Rome and Paris.

Sam Zimbalist will produce "House," based on an original by Joseph Eisinger, who will do the screenplay.

U's Daff Sees British Studios Producing Many Pix for American TV

London, Oct. 7.

While Hollywood continues to supply the bulk of British screen requirements, there is a growing likelihood that British studios will produce the major part of the films consumed by American TV. This opinion was expressed last week by Al Daff, Universal-International executive veepee, during his short visit here.

Because of the increasing demands made by the various guilds in Hollywood, Daff believes that there would be a growing move to switch telefilm production to London. There were indications that this was already happening, and he felt that the difference in costs, variously estimated at between 15% and 20%, was sufficient to make the difference between a substantial loss and a substantial profit.

During his recent survey of the European scene, Daff estimated that business remained generally favorable and that the boxoffice was showing signs of stabilization. TV so far have made no serious inroads into boxoffice receipts.

Although the novelty impact of TV in the major American cities had worn off and theatre biz was showing signs of a new, healthy upsurge, Daff opined that there

No. Central Appreciative Of Marilyn Monroe Talents

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

North Central Allied has before it a proposal for a vote of thanks to Marilyn Monroe for what she has done and is doing to keep pix in the publicity spotlight.

In these days of stiff television competition, films need all the ballyhoo space they can grab, and Miss Monroe has been doing her part to make them a topic of conversation, it's pointed out.

NCA feeling is that theatre grosses are actually stimulated when film stars are prominently before the public.

L.A. Climbs; 'Fear' Rousing $45,000, 'Quiet' Noisy 30G, 'You're Mine' Same, 'Fatima' Giant 25G; 'Pirate' 20G, 2d

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

Six new bills, four of which are doing well, are helping to lift the boxoffice pace here currently. "Sudden Fear," which is copping the most coin, looms stout with $45,000 in three theatres. "Because You're Mine," playing in two houses, is hefty $30,000.

"The Quiet Man" also is smart at $30,000 in two sites while "Miracle of Fatima," in two smaller houses, is excellent $25,000. These four boxoffice leaders all are playing at upped scales. "Crimson Pirate" still is sturdy at $20,000 in second round in three spots.

"Son of Ali Baba" looms mild $17,000 in three situations. "Monkey Business," also new, is rated okay $14,000 in two locations.

Estimates for This Week

Los Angeles, Chinese, Ritz (FWC) (2,097; 2,048; 1,370; 70-$1.10)—"Son of Ali Baba" (U) and "Stranger in Between" (U). Mild $17,000. Last week, L.A., Chinese, "Just For You" (Par) and "Tropical Heatwave" (Rep) (2d wk), $12,500.

'Quiet' Smash 20G In Sluggish D. C.

Washington, Oct. 7.

It is a quiet session along the town's main stem, with a single noise maker. "Quiet Man" at the Warner is sole standout of the newcomers, being definitely smash and in holdover class. "One Minute to Zero" at RKO Keith's is pleasing while "Fearless Fagan" hypoed by crooner Mel Torme on stage of Loew's Capitol, is only dullish. "Ivanhoe" continues solid in third session at Loew's Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 55-95)—"Fearless Fagan" (M-G) plus vaude headed by Mel Torme. Slow $17,000. Last week, "Wife's Best Friend" (20th) plus vaude, same.

Columbia (Loew's) (1,174; 50-80)—"Caribbean" (Par) (2d wk). Okay $5,500 after $7,500 last week.

Dupont (Lopert) (372; 50-85)—"Cry Beloved Country" (Indie) (2d wk). Steady $3,500 after smart $5,000 last week. Holds.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 50-85)—"One Minute to Zero" (RKO). Nice $11,000. Last week, "Allegheny Uprising" (RKO) and "Annie Oakley" (RKO) (reissues), hypoed by fight pix to good $9,000.

Palace (Loew's) (2,370; 74-$1.25)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (3d wk). Continues solid at $24,000 after big $29,000 last week. Holds again.

Playhouse (Lopert) (485; 50-$1)—"Tales of Hoffman" (UA) (reissue). Third time around, but first at regular scale. Strong $5,000. Stays over. Last week, "High Treason" (Indie) (6th wk(, okay $3,500.

Metropolitan (Warner) (1,200; 50-80)—"Cairo Road" (Indie). So-so 4,000. Last week, "Stolen Face" (Lip) and "Outlaw Women" (Lip), same.

Warners (WB) (2,174; 50-80)—"Quiet Man" (Rep). Smash $20,000, and holds. Last week, "Crimson Pirate" (WB), solid $15,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 60-$1)—"Carrie" (Par) (3d wk). Looks stout $7,500. Last week, brisk $9,000.

'Pirate' Wow $11,000, Indpls.; 'Monkey' Same

Indianapolis, Oct. 7.

Cooler weather over weekend hypoed first-run biz generally. Nothing smash but most results are good. "Ivanhoe," with price advantage, is holding up well in second week at Loew's to lead town. "Crimson Pirate," at Circle, and "Monkey Business," at Indiana, are both nice, former being very strong.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 50-76)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Army Bound" (Mono). Dandy $11,000. Last week, "Bonzo to College" (U) and "Son of Ali Baba" (U), nice $10,500.

Indiana (C-D) (3,200; 50-76)—"Monkey Business" (20th) and "Breakdown" (Indie). Nice $11,000. Last week, "One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and "Sea Tiger" (Mono), $9,000.

Keith's (C-D) (1,300; 50-76)—"Wild Heart" (RKO). Slow $4,000. Last week, second-runs.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 76-$1.10)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Very good $12,000 after stout $19,500 opener.

Lyric (C-D) (1,600; 50-76)—"The Well" (UA) and "Mine with Iron Door" (Indie). Neat $5,500. Last week, "Untamed Frontier" (U) and "Gold Fever" Mono), $4,500.

'Fagan' Fancy 7G, Omaha; 'Paula' 6G

Omaha, Oct. 7.

Good biz looms for this week, with Marciano-Walcott fight pix booming "Paula" to a hefty total at Brandeis and space-grabbing promotion firing "Fearless Fagan" at the State to strong session. "Dreamboat" and "Captive City" shapes moderate at Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,100; 16-70)—"Paula" (Col) and "Montana Territory" (Col) with Marciano-Walcott fight pix. Nifty $6,000 or near. Last week, "Where's Charley" (WB) and "Last Train from Bombay" (Col), okay $4,500.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 44-65)—"Somebody Loves Me" (Par) and "Blondie Brings Up Baby" (Col) (reissue). Opened Monday (6). Last week, "Golden Hawk" (Col) and "Triple Creek" (Col), good $7,000.

'Fagan' Lively $9,000, Port.; 'Pirate' 7½G, 2d

Portland, Ore., Oct. 7.

The first week of TV and unusually hot weather have combined to pull down grosses at downtown houses this week. "Sudden Fear" shapes nice in two houses. "Fearless Fagan," also new, looks good at Liberty. "Crimson Pirate" looms big as holdover at Broadway.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; 65-90)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Without Warning" (UA) (2d wk). Solid $7,500. Last week, $15,000.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,850; 65-90)—"Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "Waco" (Mono). Good $9,000. Last week, "Washington Story" (M-G) and "Desert Passage" (RKO), $8,500.

Mayfair (Evergreen) (1,500; 65-90)—"Big Sky" (RKO) and fight pix (m.o.). Sharp $4,500. Last week, "Wild Heart" (RKO) and "Maytime in Mayfair" (Indie), $3,500.

Oriental (Evergreen) (2,000; 65-90)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Kid Mike Baroni" (Indie), day-date with Paramount. Fine $4,000. Last week, "Big Sky" (RKO) and fight pix, $4,700.

United Artists (Parker) (890; 65-90)—"Just For You" (Par) (3rd wk). Fast $6,500. Last week, $7,500.

Cool Weather, Lift Strike Tilt Chi; 'Monkey'-Hayes & Healy Fine 50G, 'Minute' Smash 25G; 'For You' 16G, 2d

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Cool weather plus a mid-week strike of elevator operators which stranded some 500,000 Loop office workers, is helping local biz at first-runs. Surprisingly, the world series, which was supposed to cause an afternoon slump, found the wickets operating at normal pace. However, record cold wave over weekend hurt many spots.

Best of newcomers is "Monkey Business" with Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy onstage. It should hit a fine $50,000. State-Lake, with "One Minute to Zero" and "The Fighter," is looking for a smash $25,000. Grand is also showing up well with $9,500 for "Horizons West" and "All Because of Sally."

"Just For You" at the Palace is leading the holdovers with fancy take in second week. However, the Oriental is just as strong with a fine total for the fourth frame of "Sudden Fear." Roosevelt is holding up well with a solid second week for "Duel at Silver Creek" and "No Room For Groom." Biz is off a bit at the Woods with fifth week of "Jumping Jacks"

Estimates for This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 98-$1.25) —"Monkey Business" (20th) and stageshow. Big $50,000. Last week, "Quiet Man" (Rep) (2d wk), $38,400.

Grand (RKO) (1,500; 55-98)—"Horizons West" (U) and "All Because of Sally" (U). Good $9,500. Last week, "Yankee Buccaneer" (U) and "Train from Bombay" (Col), $13,800 in 9 days.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 98)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) (4th wk). Walcott-Marciano fight pix still helping with good $16,000 likely. Last week, $25,500.

Palace (Eitel) (2,500; 98)—"Just For You" (Par) (2d wk). Held up well with nice $16,000. Last week, $23,000.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,500; 55-98)—"Duel at Silver Creek" (U) and "No Room for Groom" (U) (2d wk). Continues stout at $13,000. Last week, $16,400.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,700; 55-98) —"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and "The Fighter" (U). Excellent $25,000. Last week, "Carrie" (Par) and "3 For Bedroom C" (WB), $9,800.

Surf (H & E Balaban) (685; 98) —"High Treason" (Indie) (4th wk). Still profitable with $3,700. Last week, $4,000.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 55-98)—"Assignment Paris" (Col) and "California Conquest" (Col) (2d wk). Fairish $9,200. Last week, $13,600.

Woods (Essaness) (1,073; 98)—"Jumping Jacks" (Par) (5th wk). Still okay at $11,000. Last week, $13,000.

World (Indie) (578; 98)—"Erioca" (Indie) (3d wk). Holding strong at $2,900. Last week, $3,000.

K.C. Tapers Off; 'Fear,' Light $5,000, 'Glory' 13G, 'Ivanhoe' Big 12G, 2d

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

Pace is moderate this session with newcomers getting mild money and holdovers about holding their own. "What Price Glory" in four Fox Midwest first runs and "Sudden Fear" at the Missouri, both newcomers, are fairish. "Ivanhoe" getting big money in second week of advanced prices, but generally not up to hopes. Paramount is nice on second week with "Just For You." Weather is off from the recent heat wave, and normal for season.

Estimates for This Week

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 50-75)—"Les Miserables" (20th). Unusual booking of a front-line current release. Nice $2,300. Last week, "Outcast of Islands" (UA) (3d wk), $1,000.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 75-$1.10)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Fat $12,000, but off from hopes as resistance to advanced prices developed. Last week, socko $23,000.

Missouri (RKO) (2,650; 50-75)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Captain Black Jack" (Indie). Light $5,000. Last week, "Big Sky" (RKO) and "Feudin' Fools" (Mono), $6,000.

Paramount (Tri-States) (1,900; 50-75)—"Just For You" (Par) (2d

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i. e., without the 20% tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Widow' Bright $20,000, Frisco

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Visit of President Truman plus politico fanfare is putting a crimp into the boxoffices here currently. "Merry Widow" at the Warfield with a big session is sparking Market Street, with "Crimson Pirate" also rated nice at Paramount. Making a showing comparable to "Widow" is "Miracle of Fatima," which sock total at the much smaller St. Francis. "Quiet Man" also is good at the Fox in third round.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,850; 65-95)—"Fearless Fagan" (M-G) and "Holiday For Sinners" (M-G). Thin $9,000. Last week, "Woman of North Country" (Rep) and "Wac From Walla Walla" (Rep) bolstered by fight pix to nice $14,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; 65-95)—"Quiet Man" (Rep) and "Tropical Heat Wave" (Rep) (3d wk). Held at good $14,000. Last week, strong $16,500.

Warfield (Loew's) (2,656; 65-95) —"Merry Widow" (M-G). Big $20,000 or over. Last week, "Lovely To Look At" (M-G) (2d wk), $12,000.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 65-95)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB). Fast $19,000 or near. Last week, "Caribbean" (Par) and "Gold Fever" (Mono) plus two-day vaude show, $15,500.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $1.20-$1.50)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB). Sock $17,000. Last week, "Full House" (20th) (2d wk), $7,000.

Orpheum (No. Coast) (2,448; 65-95)—"Bonzo To College" (U) and "Lavender Hill Mob" (U). Nsg $9,000. Last week, "Island of Desire" (UA) and "Gallant Thoroughbred" (Rep) (reissue), $9,000.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,207; 65-95)—"My Man And I" (M-G). Mild $5,500. Last week, "Untamed Women" (UA) and "Actors and Sin" (UA), $6,500.

Stagedoor (A-R) (370; 85-$1)—"High Treason" (Indie) (4th wk). Off to $2,700. Last week, fine $3,000.

Clay (Rosener) (400; 65-85)—"High Treason" (Indie) (4th wk). Okay $2,100. Last week, $2,700.

Larkin (Rosener) (400; 65-85)—"Under Paris Sky" (Indie) and "Grand Illusion" (Indie) (reissue) (2d wk). Oke $2,000. Last week, $2,200.

Vogue (S.F. Theatres) (377; 85-$1)—"Young and Damned" (Indie). Fair $2,000. Last week, "Lady Vanishes" (UA) (6th wk), $1,800.

'SKY' BRIGHT $11,000, BUFF.; 'SOMEBODY' 12G

Buffalo, Oct. 7.

Holdovers are providing first-runs the greatest strength here this round. However, "Big Sky" at the Century looks smooth and "Somebody Loves Me" is heading for what promises to be a nice session at Paramount. Brightest holdover is "Miracle of Fatima," with sturdy takings at the Center. Also very big is "Ivanhoe" in second stanza at the Buffalo.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew's) (3,000; 74-$1.20)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Smart $16,000 or over. Last week, great $25,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 40-70)—"Somebody Loves Me" (Par). Heading for fine $12,000 in week ending next Friday. In ahead, "Monkey Business" (20th) and "Franchise Affair" (Indie), fine $18,000 in 11 days.

Center (Par) (2,100; 70-$1) — "Miracle of Fatima" (WB) (2d wk).

'KNOCK' ROBUST 16G, ST. LOO; 'MINUTE' 17G

St. Louis, Oct. 7.

First-run biz at downtown film houses was hypoed over weekend as mercury dropped sharply. Further b.o. activity is expected tomorrow night (Wed.) when the annual Veiled Prophet parade is held. "Don't Bother To Knock" looms fine at Ambassador while reissue of "Lady Vanishes" shapes stout at Pageant. "One Minute To Zero" finished a solid session at the Fox Monday (6). "Ivanhoe" is still socko in second frame at Loew's.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (F&M) (3,000; 60-75) —"Dont Bother To Knock" (20th) and "Navajo" (Lip). Fine $16,000. Last week, "Monkey Business" (20th) and "Woman of North Country" (Rep), $15,000.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 60-75) — "Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Army Bound" (Mono). Opened today (Tues.). Last week, "One Minute To Zero" (RKO) and "Wagons West" (Mono), solid $17,000.

Loew's (Loew) (3,172; 50-75) — "Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Sock $20,000 following $30,000 opening session.

Missouri (F&M) (3,500; 50-75)—"Monkey Business" (20th) and "Quiet Man" (Rep). Fair $11,500. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Models, Inc." (Indie), $9,000.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000-90) —"Lady Vanishes" (reissue) (UA). Stout $4,000. Last week, "Tales of Hoffmann" (UA) (2d wk), $3,500.

Shady Oak (St. L. Amus.) (800; 90) — "Tales of Hoffmann" (UA) (3d wk). Lively $3,500 after $4,000 second stanza.

'1 Minute' Lusty $19,000 in Hub

Boston, Oct. 7.

Two holdovers, "Ivanhoe" at State and Orpheum and "Miracle of Fatima" at Astor continue in the chips currently. Top newcomer, "One Minute to Zero" at Memorial, looks nice. "Crimson Pirate" at Paramount and Fenway, shapes unexciting. "Beware My Lovely" at Boston, is only fair. "Quiet Man" in third frame at Met is doing well enough.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; 74-$1.20)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB) (2d wk). Holding at strong $17,000 following nifty $18,000 opener.

Boston (RKO) (3,000; 40-85)—"Beware, My Lovely" (RKO) and "Naughty Widow" (RKO). Not so good at $10,000. Last week, "Fuller Brush Man" and "Fuller Brush Girl" (Col) (reissues) plus Marciano-Walcott fight pix, disappointing $9,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,300; 60-80)—"Stranger in Between" (U) (2d wk). Near $5,000 following fast $6,500 for first week.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 40-85)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Spider and the Fly" (Indie). Mild $4,000. Last week, "Just for You" (Par) and "Woman of North Country" (Rep) (2d wk), $3,500.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 40-85)—"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and "My Man and I" (M-G). Nice $19,000. Last week, "Big Sky" (RKO) and "Secret People" (Lip) (2d wk) plus Marciano-Walcott film, fine $15,000.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,367; 40-85)—"Quiet Man" (Rep) (3d wk). Still nice at $11,000 following big $17,500 for second.

Orpheum (Loew) (3,000; 74-$1.25)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Holding up nicely at $26,000 following big $34,000 for first.

Paramount (NET) (1,700; 40-85) —"Crimson Pirate" (WB) and "Spider and Fly" (Indie). Mild $10,500. Last week, "Just for You" (Par) and "Woman of North Country" (Rep) (2d wk), $9,000.

State (Loew) (3,500; 74-$1.25)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Tastey $18,000 after sock $24,500 for first.

'Ivanhoe' Smash $29,000, Denver; 'Fatima' Fat 10G

Denver, Oct. 7.

Televising of World Series on screen at the Paramount, free to the public, failed to clip grosses here excepting at the Par where matinees were late in starting. "Ivanhoe" is packing the Orpheum for a smash figure, and holds. "Miracle of Fatima" shapes fine at Broadway, and is holding. "Just For You" continues so strongly it will go a third.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,400; 50-85)—"I Dream of Jeanie" (Rep) and "Tembo" (RKO), day-date with Tabor,

B'way Mats Walloped by World Series; Cinerama SRO 35G, 'Paleface'-Prima Big 75G, 'Snows' Smash 58G in 3d

Despite five new bills, Broadway first-run business is as spotty as the stock market this session. The World Series undoubtedly took a heavy toll at the boxoffice in the afternoon for the last seven days. However, outside of the heavy rain washout last Thursday, night biz has been strong. Last Saturday (4) was unusually big, mainly because of sock night biz.

Launching of Cinerama last Tuesday (30) drew thousands to the Broadway Theatre, particularly after rave reviews. The line-up of Cinerama shorts is heading for a terrific $35,000, virtual capacity.

"Son of Paleface," with Louis Prima band, Five De Marco Sisters, Los Gatos onstage, wound up its first week at the Paramount with a big $75,000. Personals by Bob Hope, star of pic, on opening day got the bill off to a big start. "Lure of Wilderness," also new, is just okay with $12,000 at the Globe while the new bill of "Hurricane Smith" and eight acts of vaude is heading for a good $21,000 at the Palace.

"Savage Triangle," French drama, wound up its first stanza at the Paris with a stout $8,500.

An outstanding holdover is "Snows of Kilimanjaro," which continues at smash $58,000 in third round at the Rivoli. Continuing near opening week's pace is "Because You're Mine," with stageshow, at fine $136,000 in second session at the Music Hall.

"Somebody Loves Me," with Mary Small, Al Bernie and iceshow, finished its second week with a nice $72,000 at the Roxy. Personals by Blossom Seeley and Benny Fields, whose biogs are depicted in the film, undoubtedly gave bill a lift.

"Magic Box" landed a nice $7,800 in second week at the Normandie. "Just For You" supplants "Quiet Man" at the Capitol today. Latter held to nice $18,000 in final week of six days.

"Merry Widow" continued big at $23,000 in second stanza at the State. "High Noon" is winding up with an okay $11,000 in 11th week at the Mayfair, with "World in His Arms" replacing it tomorrow (Thurs.).

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 70-$1.50) —"Miracle of Fatima" (WB) (7th wk). Holding steady at around $9,000 currently after okay $10,000 for sixth week, but below hopes. Stays until Oct. 23, when "Limelight" (UA) opens.

Broadway (Cinerama) (1,250; 90-$2.80)—"This Is Cinerama" (Indie) (2d wk). Initial week ended last night (Tues.) came close to $35,000, virtual capacity and terrific for 17 shows and reduced seating capacity here. There were 650 seats taken out to launch this new "tri-dimensional" picture setup in N. Y. Theatre is now selling 16 weeks in advance, with house now sold out for several weeks nearly every show.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 70-$1.50) —"Just For You" (Par). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Quiet Man" (Rep) (7th wk-6 days), nice $18,000 for abbreviated week. Sixth round was fancy $26,000, but below expectancy. Makes a highly profitable longrun, one of best here in months.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 50-$1.80) —"One Minute To Zero" (RKO) (3d wk). Holding at good $12,000 or near. Last week, nice $17,000, over expectancy.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Stranger in Between" (U) (8th wk). The seventh stanza ended Monday (6) held at $4,000 after okay $4,500 for sixth week. "The Promoter" (U) opens Oct. 28.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 50-$1.50) —"Lure of Wilderness" (20th). Initial stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for barely okay $12,000 or less. Holds. In ahead, "You For Me" (M-G), only $8,000 in 9 days despite previews.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 50-$1.50) —"High Noon" (UA) (11th-final wk). Looks to wind up long run with okay $11,000. The 10th round was nice $13,500. "World in His Arms" (U) opens tomorrow (Thurs.).

Normandie (Normandie Theatres) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Magic Box" (Mayer) (3d wk). First holdover session ended Monday (6) was nice $7,800 after big $10,400 for opening week. Stays on.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 75-$1.40)—"Hurricane Smith" (Par) and 8 acts of vaude. Heading for very good $21,000 or close. Last week, "Night Without Sleep" (20th) and vaude plus fight films, nice $22,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 80-$1.80) —"Son of Paleface" (Par) with Louis Prima orch, Five De Marco Sisters, Keely Smith, Los Gatos onstage (2d wk). First week ended last night (Tues.) was big $75,000, with pic getting a rousing start via personals by Bob Hope, star of film, on first day. In ahead, "Big Jim McLain" (WB) with Mills Bros., Jean Carroll, Danny Lewis, Tommy Reynolds orch onstage (2d wk), $53,000.

Park Ave. (Reade) (583; 90-$1.50) —"Mons. Fabre" (Indie) (5th wk). Fourth frame ended Saturday (4) was okay $4,700 after trim $6,000 for third week.

Paris (Indie) (568; $1.25-$1.80)—"Savage Triangle" (Indie) (2d wk). Initial stanza ended Sunday (5) hit big $8,500. In ahead, "Casque d'Or" (Discina) (6th wk), $5,500.

Rivoli (UAT) (2,092; 70-$2)—"Snows of Kilimanjaro" (20th) (3d wk). Still smash with $58,000 or close. Second week was sockeroo $63,000, over hopes.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 80-$2.40)—"Because You're Mine" (M-G) with stageshow (2d wk). Consistent with opening week's gait with fine $136,000, having no holidays to help this round. Last week, big $144,000, but slightly below expectancy. Stays a third, and probably longer.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 80-$2.20)—"Somebody Loves Me" (Par) with Mary Small, Al Bernie, iceshow plus personals by Blossom Seeley and Benny Fields the second week (3d-final wk). Second round ended last night (Tues.) held at nice $72,000, with sneak preview of "The Stooge" (Par) helping. First week was fine $77,000, but considerably below hopes.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-$1.25)—"Merry Widow" (M-G) (3d wk). First holdover stanza ended last night (Tues.) held at big $23,000 or better. First week was sock $37,000, slightly under expectancy.

Sutton (R&B (561; 90-$1.50)—"Man in White Suit" (U) (28th wk). Held at $5,000 in 27th week ended Monday (6) after $5,400 for 26th round. "Four Poster" (Col) opens Oct. 15, day-date with Victoria.

Trans-Lux 60th St. (T-L) (453; 90-$1.50)—"Lady Vanishes" (UA) (reissues) (10th wk). Holding nicely at $4,00 or near after $4,400 for ninth week. "Limelight" (UA) opens Oct. 23, on two-a-day, reserved-seat policy, playing day-date with Victoria.

Trans-Lux 52d St. (T-L) (540; 90-$1.50)—"Ivory Hunter" (U) (8th wk). Seventh session ended Sunday (5) held at $4,200 after nice $5,000 for sixth round.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 70-$1.80)—"Affair in Trinidad" (Col) (11th-final wk). The 10th frame ended last night (Tues.) was mild $8,000 after $9,500 for ninth week. "Four Poster" (Col) opens on Oct. 15 (Wed.).

'For You' Tasty $15,000, L'ville; 'Ali Baba' Trim 12G, 'Pirate' $6,500, 2d

Louisville, Oct. 7.

"Just For You," Bing Crosby pic at the Rialto, is class of town this week. "Crimson Pirate" at the Mary Anderson looks nice in second week. "Son Of Ali Baba" at the State looks solid. Since the Strand closed, town has only four houses in the first-run category, all within a single block on the main stem.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 54-75) —"High Noon" (UA) (3d wk), still going strong in third stanza with $4,500. Last week, excellent $5,500.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,200; 54-75)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) (2d wk), Burt Lancaster still pulling 'em in. Looks nice $6,500 after last week's smash $8,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 54-75)—"Just For You" (Par). Wrapping up top biz in town this week, big $15,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) and "Breakdown" (RKO), $11,000.

State (Loew's) (3,000; 54-75)—"Son Of Ali Baba" (U) and "You For Me" (M-G). Nice $12,000. Last week, "Devil Makes 3" (M-G) and "Washington Story" (M-G), $11,000.

Way of a Gaucho

trying to save Calhoun from capture, the gaucho realizes he had been wrong all along, risks all to marry his girl and then surrenders to Boone.

Picture includes plenty of shots of gauchos dashing pell-mell across the pampas and displays the scenic values of the settings, such as the Andean foothills, beautiful old churches and homes, via the excellent lensing of Harry Jackson. The danger-packed cattle stampede that brings death to Marlowe is a high action point. Boone, Marlowe and Everett Sloane are familiar faces in the featured cast, each doing as well as possible with characters that are not too clearly defined in the writing. Among the native players doing well are Enrique Chaico, as a priest; Roland Dumas, Lidia Campos and Raoul Astor.

Film has a good score cleffed by Sol Kaplan. Editing keeps the running time down to 90 minutes but is not smooth. Brog.

The Four Poster

Rex Harrison-Lilli Palmer in adaptation from stage hit; moderate b.o.

Columbia release of Stanley Kramer production. Stars Rex Harrison, Lilli Palmer. Directed by Irving Reis. Screenplay, Allan Scott, based on play by Jan de Hartog; inter-scene animation by United Productions of America (directed by John Hubley; produced by Stephen Bosustow); animation artists, Paul Julian, Art Babbitt, Lon Keller; editor, Henry Batista; music composed and directed by Dimitri Tiomkin. Previewed at Victoria, N. Y., Oct. 2, '52. Running time, 103 MINS.

Jan de Hartog's amusing two-character comedy-drama, "The Four Poster," has been given an interesting film presentation by Stanley Kramer, with Rex Harrison and Lilli Palmer as the leads. Though the picture is produced imaginatively, it emerges as just a moderate b.o. bet, being little more than a potpourri of incidents in the lives of a husband and wife through their marital years.

"Poster" as a pic is still limited to the same two characters of the play, with nary the suggestion of an interloper. Though the stars' performances are excellent, they are unable to salvage audience interest during the film's lesser moments. In fact, the major fault is the inability of the two characters to cope with the lack of incident.

With the four poster bed in the background as the common denominator of their marital relationship, "Poster" traces the lives of a couple from the day the groom carries his bride across the threshold. From then on are detailed his struggles as a writer, the bride's faith in his ability, his success, their children, the son's death in World War I, the romantic escapades of the husband and wife and finally their deaths.

All through this the four poster remains a symbol of their love and marriage. Occasionally the pair's relationship is touching for its charm and sentiment, but that's the yarn's major asset, and few successful pix can be carried on that basis alone.

"Poster" has a pat, more intimate formula for the theatre, as demonstrated on Broadway last season by Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy, but it's doubtful if film audiences beyond the key cities will find it stimulating despite the fine performances by Harrison and Miss Palmer, and an excellent production.

The picture has the advantage of clever animations drawn to bridge the time gaps in the narrative, and Irving Reis has managed, in his direction, to keep alive the beauty of the husband-wife relationship. The animated drawings, incidentally, are especially imaginative and do much to relieve the yarn from the feeling of being highly repetitive.

Miss Palmer imparts s.a. and natural beauty to the role of the wife, and she has a chance to show off her svelte chassis in some notable creations. In addition to which, she captures the naivete of the bride, and later the zest of the wife and mother. It is mostly her picture. Harrison has captured much of the boyish quality inherent in the husband's character, though the final scene, in which the deceased wife returns in his imagination, becomes rather trite theatrics. Kahn.

Because of You

Sentimental yarn with romantic overtones. Good b.o. potentials.

Universal release of Albert J. Cohen production. Stars Loretta Young and Jeff Chandler; features Alex Nicol, Frances Dee, Alexander Scourby. Directed by Joseph Pevney. Screenplay, Ketty Frings, based on story by Thelma Robinson; camera, Russell Metty; editor, Virgil Vogel; music Frank Skinner. Previewed N. Y. Oct. 1, '52. Running time, 95 MINS.

| Christine Carroll | Loretta Young |
| Steve Kimberly | Jeff Chandler |
| Mike Monroe | Alex Nicol |
| Susan Arnold | Frances Dee |
| Dr. Breen | Alexander Scourby |
| Rosemary Balder | Lynne Roberts |
| Peachie | Mae Clark |
| Kim | Gayle Reed |
| George | Billy Wayne |
| Judy | Frances Karath |

Since soap opera on both radio and screen has been as lasting as it has been profitable, there is no reason to suspect that this somewhat weepy but well acted and directed drama should be the exception to the rule. Dripping with sentimentality, it's a neat commercial package, particularly for the smaller towns, and has obvious femme appeal.

Pic has a tendency to go off in all directions, and scripter Ketti Frings really pours it on so that some scenes have an almost maudlin quality. The two leading players, Jeff. Chandler and Loretta Young, make a fine romantic team, managing at times to make even the more ludicrous situations ring true. Sex angle is introduced with unusual prominence and played for all it's worth.

Yarn has Miss Young, a brassy blonde, about to be married to racketeer Alex Nicol when the cops nab both of them. They find an incriminating envelope Nicol has slipped to her just before the arrest, and the girl goes to prison. There she discovers her intellect, turns out to be a fine nurse's aid and falls in love with Chandler, a wounded pilot with neurotic tendencies.

Considering that the film's tearjerker elements are sufficient to keep a radio serial going for a couple of years, director Joseph Pevney has done a good job in tying things together. Transitions, such as Miss Young's change from dumb blonde to refined lady, and Chandler's switch from lover to enemy, weaken the pic but may not bother the average patron.

Chandler has a very appealing personality. Miss Young is an eyeful and an expert in the clinches, of which there are a good many. Frances Dee, reappearing on the screen for the first time in years; Alexander Scourby, as the doctor; Nicol and the rest of the cast give polished performances.

Pevney's direction brings in some good touches, and he has a fine understanding for the need to lighten proceedings once in a while. Russell Metty's camera work is a notch above routine. Hift.

La Jeune Folle
(The Mad Girl)
(FRENCH)

Venice Sept. 23.

Cocinor release of Hoche production. Stars Daniele Delorme, Henri Vidal. Directed by Yves Allegret. Screenplay, Jacques Sigurd from novel by Catherine Beauchamp; camera, Roger Hubert; editor, Claude Nicole. At Venice Film Festival. Running time, 95 MINS.

|---|---|
| Catherine | Daniele Delorme |
| Steve | Henri Vidal |
| Mother | Jacqueline Porel |
| Mary | Michele Cordue |
| Informer | Jean Debucourt |
| Kevin | Maurice Roynet |

This film is chiefly notable for a brilliantly coordinated performance by Daniele Delorme as a strange young girl haunted by premonitions. Her expert thesping holds together this otherwise plodding, downbeat affair of an incident during the Irish rebellions. Foggy atmosphere is well created but film does not reach a high dramatic level. Slow pacing cues this for offbeat slotting or in some special situations in America.

A young girl, living in a convent, is considered mad because of her dreamy comportment. One night she gets a premonition that her brother needs her. In reality he has been killed by the Irish rebels because he turned informer. Looking for her brother, she is taken up and sheltered by the organization. She unknowingly falls in love with brother's murderer. Later she learns who killed her brother and she goes out to avenge him. In a last embrace, she shoots him.

Direction is careful but can not breathe dramatic life into this tale of tragic love. Daniele Delorme shows herself as an actress of stature in a fine performance. Henri Vidal is good as the rebel leader. Lensing is okay. Mosk.

Something for the Birds

Romantic comedy with Washington as the setting for jibes at solons, lobbyists and special interests. Oke for general bookings.

The nation's capital provides the setting for this round of romantic comedy that wears the unlikely, but apt, title of "Something For the Birds." The film is laced with jibes at special interests, solons and lobbyists which, in view of the national pastime of talking back at Washington, will be good for chuckles during this feature's general market playoff.

The Samuel G. Engel production uses such familiar names as Victor Mature, Patricia Neal and Edmund Gwenn to topline the cast, and each contributes likeably to answering the demands of Robert Wise's direction and the script. Story doesn't scratch the surface, emotionally, except for a single tearjerker scene, but the pace is fast enough to rate mild attention for the light doings.

Miss Neal comes to Washington to prevent the passage of a bill that would result in the extinction of the California condor. Opposing is an oil company, represented by lobbyist Mature. Through chance, at a party she crashes, Miss Neal makes the acquaintance of both Mature and Gwenn, the latter a kindly old gentleman affectionately known as "Admiral" and a frequent, welcome guest at all of the capital's more plush social affairs.

As the story boils along a complicated course, Gwenn comes to Miss Neal's aid and Mature tries to do what he can behind the scenes. But Gwenn's help becomes involved with an investigation of bribery gifts because he has innocently accepted a refrigerator from Mature and he is exposed as a printshop engraver who, for some 20 years, has purloined the swank party invitations that he uses to crash the affairs. Tearjerk scene has him facing the investigators and TV cameras proudly explaining why he wears the Navy Cross. This, plus Mature's use of organized lobbying tactics, saves the day for Miss Neal's project, and the California condor is saved from extinction.

For domestic consumption, the jibes scripters I. A. L. Diamond and Boris Ingster toss at Washington are in keeping with the tenor of times and are strictly for pointed fun, but for other than stateside filmgoers may have a different meaning. Script also gets in some sharp licks at television, particularly commercials and reception interference. Film was based on stories by Alvin M. Josephy, Joseph Petracca and Ingster.

Larry Keating, Gladys Hurlbut, Hugh Sanders and Christian Rub make up the competent featured players, and others, including the bird-calling Archer MacDonald, aid with chuckles. Joseph La Shelle's lensing is expert, as are the other technical credits. Brog.

La Bergere et le Ramoneur
(Shepherdess and Chimneysweep)
(FRENCH-COLOR-SONGS)

Venice, Sept. 23.

Les Gemeaux release of Andre Sarrut production. Directed by Pierre Grimault. Screenplay, Jacques Prevert, Grimault; editor, Charles Nato; music, Joseph Kosma. At Venice Film Festival. Running time, 65 MINS.

This animated film in Technicolor was five years in production with a nut of $1,500,000, which is three times the cost of the top-budget French pix. Pic is now under litigation with Paul Grimault claiming he did not finish last half which was done by producer Andre Sarrut. Grimault tried to have pic yanked from Venice Fete entries but it was shown anyway without his name in the credits. In the present form, the pic is uneven and the short running time may make this hard to sell.

It is a sophisticated story of a tyrant in a mythical kingdom and how he is overcome by a wily bird. First half abounds in imagination and solid whimsy, making it an animated film for grownups. Second half bogs down with too much attempted poetry that backfires. But on the whole the film is an interesting try at an animated feature in the Gallic idiom. It might do in the U. S. for some arty spots with some strong supporting shorts. Pic will find it hard going here to overcome its heavy overhead.

Animation is topnotch, and backgrounds as well as color are on a top plane. The king is an evil, conniving character who meets his comeuppance because of the wily machinations of the individualistic, gruff freedom-loving bird. The two lovers remain vapid characters throughout. Gags are well done. Standout are the king's use of a trapdoor to get rid of all annoying people, the chases and the final destruction of the city.

Pierre Brasseur lends an acrobatic, rueful voice to the bird and Serge Reggiani and Anouk Aimee adequately dub in the lovers. Lesser characters are well done. An English version has been finished with Peter Ustinov, Claire Bloom and Denham Elliot voicing the antics of this interesting offbeat animated film. This copped a special jury prize at the Venice Film Festival here. Mosk.

The Raiders

Richard Conte, Viveca Lindfors in fast western meller; looks good boxofice in key spots.

Universal release of William Alland production. Stars Richard Conte, Viveca Lindfors; features Barbara Britton, Richard Martin, Morris Ankrum, William Bishop. Directed by Lesley Selander. Screenplay, Polly James, Lillie Hayward, from story by Lyn Crost Kennedy, camera, Carl Guthrie; editor, Paul Wheatherwax; music, Joseph Gershenson. Tradeshown in N. Y., Oct. 6, '52. Running time, 82 MINS.

| Marshall Bill Henderson | William Bishop |
| Thomas Ainsworth | Morris Ankrum |

| Welch | John Kellogg |
| Pete Robbins | Lane Bradford |
| Clark Leftus | Riley Hill |
| Juan Castillo | Neyle Morrow |
| Ramon Castillo | Carlos Rivero |
| Vicente | George Lewis |
| John Cummings | Francis MacDonald |

Despite the handicap of an innocuous title, "The Raiders" is a smartly made western that should rack up good grosses and show a nice profit. Pic is filled with gunfights and action trimly blended with considerable suspense. Other plusses are Richard Conte, turning in one of his best performances as a vengeful, honest western goldminer, and Viveca Lindfors, playing a Mexican beauty.

The story of the lawless days of California, circa 1849, pits Conte and other outraged landowners against a thieving combine which is jumping rich mining claims via cutthroat methods. There is the familiar, powerful and suave leader, Morris Ankrum, who employs a murderous band of outlaws to theft the land. Conte is the organizer of the little miners and homesteaders, who, with the aid of Richard Martin, a formerly wealthy Mexican ranchowner, snafus the gang. There's the romance of Conte and Miss Lindfors, Martin's sister, for added appeal.

Conte fills his role neatly. Miss Lindfors is excellent as Martin's sister, who tries to prevent him from taking the law into his own hands. Martin, often seen in light comedy roles, proves equally effective as the chief supporting character. Ankrum makes a suitable suave villain. William Bishop, as the marshal, capably heads the big supporting cast. Barbara Britton, in the role of Ankrum's daughter, is demure, and has little to do. Hugh O'Brian, William Reynolds, Lane Bradford and Riley Hill play their western characters in okay style.

Lesley Selander's direction is one of his best. Polly James and Lillie Hayward scripted the Lyn Crost Kennedy story for maximum movement without losing the story stread. Technicolor photography is topflight and Paul Wheatherwax edited deftly. Wear.

Good Allan "Rocky" Lane western programmer for oater fans.

Hollywood, Oct. 3.

Republic release of Rudy Ralston production. Stars Allan "Rocky" Lane, Black Jack (equine); features Eddy Waller, Roy Barcroft, Myron Healey, Lyle Talbot, Claudia Barrett. Directed by Philip Ford. Written by Arthur Orloff and Albert De Mond; camera, John MacBurnie; editor, Tony Martinelli. Previewed Oct. 2, '52. Running time, 54 MINS.

| Jim Boylan | Roy Barcroft |
| Lt. Dan Booker | Myron Healey |
| Walter Fleming | Lyle Talbot |
| Kathy | Claudia Barrett |
| Mike | Lane Bradford |
| Spec Matson | Lee Roberts |
| Deputy Marshal | Edward Cassidy |
| Major Seeley | Charles Evans |
| Tony | Zon Murray |
| Army Sergeant | Slim Duncan |

Standard of the Allan "Rocky" Lane series at Republic is maintained in this latest entry, the action and uncomplicated plot spinning off at a pace that will please the juve fans.

Lane's heroics are excellent, with a number of rugged scraps thrown in, as he plays the part of a Federal investigator sent to check up on the wrecking of a stage coach line owned by Eddy Waller. The heavies have cooked a scheme to bankrupt Waller so they can use his homestead, the only house in the valley equipped with running water, to siphon off mercury through the water pipe from a nearby mine.

Lane rides, shoots and fights his way along as he uncovers the scheme and is able to trap the villains at their game, thus saving the mercury for use by the U. S.

Waller backs Lane's heroics with some crusty comedics as the stage line owner, and Myron Healey is competent as the Army lieutenant in charge of the mine. Lyle Talbot and Roy Barcroft are expert heavies, and Claudia Barrett supplies the slight femme interest.

Philip Ford's direction moves the Arthur Orloff-Albert De Mond screen story along at the proper pace, and Rudy Ralston's production values are satisfactory. John MacBurnie did the good lensing and Tony Martinelli the tight editing. Brog.

Voodoo Tiger

Standard Jungle Jim adventure with Johnny Weissmuller; for programmers.

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Columbia release of Sam Katzman production. Stars Johnny Weissmuller; features Jean Byron, James Seay, Jeanne Dean, Charles Horvath, Robert Bray, Michael Fox, Rick Vallin. Directed by Spencer G. Bennett. Story and screenplay, Samuel Newman; based on King Features' newspaper feature; camera, William Whitley; editor, Gene Havlick. Reviewed Sept. 25, '52. Running time, 67 MINS.

|---|---|
| Jungle Jim | Johnny Weissmuller |
| Phyllis Bruce | Jean Byron |
| Abel Peterson | James Seay |
| Shalimar | Jeanne Dean |
| Wombulu | Charles Horvath |
| Major Bill Green | Robert Bray |

| Jerry Masters | John Cason |
| Michael Kovacs | Paul Hoffmon |
| Commissioner Kingston | Richard Kipling |
| Native Chief | Fredric Berest |
| Co-Pilot | William R. Klein |
| Native Leader | Alex Montoya |

Based on the "Jungle Jim" comic strip, "Voodoo Tiger" stacks up as okay program filler. The jungle adventure yarn abounds with blood-and-thunder, and moppets will go for this aspect of it. For the mature minds producer Sam Katzman presents a troupe known as Shalimar and Her Dancing Girls, with the scantily clad femmes trekking all over the jungle, and Shalimar climaxing it all with a burlesque routine in the heart of the veldt.

There's quite a number of stock shots of animals in jungle fights, and Johnny Weissmuller, as Jungle Jim, tackles a lion himself. Yarn, such as it is, deals with Jim tracking down a Nazi officer in the jungle, the Nazi having the secret to the whereabouts of an art treasure heisted during occupation of France. A gang of American hoods is also breathing down the Nazi's neck, and both parties clash head-on, with the head-hunters of deepest Africa taking over. Weissmuller, virtually single-handed, eliminates both the hoods and head-hunters, and captures his Nazi.

Actors meet a fate worse than Newman's script, with all thesping wooden, only real movement being offered by Jeanne Dean as Shalimar when she wiggles wildly in the jungle dance. Weissmuller is virtually immobile in the lead, and Jean Byron, James Seay, Charles Horvath and Rick Vallin are equally statuesque in lesser roles.

Spencer G. Bennett's direction is as mediocre as the acting. Technical credits are okay, particularly camera work by William Whitely. Dave.

Parisian Legit Into Full Swing With Bernstein, Guitry, Achard Preems

Paris, Oct. 7.

The few legiters that still have the annual closing signs tacked up are rapidly throwing their doors open as the season here goes into full swing.

Oldtime playwrights still have the edge here. Sacha Guitry opened his revival of "Don't Listen Ladies" Wednesday (1) at the Theatre Des Varietes. Besides Guitry, who always stars and directs, there is Renee Passeur, Lana Marconi and Jeanne-Fusier Gir. Henri Bernstein's "Evangeline," starring Daniele Darrieux in her return to legit, with support by Raymond Pellegrin and Renaud Mary, also opened Wednesday.

Marcel Achard's "The Companions of the Marjolaine," with Arletty and Bernard Blier, and staging by Yves Robert, opened at the Antoine Friday (3).

Still on the boards is the longrun "Gift of Adele," by Pierre Barilett and J. P. Gredy, which runs another 40 shows before folding. Marcel Ayme's controversial "The Head of Others," with its sock at the judicial body here, is back at the Atelier. The Athenee has the successful religious drama, "On Earth As in Heaven," again and the Hebertot Theatre still is going strong with the Bernanos play about life in a convent during the French Revolution, "The Dialog of Carmelites," which ran through the summer.

Bouffe-Parisiens has another week of the longrun Andre Roussin comedy, "Nina." Roussin is playing a role himself in this comedy until it closes. Also on the marquees here by Roussin are "When the Child Appears," with Gaby Morlay, at the Nouveautes, and "The Kitchen of Angels" at the Vieux Colombier. Jean Anouilh play, "The Waltz of the Toreodors," is making a brief appearance at the Comedie Des Champs Elysees.

Jacques Deval has his "Dear Shadow" back in the Edouard VII Theatre. This to soon be succeeded by his new play, "Midnight Courage," with Jean Richard. Another new play of his is "The Happiness of the Wicked," which is to succeed "Nina" at the Bouffes-Parisiens. Elvire Popesco, now starring in "Nina," stays on for "Wicked." Another one up his sleeve is a starrer for radio comedian Robert Lamoreux called "I've Loved You a Long Time," which will be put on at the Varietes later this season. "The Heiress" is in its second year and still successful. A dramatization of Edna Ferber's "Back Street," is at the Theatre Fontaine.

26 Films Produced In W. Germany 1st Half Of Yr.; Austro Pact Set

Washington, Oct. 7.

During the first half of this year West German studios turned out 26 features, with practically all studios having some part in the production, reports Nathan D. Golden, director of the Commerce Department's film branch.

A new German-Austrian pact has gone into effect for the year commencing Sept. 1, 1952, whereby the Germans may send 95 features and 100 documentaries into Austria while the Austrians may export 15 features and 20 documentaries into West Germany. In addition, 10 productions are to be made with Germany-Austrian interests co-operating.

A Federal Youth Protection Law has been placed in effect in West Germany which delegates authority to the German states to determine whether films are suitable for minors. The various states have agreed to accept the recommendations of a Voluntary Self-Censorship Board in this field. During the first half of 1952, the Board okayed 250 features. It rejected five Hollywood and one German picture pending certain revisions. Of the pictures approved, 150 were American.

Golden also reported that in French West Africa 110 film theatres are operated on a civilian basis plus seven run by the army for military personnel. About 40% of the theatres have 35m equipment, 30% have 16m equipment, while the remainder are equipped with both 35m and 16m.

'Meet the Press' But Not on Sun. in Cuba

Havana, Oct. 1.

The Cuban government has ordered a controversial TV program to switch the time of its telecasts from its present choice spot Sunday nights. CMQ-TV's "Meet the Press" was told it can continue telecasting any other day of the week, but not Sundays. Ostensible reason for the action was a law that prohibits newspapermen from working on Sundays. The "Meet the Press" programs consist of having three newspapermen interview a prominent political figure each week. When the question was first raised about the newspapermen participating in a Sunday show, the National Collegium of Journalists said the law did not apply to video shows.

Believed here that the government's real motive in acting was to move the program where fewer people will receive it. Although a number of government officials have appeared on the program, top opposition leaders also have been guests on it, and this did not please the government. More than one oppositionist has been arrested as he stepped from the studio because expressing his opinions too bluntly.

Spain May Get Sponsored TV

Madrid, Sept. 30.

Gariel Soria, representing Radio Corp. of America in Spain, believes a government-owned TV station will be operating here in the near future. Although there are companies competing for the contract to supply the material, but RCA apparently has the inside track since a pioneer in Spain's tele field. Four years ago it installed a station here, with special shows given for local bigwigs by RCA prexy Frank M. Folsom.

Soria figures that video sets could be imported at the official exchange of 40 pesetas to the $1 and, if the custom rights are not too high, sets could be sold here for about 12,000 pesetas ($300). Many people in the Madrid area could afford this price. Special arrangements for televising football matches (tops in popularity here), bullfights and other open air shows might draw at cinemas.

If the government, following the example of what was done with radio, limits itself to owning one video station and permits private enterprise to build other stations, great possibilities are forecast for the industry. Spain now has 80 privately-owned radio stations, all operating partly on sponsored programs. Hence, video stations should do comparatively as well.

Foreign observers on the Spanish scene think that TV never will constitute a real danger to show biz because the Spanish people like the excitement and the company of crowds too much to remain at home for hours viewing telecasts.

'Wind', 'Winchester' Top Film Grossers in Japan

Tokyo, Sept. 23.

"Gone With Wind" easily won first place at the b.o. here the first two weeks in September, racking up record breaking figures in both stanzas. First week was $19,700, with second one near that total.

"Winchester '73" was tops in the general release field with $23,800 for nine houses. "My Favorite Spy" (Par) garnered $15,800 in nine theatres.

Mills Circus Cuts Divvy

London, Oct. 7.

With a dip in profits of more than 50%, Bertram Mills circus has slashed its dividend from 225% to 120%. Profits of the company dropped from $269,000 in 1951 to $123,000 for current fiscal year.

Stock market quotation of the company's ordinary shares which have a par value of 14c has dropped in five years from the peak figure of $6 to 90c.

Janis Scores in Europe Debut; Return Dates Set

Amsterdam, Oct. 7.

Byron Janis, American pianist, who made his European debut here recently with the Concertgebouw Orchestra, under direction of Eduard van Bienum, has scored a big success in Holland. He's been engaged for return appearances with the Concertgebouw next season.

The original Concertgebouw appearances for three concerts have been extended to two more. Janis will give a recital in Amsterdam Oct. 21 and The Hague Oct. 20. He's playing with the Haarlem Orchestra Oct. 15-16-17.

Tour was arranged through Andre Mertens of Columbia Artists Mgt., N. Y., and Dr. de Koos, local impresario.

Brit. Labor Still Asks To Air Views on Quota Although Pact Is Set

London, Sept. 30.

For some months, the labor side of the British production industry has been planning an offensive designed to stem the dollar drain on film expenditures and provide favored-nation treatment for British pix. Top level secret meetings were organized and a concerted campaign was being readied to coincide with the opening of the Anglo-American negotiations in London.

But the talks opened and closed in Washington too quickly for the union toppers, who were caught short and faced with an agreement before they had finalized their protest. However, they are pursuing their protest and have asked the Board of Trade prexy to receive a deputation at which they will advance views as to why the British government should reject the agreement which it has already accepted.

In a press release accompanying the memorandum sent the BOT, the Film Industry Employees Council, which embraces most of the studio unions, complains that while the country is to incur cuts of $476,000,000 in imported food stuffs, the British public is to continue paying for the "luxury of the total American film output being imported into this country." Meantime, they complain that half of the British studio space remains idle and half the artists and technicians remain unemployed.

In their memo to the government, the unions agitate for a five year extension to the Eady fund; a discriminatory tax remission in favor of British product; amendment of the quota act to protect only the production of films "generally British in character"; and for the National Film Finance Corp. to extend its help to producers outside the three groups.

The studio unions also assert that the present method of exhibition is inefficient and wasteful. They contend that with a radical reform in distribution a fewer number of films, British and foreign, could be used to satisfy a wider audience.

Berlin Culture Fest Success; 'Porgy' Top Draw; Pix Biz Hit by Competish

Berlin, Oct. 7.

The second Berlin Cultural Festival wound up here last Tuesday (30) with performances of Sadler's Wells Ballet. Within 31 days, 130 presentations with more than 1,000 artists took place. The variety of contributions by European, American and Indian countries assured a genuinely international character for the festival. Nations sending representations to West Berlin included the U. S., France, Italy, Switzerland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Spain, Austria and India.

The last festival week included two guest performances of the Hamburg State Opera with Stravinsky's "The Rake's Progress," which received a mixed reception by crix and audiences. Blacher's opera, "Prussian Fairy Tale," symphony concerts conducted by Eugene Ormandy, Hans Knappertsbusch, Eugen Jochum and Ferenc Friscay, as well as number of stage preems, were also on the boards for the final week.

Nearly all festival presentations were sold out, especially ballet performances and foreign contributions. Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" recorded the top biz. Every show was SRO and the troupe could have easily stayed over for a fortnight. Tickets for "Porgy" on the black market sold up to 50 marks ($12). Gross for all performances, over-capacity, at $1.50 top, broke records. The N. Y. City Ballet also scored heavily.

No Pix Section

As contrasted with the arts junkets in Edinburgh, there was no film section connected with the festival. Pix preems were cut down to a minimum by distribs due to the big festival competition, which handicapped their biz considerably. Only two pix worth mentioning were preemed recently, RKO's "Fantasia" and Paramount's "Detective Story." There was no TV coverage this time. Last year, the entire "Oklahoma" show was telecast.

The big hotels on Kurfurstendamm drew top biz. Night life biz was better. As the Kurfurstendamm area is full of night spots, and there was practically no eatery shuttered during the festival, all spots registered more customers than usual. Cabaret-style entertainment went especially well with festival visitors.

Drayton in Fresh Plea For Keeping Eady Fund

London, Oct. 7.

Harold C. Drayton, who recently underlined the gravity of the producing situation here in his report to stockholders of British Lion Film Corp., has made a new plea in addressing shareholders of British Lion Studio Co. At the annual meeting last week, Drayton told stockholders that the studios were full until January, but after that date there would be difficulty in keeping them occupied unless there was an extension of the Eady Plan beyond 1954 or some revision in taxation.

He pointed out that anyone starting a film next January would not be showing it at the earliest before December and could not get his money back before the expiration of the current Eady scheme. In the present state of the industry it would be problematical whether the producer got his money back.

India Film Prod. Off Last Year

Washington, Oct. 7.

Although India ranks second only to the U. S. in number of films produced, there has been a steady decline in total quantity of pix turned out there. During 1951, reports Nathan D. Golden, director of the Commerce Department film division, a total of 221 features were produced and offered for censorship in India. This compared with 241 in 1950 and 289 in 1949. All are 35m productions.

About 40% to 50% of the pix are made in the Hindi language, the remainder being mainly in Bengali, Tamil, Telugu, Marathi, Malayan, Gujarati and Punjabi.

Because of the pileup of product in the theatres, the Indian studios managed to get only 180 of their 1951 output of films into release last year. More than half of the features (118 films) were made in the Bombay area; 45 were produced in Calcutta and the balance were made in Madras State. The Indian Motion Picture Producers Assn. reports that nearly 95% were entertainment in nature. There were a handful of historical and mythological stories.

In addition to commercial production, the government's Ministry of Information operates a Films Division which produced 38 documentaries last year. They were released both in 35m and 16m.

Golden reports also that Spain now has 4,500 film theatres with an aggregate seating capacity of about 2,300,000. None regularly use 16m films but some are equipped with 16m projectors for occasional special showings.

The country has 11 studios with a total of 27 stages. Seven studios are local in Madrid and four in the Barcelona area. Average output of features is about 40 per year.

Harry Gordon to Open Rhodes Festival in '53

Glasgow, Sept. 30.

Harry Gordon, No. 1 Scot comedian, will travel to South Africa in summer of 1953. He will be unofficial ambassador for Scotland at opening of the Cecil Rhodes Centenary Exhibition at Bulawayo, Southern Rhodesia.

Part of the huge exhibition grounds have been fashioned like the Hollywood Bowl, with different forms of entertainment to be given each week throughout the summer. Opener will be a gala Scotch week, with Harry Gordon supported by pipers and other Scottish artists.

Rank's Irish Profits Up

Dublin, Sept. 30.

Odeon (Ireland), Ltd, the Irish set-up of the J. Arthur Rank Organization, reports a net profit of $165,950 for the year ended last June 28.

This is an increase of $10,956 over last year's profit.

'My Boy,' 'Francis' Flops In Israel; 'In Arms' Big, Soviet 'Circus' Terrif

Tel Aviv, Sept. 30.

With the summer near ended exhibitors as well as all other show biz operators are looking anxiously for the winter season when they hope will make up for the losses experienced during the hot months.

Exhibitors claim this has been the hottest summer in years, since business dropped to such an extent that many cinemas as well as other places of entertainment could not meet expenses.

The cinemas have not come out with any new shows and will not preem anything before late October or November. Such films as "Francis" (U) and "That's My Boy" (Par) were rated the biggest boxoffice flops of the summer. On the other hand, one of the best grossers over the hot season was the reissue of Danny Kaye's "Up in Arms."

Fantastic business is being done presently in Haifa with the Russian picture, "Circus." The film, a 70-minute documentary in Agfa color, shows circus acts. It is now in its third week, having hit the biggest total this season during the first two weeks.

$140,000 Ticket Deal For 'Judy' London Run

London, Oct. 7.

A deal involving $140,000 has been made by a ticket broker for the new Emile Littler musical "Love From Judy," which opened recently at the Saville Theatre. The arrangement, one of the largest on record for a new British musical, extends over 30 weeks.

The production, which is adapted from "Daddy Long-Legs" by Eric Maschwitz, has a score by U. S. composer, Hugh Martin. Jean Carson, a local girl, stars.

Higher Quality for French Pix Aim Of New Aid Law Effective in Jan.

Paris, Oct. 7.

The Film Aid Law, which went into effect Sept. 23, 1948, had as its purpose the revival of a sorely lagging film industry after the war via aid to producers. However, the unsatisfactory aspects of the law and the recent crisis in film production here led to a new law being formulated by Jean Louvel, minister of commerce. This goes into effect in January next year, nine months before the expiration of the old law.

First part of the new law, concerning actual allocation of funds, is already drawn up. Another part of the law covering changes in the administrative aspects of the film set up here will be part of another section to be worked on later. The main problem now is finances to keep up a healthy quota of French films.

Although French film production number of pix has seemed healthy since 110 productions per year has been maintained, there has been a decline in quality due to indiscriminate allocation of the aid funds. The need for quality pix to crack foreign markets was essential but in many cases the aid law stymied this. A 35% donation to a producer on the proceeds of his last film to go into his next one led to many quickies. These could usually amortize themselves on the home market and the producer was then ready for another bite into the funds for another production of equally dubious quality. Big directors could not work steadily, and quality declined.

Exhibitors To Get New Houses

On the exhib side funds will be available for modernizing the many out-dated French film houses. New equipment will also be an important factor. New houses are also on the agenda. This also will apply to film laboratories.

Money for the fund will be raised by a 5% tax on all ducats; a tax of $6 on every yard of French film plus dubbed films; 60c a yard for the release of all shorts and 60c a yard on all foreign pix released in their original versions with subtitles. TV films will also come under this system.

Hassle Over Smallens' Conducting May Close London 'Porgy and Bess'

London, Oct. 7.

A hassle has developed over the engagement of Alexander Smallens to conduct the all-British orchestra for the London production of "Porgy and Bess" which opens at the Stoll, Kingsway, Thursday (9). A work permit, originally issued by the Ministry of Labor, was revoked following objections by the musician's union.

Opposition from the union followed the set formula. It complained that since there was no reciprocal arrangement for a British conductor to work in the U. S., the union could not sanction the engagement of Smallens. Producers of the show have emphasized that they don't want to do a British musician out of a job, and are willing to engage a British musical director to stand by.

Subsequent union offer to permit Smallens to conduct three performances has been turned down by co-producers Blevins Davis and Robert Breen, the former insisting that the U. S. conductor be permitted to handle the show until a Brritish successor has had time he become thoroughly familiar with the assignment. He threatens that "if the unreasonable demands" are carried out it "could have the effect of forcing us to close our London engagement after only three performances."

Use Rome Palace in Par Pic

Rome, Sept. 30.

Paramount's "Roman Holiday," currently in production here, has been locationing in a 16th Century palace of the Colonna family. Permission was granted to use the quarters by Princess Colonna to her friend, Mike Washinsky, head casting director for "Holiday."

Several local newspapermen and foreign correspondents worked in the scene, which depicts a press party for the visiting princess (Audrey Hepburn).

British Slowly Prepare For Future Com'l TV

London, Sept. 30.

Officially there is as yet no clue as to when the government greenlight for commercial TV will be turned on, but preparations are proceeding with typical British caution. At the moment no indication has been given as to the number of licenses that will be allowed to operate or the fees required to run a sponsored wavelength.

Despite this uncertainty there is, however, an indication of backroom activity to prepare for the eventuality. The major newspaper chains have already put in their requests to operate their own stations. Estimates vary, but it is generally reckoned that a year or two must elapse before a firm decision is made.

Argentine TV Still Lagging

Buenos Aires, Sept. 30.

Big efforts now are being made in Argentina to get TV set sales moving, notwithstanding the economic depression which is causing a widespread bankruptcies shuttering of many industrial plants.

Reliable estimates put the number of sets in actual use at about 2,500, only about 1,000 more than at this time last year. Many sets have come into the country when citizens brought back video sets from the U.S. as part of $500 worth of electrical appliances which Central Bank exchange regulations allowed.

A lot of TV material, sets, tubes and chassis have been imported this year by capitalists with political influence under import permits "without use of exchange." This allowed them to repatriate dollars held in the U.S. via this type of merchandise. This importation threw a monkey-wrench into the legitimate video set sales as they competed unfairly with dealers. There are now about 15,000 sets available, mostly in dealers' stores. This is an improvement over last year when there were not enough sets to give all dealers a chance to demonstrate. Imports are likely to be difficult for some time to come in view of the unfavorable exchange situation.

Oldie French Films Set For London Telecinema

Paris, Oct. 7.

Gavin Lambert, program arranger of the new Telecinema in London, is here looking for Gallic pix to screen at the new theatre which opens Oct. 23. Lambert is having trouble finding copies of the various films on his agenda because of the changing production status here, and disappearance of old distribs. So far he has garnered "Women of the Bois De Boulogne" and "The Angles of Sin," "Ballerina," "A Man Walks in the City" and "The Pleasure." The Film Museum here has been helpful in extending prints of old masterpieces to be on the agenda of the new non-commercial film club.

The London Telecinema, left over from the recent Festival of Great Britain, was taken over by the state-financed British Film Institute. Money to run it is being supplied by the British Production Fund. It will be considered non-commercial and run on a membership basis, with dues of $15 a year which allows members to book seats.

'Cantinflas' Back to Stage

Mexico City, Sept. 30.

"Cantinflas" (Mario Moreno), pic-stage comic, is readying a return to the stage, where he started. He's rehearsing a musical extravaganza, "I, Columbus," which is to open the new Teatro Insurgentes late in October.

Moreno's latest pic, "Atomic Fireman," is the current boxoffice champ.

UA Appoints Rothman Asst. European Chief

London, Sept. 30.

Mo M. Rothman, foreign manager for Edward Small, who has been operating from London in recent months, is transferring to Paris Oct. 15 where he will assume the post of assistant European manager for United Artists.

New appointment was made here last week with the approval of Small, whom Rothman will continue to represent in Europe during coming months.

Rothman will be deputy to Charles Smadja who operates from UA's Paris office.

'Big Hub-Bub' Italo Revue $25,000 Weekly Boffo In Milan; Accent U.S. Scenes

Milan, Sept. 30.

"Gran Baraonda" ("The Big Hub-Bub"), Italian revue which opened at Teatro Nuovo here Sept. 4, is cleaning up in the 1,800-seater with average weekly gross of $25,000. Show is set for additional two weeks in Milan and then tours, going to Venice, Florence, Trieste, and is due to open in Rome in February where it will remain until end of season (May 15).

"Hub-Bub," lavish show by Garinei & Giovannini, stars Wanda Csiris, veteran music-hall singer, and features Albero Sordi, Enzo Turco, Gianni Agus, Silvania Blasi and other Italian performers. English Bluebell Girls (12) serve as chorus and choreography is by American dancer George Reich.

Revue, as is usual with Continental musicals, utilizes potpourri of pop music. Additional original music is by Gorni Kramer. Show is in two parts and 29 scenes and has cast of 75. American background of Minneapolis, New Orleans and Reno is used in several scenes and there is showboat sequence.

"Hub-Bub" is "Spettacoli Errepi" production.

FEWER BRIT. CINEMAS GET TOTAL EXEMPTION

London, Sept. 30.

Fewer British theatres have been granted total exemption for the new quota year which begins tomorrow (Wed.) but more have been given relief. British film quota, of course, remains at 30%.

An analysis published by the Board of Trade shows that 2,118 exhibs applied either for relief or exemption. This figure is 39 below that of the previous year. Each application was scrutinized by a quota relief committee of the Films Council, and on its advice 1,439 theatres have been granted relief and 168 total exemption. Last year's figures were 1,428 and 190 respectively.

On the assumption that all theatres will fulfill their obligations, the BOT estimates that the reliefs and exemptions will reduce the average first-feature quota to 26.2%. The previous year's estimate was 25.6%.

Aussie Pix Leaders Deny Blocking Video

Sydney, Sept. 30.

Aussie film industry leaders here are denying the contention of radio industry toppers that they (the leaders) have silently moved behind the political scene for over two years to halt the advancement of TV locally. Pic men aver the tele bow-in was stymied here by political chiefs for defense reasons plus the high cost of equipment needed for a TV coast-to-coast network.

From the other side of the fence, however, radio men aver inside pressure is in evidence from filmites in a move to sidetrack TV Down Under. Story is that the industry feared the strong TV competition. Radio men aver that many members are facing ruin because of the government's failure to give the go-ahead sign to TV set production for which plants have been geared up ready to go for a long time.

Another angle in this "cold war" between film and radio forces is that the former declare many Aussie pix houses are prepared to use TV and have been for a long span.

The payoff is that talk at the government's capitol in Canberra sets TV as a real possibility Down Under late next year or early in 1954. Political pressure from with-

London First-Run Biz Very Spotty Albeit 'Lovely' Lively at $16,800; 'Wife' Fat 10½G, 'Fear' Fair $6,700

London, Sept. 30.

Unspectacular results are reported from the West End for the past week with only average return at most first-run theatres. Best business is being done by "Lovely. To Look At," with pleasing $16,800 at the Empire, and "The Planter's Wife," which finished its first round at the Leicester Square with a solid $10,500.

Other newcomers attracted only fair biz. "Sudden Fear" finished its first frame with a fairish $6,700. "Carson City" at the Warner was also mild at $4,500 in its first four days while "Jumping Jacks" got around $3,600 in its initial Plaza weekend. "My Wife's Best Friend" made a sluggish start at the Odeon, Leicester Square.

Estimates for Last Week

Carlton (Par) (1,128; 70-$2.15)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) (2d wk). Down to $2,500 for second weekend after fair opening round at $6,700. Continues.

Empire (M-G) (3,099; 55-$1.70)—"Lovely To Look At" (M-G) (2d wk). Finished first frame with good $16,800 and holding up at $7,800 for second weekend. "Pat and Mike" (M-G) opens Oct. 2.

Gaumont (CMA) (1,500; 50-$1.70)—"Lost in Alaska" (GFD) (3d wk). Grossed average $3,100 in final weekend, after nice $5,200 for second full week. "Monkey Business" (20th) comes in Oct. 2.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,753; 50-$1.70)—"Planter's Wife" (GFD) (2d wk). Did sturdy $10,500 opening week, followed by solid $4,500 on second weekend. Stays three weeks, with "Venetian Bird" (GFD) following.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 50-$1.70)—"Rainbow Round Shoulder" (Col) (3d wk). Holding up well at $3,100 in third weekend after good $5,900 on second week. Holds a fourth.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"My Wife's Best Friend" (20th). Opened disappointingly, at $3,600 for first weekend of 4 days. Continues.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"Meet Me Tonight" (GFD) (2d wk). Far from strong with only $3,900 this stanza. Stays a third week with "Full House" (20th) opening Oct. 2.

Plaza (Par) (1,902; 70-$1.70)—"Jumping Jacks" (Par). Started off with modest $3,400 in first weekend. Stays on.

Ritz (M-G) (432; 90-$2.15)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (10th wk). Dropped substantially in the last forthnight, with only $2,900 this round. "Quo Vadis" returns Oct. 6.

Warner (WB) (1,735; 50-$1.70)—"Carson City" (WB). Made fair with start with $4,500 in first 4 days. Continues.

Moderate London Run Looms for 'Husbands'

London, Oct. 2.

Only new production of the week is a dated French farce, adapted by Patricia Hollender from the French of Roger Ferdinand, titled "Husbands Don't Count." It was presented at the Winter Garden last Wednesday (1) by Murray & Rossin, Ltd.

Dennis Price plays a remorseful, cheating husband, with his co-star, Betty Paul, attractive as his partner in guilt. Winifred Shotter, Cyril Chamberlain, Elwyn Brooke-Jones and Charles Hawtrey are excellent in supporting roles and play is well directed by Andre Van Gyseghem. Cordial reception indicates moderate run.

Radio Lux Opens New Fall Season

London, Oct. 7.

The new fall season for sponsored radio started from Luxembourg last night (Mon.). Luxembourg, an independent state which borders on Belgium, is the only commercial transmitting unit within reach of British listeners.

Sparking the new fall lineup will be "Show Time," recorded weekly at the Palladium by Harry Alan Towers for the Beechams group. Top line vaudeville names will be used weekly. It bowed last night (Mon.).

Another new program which made its debut yesterday, was the "New Adventures of the Scarlet Pimpernel," starring Marius Goring which is presented by Gibbs Radio Playhouse. Teeing off tonight is a new Dan Dare adventure series "Pirates in Outer Space" which is promoted by Horlicks Also tonight Wilfred Pickles is featured in a radio adaptation of J. B. Priestley's "The Good Companions" with a cast which includes Petula Clark and Ronald Howard. Another newcomer will be a sound version of the TV show "What's My Line," in which Bernard Braden will act as question master and the panel will comprise Richard Attenborough, Margot Holden, Jerry Desmonde and Elizabeth Allan. This series makes its bow tomorrow (Wed.), with Beecham's as sponsors.

Vera Lynn returned to the Luxembourg wavelength last Friday (3) in a half-hour show recorded before an audience of servicemen. This is sponsored by Kraft. Other new Luxembourg features include two shows prepped by Cadbury's called "Highlights" and "Musical Chairs," as well. Hughie Green with his discoveries and a new western featuring Steve Larrabee in "The Lone Star Rider."

Start Move to Auction All Denham Equipment

London, Oct. 7.

With the decision to auction the contents of Denham Studios, all hopes of saving the lot for continued film production have virtually disappeared. Apart from a few intermittent lettings, the plant has been idle for nearly two years. Although there is currently a scramble for studio space; the rental charges demanded at Denham have been beyond the reach of most independents.

Last week, the J. Arthur Rank Organization instructed a firm to prepare a detailed inventory of the studio contents, and it is reported arrangements will later be made for a public sale. Since the shuttering of Denham, all Rank lensing has been concentrated at Pinewood, now working at capacity. Recently it was reported that a deal was being finalized with Electric & Musical Industries (EMI) whose activities extend from disks to radar. These negotiations appear to be a long way off from finalization.

Brit. TV Fails to Keep People Home as Much As Expected, BBC Says

London, Oct. 7.

In its first annual report since TV spanned most of the country, the British Broadcasting Corp. asserts that television's power to keep people at home was proving much less than had been suggested earlier. Average viewers, it is reckoned, watched roughly half of the night programs, but children saw as many as three out of four. At the beginning of the year, there were 1,250,000 license holders. It is estimated that the peak audience of the year was 4,500,000 for the TV-film of the King's funeral.

Radio has experienced a slight dip in its listening public, but top programs still appeal to large audiences. "Music Hall" is heard by 9,500,000, "Saturday Night Theatre" by 11,000,000 and "Any Questions" by nearly 10,000,000. The Sunday half-hour community hymn singing draws a weekly public of 7,500,000. Peak program of the year was the Turpin-Sugar Ray Robinson fight which was heard by about 25,000,000 listeners.

The report also records how BBC foreign broadcasts, together with the Voice of America, were having their effect in countries behind the iron curtain.

N.Y. Bingo Ban In Churches Nips Exhib Campaign

Group of indie exhibs, mainly operators of small-seater nabe houses, who had launched a campaign to revive Bingo, Screeno, etc. in the New York metropolitan area, have postponed the drive indefinitely as a result of License Commissioner Edward T. McCaffrey's order banning the games in churches.

McCaffrey's edict, exhibs contend, took the steam out of their main argument, which stated, in effect, "if it's okay for churches, why should it be banned in theatres?" Theatreowners, who regarded the coin games in the churches as competition, feel that a revival of the giveaways could serve as a b.o. hypo. They were prepared to appeal to McCaffrey as well as Mayor Impellitteri for a ruling regarding the proposal to bring back the coin lures. Failing to receive the green light from the city administration, exhibs were making arrangements for a court test.

With the games barred throughout the city, exhibs have adopted a waiting game, holding back on any action until it is determined if McCaffrey's church ban will stick. The influential New York Times, in an editorial, chided the commissioner on his recent order, pointing out that the church games were not dangerous and that they provided an important source of income for many charity activities.

Reelers Follow Ike-ing With One on Adlai

With the release this week of a complete newsreel issue on Gov. Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic Presidential candidate, the five newsreels are stressing the approaching elections. Reel was preceded last week by a story of General Eisenhower, the Republican nominee.

The Stevenson pictorial profile, compiled by Metro's News of the Day, included many sequences lensed specially for the occasion. Companies drew lots for the two assignments, with 20th-Fox's Movietone News picking the Eisenhower job.

Laud Tough Treatment Of Texas Ozoner Thief

San Antonio.

Operators of the 13 local ozoners hailed a county court decision here as effecting their operations. It was the first conviction for theft of an ozoner auto speaker. Francisco Montez was fined $50 plus $37.50 costs and sentenced to a day in jail after he pleaded guilty to stealing a $11.50 speaker from the Fiesta Drive-In.

Sylvan K. Barry, who appeared in court against Montez, estimated that local ozoners each year lose speakers valued at $15,000. Very few people, he said, have actually any use for the speakers. Most are taken in a spirit of vandalism. According to local police records the five ozoners of the Statewide Drive-In Theatres, circuit lost 49 speakers in a single weekend.

U Bally Milks Pix

Universal has made an unusual tieup with Golden Guernsey, Inc., trade association of the Guernsey milk producers in America, to plug Rank's "Island Rescue," released in the U. S. by U's special films division. Pic stars David Niven and Glynis Johns and features "Venus," the Guernsey Cow.

Story has Niven and Glynis rescuing the animal from a German-held channel island during the war. Tieup involved ads in various milk trade mags and features special eight-page promotional pieces pointing out in which way the 600 Guernsey dealers in the U. S. can cooperate with exhibs on the pic.

St. Petersburg Exhibs Sue for $1,800,000

Antitrust suit calling for $1,800,000 in damages was filed in New York Federal Court yesterday (Tues.) by John J. and Agnes Gillooley, operators of the Capitol Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla., against the eight majors and Florida Coastal Theatres.

Plaintiffs are asking for an injunction to restrain the filmeries from allocating first-run and subsequent-run pix to affiliated theatres in downtown St. Petersburg to the discrimination of the house run by the Gillooleys. The complaint charges that the defendants have conspired since 1934 in fixing and establishing film rentals and granting privileges on runs and clearances to their own affiliated theatres. It further charges that the plaintiffs' theatre was relegated to inferior runs because of the alleged conspiracy.

Pic Industry Lax In Organization, Starr Tells Parley

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

With the film industry beset by new competitions and mounting problems, it is difficult to believe that the industry is so lax in seeking to preserve and protect the large investment which Hollywood represents, said Alfred Starr, new president of Theatre Owners of America, at the 34th annual convention of the Kansas-Missouri Theatre Owners at the Hotel President here last week. It was his first industry meeting since his recent election.

"I wish I could move you, by great acting skill, by the use of pathos, or any other method, in some way to realize the benefits of organization. Other industries have it as a matter of course. If we are to rescue this industry from a fate equivalent to death, a strong, effective national organization is a must," Starr said.

The 16m suit was described by Richard Brous, Fox Midwest attorney, as a doubleheader threat to the industry. It not only threatens the direct loss of income, but also threatens reduced quality and quantity of production as a result of revenue losses. Unofficial comments of exhibs at the meeting indicated a favored solution for the suit will be arbitration, with all branches of the industry well represented in the negotiations.

National activity in the field of public relations should be based on the desires of the affiliate groups, according to Senn Lawler, Fox Midwest circuit ad-pub chief. He advocated a program including setting up a library of information, an active speakers' bureau, weekly institutional display ads, and nationwide radio and television programs sponsored by the industry.

The 20% amusement tax is threatening profits of many of the 9,000 small theatre owners in the country, according to Pat McGee, TOA v.p. and COMPO co-chairman. With the amusement tax on admissions, prices are such that an exhibitor cannot keep pace with costs, he said.

The finale of the convention was a testimonial dinner honoring R. R. "Dick" Biechele, veteran exhib, former KMTA president, and long-time legislative hand of the organization.

keeping with custom at many conventional and drive-in theatres, waxed music is turntabled and piped over the theatre's sound amplification system.

In protesting what it calls "the latest ASCAP grab," the ATOI asserts that the same licensing pattern developed in radio where "first ASCAP extracted fees. Then along came BMI, and lately SESAC." Moreover, the exhibitor organization points out, the ASCAP rates for recorded music use were not approved by Allied States Assn.

ATOI adds that any exhibitor who's unwilling to go along with the new ASCAP license may avoid it by coming to the ATOI office, where a list of several thousand non-ASCAP tunes are available. Until a Federal court decision wiped out the practice several years ago, ASCAP charged exhibs a "seat-tax" for use of music contained in prints.

Louis, Baer, Conn To Trim Down For Silliphant's Indie

Joe Louis, Max Baer and Billy Conn will go back into training to trim down for appearances in "The Joe Louis Story," under plans set by Stirling Silliphant, who'll produce the film as an indie. He resigns as 20th-Fox publicity head in New York Jan. 16 for the production venture.

Professional actor will portray Louis for the most part. But the ex-champ will appear in ring sequences with Baer and Conn. Others to play in the pic are now being sought and in this connection Silliphant has plans for a publicized "talent search."

National magazine publicity campaign for "The Joe Louis Story" film kicks off this week with a color cover and detailed story in Ebony, largest Negro mag.

Break is part of a two-phase magazine campaign set by Silliphant. Mag yarns and pictures, in advance of production, will concentrate on Louis, to be followed by breaks just prior and with the July release date covering the film itself.

Saturation Bookings For Schary's 'Plymouth'

Metro's policy of pre-testing its biggies in selected markets, such as was followed with "Quo Vadis" and "Ivanhoe," is being abandoned for "Plymouth Adventure," with the latter being set for saturation bookings for the Thanksgiving holiday. Since the story of the landing of the Pilgrims is a natural for a Turkey Day release, M-G has its sights on 400 to 500 dates for simultaneous openings. Pic is Dore Schary's personal production.

With 100 Loew houses already set to show the pic, Metro's sales force feels that it'll have five weeks to line up other dates. Bidding on the picture will open following the trade screening on Oct. 17.

Metro's production chief, will remain east until "Adventure" world preems at Plymouth, Mass., Nov. 24.

375G Suit by Brooklyn House Vs. Majors, Chains

An antitrust suit calling for $375,000 triple damages was filed this week in N. Y. Federal Court by Charben Cinema, Brooklyn exhib outfit, against the eight majors and four Brooklyn circuits. Latter includes Randforce, Springer Theatres, Century Theatres and Metropolitan Playhouses.

Plaintiff, operator of the Jewel Theatre, Brooklyn, charges that the majors and the theatre chains conspired since August, 1951, to exclude the Jewel from getting feature film benefits.

month stretch ending June 28. "Your company is operating profitably," he told stockholders, "and I'm confident it will continue to maintain and improve its high standing."

Analyzing Wesco's income potential, Skouras declared that the subsidiary's earnings this year appear to be running lower than in 1951, thus dividends are likely to be less in 1953. He estimated that unaudited consolidated earnings of Wesco and the Roxy Theatre, N. Y. (also owned by NT), for the six-months ended June 28, would approximate 29c per NT share compared with about 50c per share for the comparable 1951 period.

Restrictive agreements which Skouras said would place a ceiling on Wesco dividend payments stem from arrangements in August, 1950, made with unidentified banks which hold 2½ and 3½% notes. Total funded debt of Wesco, incidentally, was $25,132,211 as of June 28, 1952. A pro forma consolidated balance sheet also dated June 28 shows that NT has $56,027,000 in assets of which $39,979,000 is derived from land and buildings.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Allied Artists' recent acquisition of franchise-holders' exchanges in Chicago and Detroit doesn't represent the beginning of a policy leading toward similar takeovers. Purchases were described by a company exec last week as merely a combination of circumstances. Pressure of other business reportedly was behind William B. Hurlbut's decision to relinquish the Detroit franchise, which he held with J. L. Saxe and George W. Weeks. Illness of the Chicago franchise-holder was a factor in sale of the exchange in that area. Company now owns around 16 exchanges, with half interests in Portland, Ore., and Seattle. Balance are held by franchise-holders with whom relations are "most harmonious."

Although Columbia chose not to make a public announcement of the action, Arnold Grant resigned from the outfit's board of directors at a meeting in New York last Tuesday (30). His action preceded by one day his election to the RKO board chairmanship.

Col's press statement concerning the board meeting was withheld until Wednesday and this related only to the declaration of a quarterly dividend of $1.06¼ on the $4.25 preferred stock. Had the press handout been issued immediately following the Tuesday meeting, and had it been complete, it would have served as a tipoff on Grant's role with RKO. Court decree proscribes any individual being an officer or director of more than one film outfit.

Thorough-going account of the history and mechanics of Cinerama, amply illustrated, is contained in the program book distributed at New York's Broadway Theatre where the tri-dimensional-effect film is now current. Pictorial and editorial description shows how three projectors are placed at the top rear of the theatre, a sound control engineer is stationed along the right side of the screen and a picture-control engineer is at work in the pit For the theatre's sound there are five speakers behind the huge screen and one on each side of the house. Screen measures 51 feet from tip to tip and is 25 feet high.

What looks like a permanent director-producer combination at Metro consists of Richard Thorpe and Pandro Berman. They worked together on "Ivanhoe" and "Prisoner of Zenda," and will be teamed on "All the Brothers Were Valiant" and "King Arthur and the Round Table." Understood Thorpe will also direct "Quentin Durward," another Berman production.

Cecil B. DeMille is figuring on going abroad to produce his next picture, "The 10 Commandments." Understood he is making arrangements to shoot on historic locations in Egypt. With the exception of one location sequence in Hawaii for "Four Frightened People" in 1934, it will be DeMille's first production venture outside this country.

Aster, Mpls., Stays Shut In Boothmen's Snarl

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

Downtown Aster, 900-seater recently bought by Bennie Berger, will remain dark because the booth operators' union, AFL, refuses to ease its demand for four projectionists.

House shuttered last December when its owners, who had acquired it on a sublease from United Paramount Theatres, took the count and tossed it back in the latter's lap. The Berger deal was made last month for the building and ground. While UPT's lease on the theatre still has four years to run, the lessee is reported willing to relinquish it to Berger.

Berger informed the projectionists he'd take over the theatre from UPT and reopen it if he were permitted to operate with a single operator, but this they nixed along with Berger's compromise offer of two boothmen.

Distribs Use Colorful Brochures to Bally Pix

Exhibs have lately been bombarded with colorful and interestingly-prepared promotion literature from the major distribs.

Universal currently has two promotion pieces making the rounds. One tells the company's overall product story. Booklet, designed as a file, leads off with "Modesty Ain't Our Policy," and lists under file headings "New Product," "New Faces," "New Ideas" and "New Ads." In addition to presenting U's story, it contains comments from important exhib toppers. Second booklet, a humorous one, is entitled "There's No Business Like Monkey Business," and contains various pictures of Bonzo, U's chimpanzee star currently appearing in "Bonzo Goes to College."

United Artists product story is told in a booklet which says it has "the most important announcement in United Artists history," and it lists the 44 pix slated for UA release for the 1952-53 season. Metro is distributing a booklet listing merchandise tieups for "Ivanhoe."

Paramount is sending out a series of gimmick pieces on "Son of Paleface." In addition, Par tells its product story for the next six months in a colorful eight-page brochure. It lists 13 pix, pointing out that nine of them are in color.

Par P.A. to Goldwyn

Fred Goldberg, Paramount publicist, resigns this week to join Samuel Goldwyn Productions in New York.

At Par, Goldberg had been assigned to N. Y. newspapers. He'll do general flackery work on "Hans Christian Andersen" at Goldwyn.

Indie Booth Union In SLRB Action Vs. IA's N.Y. Local 306

As a result of a jurisdictional dispute between Local 306, Projectionists (International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees) and the Independent Motion Picture Machine Operators, latter has instituted an unfair labor practice action before the N. Y. State Labor Relations Board against Herman Savage, operator of the People's Cinema, nabe house in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn.

Indie outfit contends that Savage succumbed to economic pressure when he discharged the indie's boothmen after Local 306 threw a mass picket line around his theatre. Previous to Savage's takeover of the theatre, which had been shuttered, Local 306 men operated the booths, leading the IA union to contend that it had jurisdiction over the house. According to the indie outfit, entrance of a new owner, plus the fact that it had a previous pact with Savage covering another theatre, allowed it to enter the bargaining picture. Savage, the indie union says, hired its men, who prepared the projection room and tested the equipment. They had been on the job for an hour when the IA pickets arrived. The indie men were immediately fired, according to Charles Axelrod, biz agent of the indie outfit, and the Local 306 men were given the jobs.

In its appeal to the Labor Board, indie union is asking reinstatement of the discharged men plus the loss of wages resulting from the firing. No date has been set as yet for the initial hearing before the board.

Metro's Major Switches In Foreign Personnel

Retirement of Luis Sarmiento, Metro manager in Peru for the past 17 years, has touched off a major realignment among top M-G foreign personnel.

Series of promotions has Al Walker, now manager for Columbia, transferred to the Peru office to replace Sarmiento. Jack Tilden, manager in Chile takes the Columbia job. Bob Schmidt, M-G manager in Vienna, is switched to Chile, with Wolfgang Wolf, former Motion Picture Export Assn. head in Austria and currently M-G branch manager in Venezuela, returning to Austria. Bernard Blair, office manager in Soa Paulo, Brazil, is promoted to manager in the Venezuela territory.

Turhan Bey has organized Metropolitan Films, Hollywood, with a program of three pictures, starting with "Dickey," in which he will star as well as produce.

clared, "but this hasn't worked. Unless some changes are made, I will begin naming 'names,' and that includes branch managers, salesmen and the exact nature of the trouble."

Exhib topper denounced what he termed the "arbitiary action of branch managers and distribution representatives in the field." He said that the homeoffices disavow these practices, but they go on nevertheless. On many occasions, he pointed out, it is the personal policy of the individual salesman.

Snaper again rapped the percentage system of selling. "For some unknown reason," he said, "distributors believe that this archaic system is the only sound and business-like way of selling pictures." He emphasized that percentage selling was not the cure-all for merchandising pix, although he admitted that the method might be okay for the big key runs. He stated that "certain heads of distribution" agreed with him on this thought.

Though some of the filmeries regard exhib ideas on the making of pix as interference, Snaper said that he didn't think it would be such a bad idea if they consulted the theatremen once in a while. "They've been bogged down in so many things, they need some help," he declared. "We might not be able to advise them fully on how to make hit pictures, but we can tell them what pictures don't go over."

'About Time Took Advice'

He added that the distribs "have been trying to run our theatres for years and it's about time they took some advice from us." He commended as a step in the right direction the appointment of Sherrill Corwin, California circuit operator, as studio chief in the new RKO management setup.

The Allied prexy declined to comment on the statement of Alfred Starr, newly-elected prexy of the Theatre Owners of America, calling for the formation of an overall exhib group or for the holding of all-embracing exhib forums.

Prior to the Allied convention, he reported that the board would meet in Chicago on Nov. 15 and 16 to set up the agenda. He said the latter would probably include the 16m antitrust suit, the 20% tax repeal and the arbitration question.

Gulf States Allied's 70% Beef

New Orleans, Oct. 7.

Allied Theatre Owners of the Gulf States has registered a strong gripe against 70% terms via its membership bulletin.

Hal Bailey, sec of the New Orleans unit, commented on the exhib timidity in the recent past in a statement concerning Metro's "Quo Vadis" licensing. "Resentment to Metro's sales policy for some unexplainable reason never quite came off," he said. "There were low and disturbing rumblings but no loud claps of thunder."

Bailey thereupon launches his attack at the major companies over licensing terms. "Today, as a result of the absence of unified opposition to Metro and their 70% sales policy," states Bailey, "exhibitors are now faced with a new and infinitely greated dilemma. Other distributors, marking time while Metro cried 'wolf,' and achieved their goal, have picked up the bravado, and are screaming a voluminous 70% for certain pictures about to be released."

Bailey concludes with a frankly-stated pitch for exhibs to join in a nix of all 70% pix, saying: "Theatreowners must unite in the strengthening cause of survival and turn their ears stone-deaf to those unjust demands of distributors. We can all survive without the 70%-ers—no one, two, three or six pictures are vital to the theatre's operation—and once the distributors are convinced that such a feeling is unanimous in the army of exhibition, one of our major buying problems will be alleviated."

Those Gripes Again

After a comparative lull the past several months, exhib beefs concerning distrib sales policies are being heard again.

Wilbur Snaper, Allied States Assn. prez, rapped the companies this week in New York for their policies in general. Ray Bailey, sec of Allied Theatres of the Gulf States, hit the number of high-percentage pix (see separate stories).

Underlining the recent silence was the virtual absence of any griping at the Theatre Owners of America convention in Washington in September. Only one to raise a squawk, at the close of the conclave, was M. A. Lightman, Memphis circuit op.

Only $10,000 Profit From TOA Displays At D.C. Convention

As a result of increased expenses and a decline in the rental of equipment-display booths, the profit from the recent Washington convention of the Theatre Owners of America is expected to hit only $10,000, which is half the sum of last year's get-together.

Theatre equipment firms rented only 60 booths this year as compared to the 80 contracted for in 1951, with the largest booths renting at $500 each. In addition, the TOA this year booked many more social activities, especially events catering to the wives of the convention delegates.

With the registration fee at $60 ($40 for men and $20 for women), the sum taken in from this source was hardly sufficient to cover the cost of the convention. Booth rentals are the main coin source, and this year's rental decline took a healthy nick out of the TOA treasury.

RKO, B-K Prep Action Vs. 2-Week Chi Limit

Chicago, Oct. 7.

New counterattacks against the two-week limitations of the Jackson Park decree have been put into motion here, with both RKO Theatres and Balaban & Katz prepping Federal court action.

It is the contention of the Winston Theatre Corp., owner of the RKO Grand, that the JP decision was essentially against the major distribs, not against the theatre chains. Chi Federal Court Judge Michael Igoe has given Winston-RKO two weeks to file a brief showing that Howard Hughes no longer controls RKO Pictures. After that, it is expected he will hear the arguments based upon the Winston-RKO claims. The Grand is the only RKO house in the Loop since the circuit gave up its lease on the Palace.

In an attempt to have the JP limitations lifted from its four Loop houses, B&K is set for a hearing before the 7th District Appeals Court later this month. It's reported B&K will plead "unfairness" and "economic necessity" in asking unlimited playing time for B&K houses.

Should both RKO and B&K be exempt from the JP limitations, a sharp decline is anticipated in the plethora of antitrust suits which are based upon the original JP verdict.

Biberman Must Sign SDG Non-Red Oath

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Herbert Biberman will be asked to sign a non-Communist oath when his plea for reinstatement in the Screen Directors Guild comes up before the board of directors on Oct. 13.

As one of the "Hollywood Unfriendly 10," Biberman served a jail term on a contempt charge for refusing to answer the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1947.

'Robe' Starts Jan. 19

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Henry Koster will direct "The Robe," Frank Ross' high-budget production at 20th-Fox, starting Jan. 19. Backgrounds will be filmed late this month along the California coast and in Phoenix.

Leading candidate for the top role of Marcellus is Richard Burton, British actor.

Upped Prod. Budgets Bring An Increase In AA's Ballyhoo Coin

Allied Artists' policy of using bigger names and higher budgets on most of its product will be accompanied by a sharp increase in exploitation and promotion, according to ad-pub head John Flinn. "In the past," he said, "we've cultivated the exhibitor. But now with such stars as John Hodiak, Richard Carlson and Linda Christian cast in our upcoming releases, we can sell the general public as well."

With four top pictures moving into distribution this fall, Flinn disclosed that the company will take on several field men to aid in ballying the pix. Previously, most of the promotion had been done by Flinn himself and eastern pub chief Harry Goldstein. New exploiteers will likely be hired on a temporary basis but such a field force may become permanent in time.

Flinn, who returned to the Coast Sunday (5) after a week in New York and Washington, was in the east primarily to confer with U. S. Navy officials in regard to tieups on the company's "Flat Top" and "Torpedo Alley." Former, which stars Sterling Hayden and Richard Carlson, will have its world preem on the U.S.S. Princeton in San Diego harbor No. 11 (Armistice Day).

Intensive campaigns are also being mapped for "Battle Zone," a Walter Wanger production starring Hodiak, Stephen McNally and Miss Christian, as well as "Hiawatha." Latter will likely be unveiled in Minnesota, with several AA stars on hand for the event.

4 Into Oct. Prod.

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Four films make up the October production program at Allied Artists. Two already under way are Scott R. Dunlap's "Cow Country" and Vincent M. Fennelly's "The Marksman."

Other starters are Lindsley Parsons' "Timber Wolf" and Richard Heermance's "The Indianapolis Story." Heermance's "Wichita," originally slated to roll this month, was postponed.

the second made within the last week by a theatre group chief. Alfred Starr, newly-elected Theatre Owners of America prexy, also said that steps will be taken to form a single, all-encompassing exhibitor outfit. Comments of both execs led many industryites to comment that perhaps preliminary talks have already been held to bring about a merger of the many groups.

Indies Working Closely

Frisch noted that the MMPTA and the Independent Theatre Owners Assn., another N. Y. metropolitan area group, have been working closely for some time on many projects. Frisch, for example, and Harry Brandt, prexy of the ITOA, are co-chairmen in the metropolitan area for the 20% tax elimination drive. In addition, the MMPTA and the ITOA have joined forces via the Organization of the Motion Picture Industry of the City of New York on public relations projects. Although terming it a "worthwhile goal," Frisch declined to elaborate on the possible merger of the two N. Y. groups as an initial step in overall exhib unity.

Frisch has succeeded the late Edward Rugoff as MMPTA prexy, latter's duties having been handled since his death on Sept. 17 by Solomon M. Strausberg, first v.p. Latter was reelected to that post last week at the annual election meet. Other officers named for a two-year period include; Samuel Rosen, board chairman; Robert M. Weltman, second v.p., and Russell Downing, treasurer. Oscar A. Doob was reelected chairman of the exec committee for a fourth successive term. D. John Phillips continues as executive director.

New exec committee comprises Samuel Rinzler, Rosen, Sol A. Schwartz, Strausberg and Weitman. Board is made up of Herman Becker, Leo Brecher, Doob, Downing, Harry Goldberg, Julius Joelson, David C. Katz, Fred J. Schwartz, Sol Schwartz, Strausberg and Weitman.

UPT's New High On Common Stock Sked

Common stock listed on the New York Stock Exchange by United Paramount Theatres reached a new high of 2,953,397 shares this week as the result of conversion of 4,501 certificates of interest into regular stock.

Certificates now outstanding are down to 350,532. Paramount antitrust decree directs that owners of 500 or more Par Pictures shares may own only UPT certificates instead of regular stock.

Adherents Rent N.Y. Theatre for Daily Ike Pix

A New York unit of Citizens for Eisenhower-Nixon has turned to film exhibition and will operate the University Theatre, Bronx, for a month period starting today (Wed.). House, shuttered over a year, has been rented by the University Heights-Fordham division of the Citizens group for the daily presentation of a film program plugging the GOP candidates.

Augmenting special shorts featuring Gen. Eisenhower will be a series of one and two-reeler industrial films and travelog. Entire film program is set to run approximately an hour.

Political group has signed with Local 306, Projectionists Union. All other chores relating to the running of the theatre will be handled by volunteer workers. Admission, of course, will be free.

1951-52 Admish Taxes Down from Year Ago

Washington, Oct. 7.

Uncle Sam collected admissions taxes totaling $330,782,072 for the U. S. fiscal year ending June 30 last. This continued the trend of recent years of declining returns from this bite. About 75% to 80% of the total is estimated to come from motion picture theatres.

The past year's collection was over $15,500,000 short of the $346,491,000 tax take for fiscal 1951. That, in turn, was short of the $371,244,000 collected during fiscal '50. In 1949, the admissions tax brought $382,203,000 and in the peak year of 1948 the levy yielded $386,789,000.

Williamsburg 'Colonial'

Washington, Oct. 7.

Town of Colonial Williamsburg is completing production on a 22-minute documentary. "The Colonial Printer," which tells the story of the American press in pre-Revolutionary days by concentrating on one newspaper.

Pic shows 18th century news coverage, newspaper production, the struggle for a free press, and the influence and importance of the Colonial press. Film is to be released nationally this fall for television screenings and special showings by organizations. It will be in color on 16m.

Film Cos. Would Weigh Gimmick TV Show As Means to Bally Prod.

With its initial violent antagonism against video slowly dissipating, the film industry is entering what may loosely be termed a courtship period with television. Although almost all the filmeries have used the medium to some extent for advertising purposes, mainly spot campaigns for special films, most of the majors continue to adhere to a policy of keeping their top contract stars off tele and refusing to allow the use of film clips by the TV stations.

Relaxation of the latter rules may be the first steps of the courting period. Pub-ad committee of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations has been approached by a number of producers with ideas for tele shows which could conceivably help plug the industry on an overall basis. While Charles Simonelli, head of the pub-ad group, has emphatically stated that the industry is not interested in any program as a paid sponsor, he has acknowledged that filmites would weigh a "gimmick" show that it can handle from a policy point of view. "If all the factors are right," he declared, "the industry would consider it."

Pub-ad contingent has been mulling a quiz-type program. Show would consist of the presentation of film clips from various pix with a panel attempting to guess the name of the film. Purpose of the show would be to arouse interest in pix in general. Packager or network reportedly would obtain outside sponsorship for the stanza, with a percentage of the coin going to the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac, N. Y. Two companies reportedly have nixed the idea, their objections being the releasing of the film clips will arouse exhib ire. However, there have been some indications that the other filmeries might go ahead with the plan.

Ill. Drive-In Appeal

St. Louis, Oct. 7.

A hassle between operators of two ozoners near Benton, Ill., will be settled by the Illinois State Supreme Court following an appeal taken last week by the three owners of the Midway drive-in.

The defendants, Sam S. Marshall, Tamaroa, Ill., and William Ozburn, Duquoin, Ill., built an ozoner on a portion of a city-owned park in Benton after an ordinance was passed providing that 10% of the gross receipts should be turned into the city coffers. The ozoner provides room for 400 cars and was lighted Sept. 18.

The owners of the Midway contend the city was without authority to grant the lease and sought an injunction in the Franklin County Circuit Court to prevent the ozoner from being lighted. Their plea was denied, hence the appeal to the state's highest tribunal.

KANSAS CITY

wk). Fine $8,500. Last week, nifty $14,000.

Tower, Uptown, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (2,100; 2,043; 700; 1,217; 50-75)—"What Price Glory" (20th) plus "Dark Man" (Indie) at Tower and Granada. Average $13,000 or near. Last week, "Yankee Buccaneer" (U) and "Son of Ali Baba" (U), $14,000.

Vogue (Golden) (550; 50-85)—"Lady Vanishes" (UA) (reissue) Medium $1,600. Last week, "Island Rescue" (U) (2d wk), $1,200.

'Untamed' Brisk $7,000, Balto; 'Quiet' Big 8G, 3d

Baltimore, Oct. 7.

Uneventful activity here with holdover of "The Quiet Man" at the Mayfair maintaining best pace. Of newcomers, "Untamed Frontier" is most promising at Keith's. Izzy Rappaport is breaking loose his new RCA Synchro-Screen at the Town for current showing of "The Big Sky," selling the gimmick strongly.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Loew's-UA) (3,000; 20-70)—"Washington Story" (M-G). Dull $5,500. Last week, "Island of Desire' (UA) $6,900 in 8 days.

Keith's (Schanberger) (2,460; 20-70) — "Untamed Frontier" (U). Pointing to nice $7,000. Last week, "Caribbean" (Par), $5,200.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 20-70)—"Quiet Man" (Rep) (3d wk). Held terrific pace with $8,000 after second week's $9,200 and huge $10,700 opener. Stays a fourth. Biggest thing here in many months.

New (Mechanic) (1,800; 20-70)—"Monkey Business" (UA) (2d wk). Holding fairly well at $6,000 after okay initial sesh at $7,300.

Stanley (WB) (3,280; 25-75)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB) (2d wk). Off to $6,500 after modest $8,700 opener.

Town (Rappaport) (1,500; 35-70)—"Big Sky" (RKO). Opening tomorrow (Wed.) on strongly ballyhooed RCA Synchro Screen after second week of "One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and fight pix held to $6,200 following big $9,200 preem.

DENVER

Webber. Fair $6,000. Last week, on reissues.

Broadway (Wolfberg) (1,200; 50-85)—"Miracle of Fatima" (WB). Fine $10,000. Holds. Last week, "Merry Widow" (M-G) (4th wk), $5,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 50-85)—"Just for You" (Par), (2d wk). Nice $11,500. Holding again. Last week, big $15,000.

Denver (Fox) (2,525; 50-85)—"Diplomatic Courier" (20th), day-date with Esquire. Good $15,000. Last week, "Dreamboat" (20th) and "Flame of Sacramento" (Rep), $12,000.

Esquire (Fox) (742; 50-85)—"Diplomatic Courier" (20th). Nice $3,000. Last week, "Dreamboat" (20th) and "Flame Sacramento" (Rep), $2,500.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 74-$1.20)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Socko $29,000. Holding. Last week, "Walk East on Beacon" (Col) and "Last Train Bombay" (Col), $15,000.

Paramount (Wolfberg) (2,200; 50-85)—"My Wife's Best Friend" (20th). Good $11,000. Last week, "Les Miserables" (20th), fine $13,500.

Tabor (Fox) (1,967; 50-85)—"Dream of Jeanie" (Rep), and "Tembo" (RKO). Fair $6,500. Last week, "Island of Desire" (UA) and "Fargo" (Mono), $6,000.

Vogue (Pike) (600; 60-85)—"Lady Vanishes" (Indie). Fair $2,000. Last week, on reissues.

Webber (Fox) (750; 50-85)—"Dream of Jeanie" (Rep) and "Tembo" (RKO). Fair $2,800. Last week, "Island of Desire" (UA) and "Fargo" (Mono), $3,000.

BUFFALO

Sturdy $13,000 after smash $23,000 opening round.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 40-70)—"Ladies of Chorus" (Col) and "Strange Fascination" (Col). Lean $7,500. Last week, "Untamed Frontier" (U) and "Secret Flight" (U), about same.

Century (20th Cent.) (3,000; 40-70)—"The Big Sky" (RKO) and "Corp. Dolan AWOL" (Indie). Smooth $11,000. Last week, "One Minute to Zero" (RKO) and "Yukon Gold" (Indie), $12,000.

'Quiet' Sockeroo $11,000 In Pitt; 'Somebody' NG 10G, 'Ivanhoe' 21G, 2d

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

"Quiet Man," with a smash session, is putting the Fulton back in the higher brackets this week while "Ivanhoe" is doing well in second stanza at Penn although not up to expectations. Both are holding. "Stranger In Between" looks like a winner at Squirrel Hill, WB's nabe art house, and "Somebody Loves Me" is rated only so-so at Stanley. "Assignment Paris" at Harris is sluggish.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 50-85)—"Quiet Man" (Rep). Raves and fine word-of-mouth putting John Wayne starrer in the winner's circle. Heading for smash $11,000. Looks to stay at least three weeks, maybe more. Last week, "Untamed Frontier" (U) barely $4,500.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 50-85)—"Assignment Paris" (Col). Sluggish $6,000, if that. Last week, "Monkey Business" (20th), $10,000 in 9 days.

Penn (Loew's) (3,300; 85-$1.25)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (2d wk). Not coming up to expectations although plenty healthy at $21,000 this stanza. Last week, it dropped off after sensational beginning to get smash $34,500.

Squirrel Hill (WB) (900; 50-85)—"Stranger In Between" (U). Sturdy $3,000, more than enough to hold. Last week, "Lady Vanishes" (UA) (reissue) (2d wk), $1,600.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 50-85)—"Somebody Loves Me" (Par). Only so-so $10,000. Last wek, "Crimson Pirate" (WB) (2d wk) with Walcott-Marciano fight pix, only $8,000.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 60-$1.25)—"Lady of Fatima" (WB) (4th wk). Okay $5,000. Last week, $7,500.

'Ivanhoe' Socko $18,000, Toronto; 'Quiet' 20G, 3d

Toronto, Oct. 7.

"Ivanhoe" is the only important newcomer and smash on first week. However, "The Quiet Man," in third frame, is still topping the city and getting plenty of repeat biz. "Affair in Trinidad" and "Carrier," in third and fourth stanzas respectively, are holding nicely.

Estimates for This Week

Crest, Downtown, Glendale, Mayfair, Scarboro, State (Taylor) (863; 1,059; 955; 470; 698; 694; 35-60)—"California Conquest" (Col) and "Army Bound" (Mono). Nice $15,500. Last week, "Glory Alley" (M-G) and "Confidential Girl" (UA), $15,000.

Eglinton (FP) (1,080 40-80)—"Les Miserables" (20th) (3d wk). Oke $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Imperial (FP) (3,373; 50-80)—"Quiet Man" (Rep) (3d wk). Smash $20,000. Last week, huge $23,000.

Loew's (Loew) (2,748; 50-80—"Ivanhoe" (M-G). Socko $18,000. Last week, "Merry Widow" (M-G) (3d wk), $7,500.

Odeon (Rank) (2,390; 50-90)—"Blossoms in Dust" (M-G) (reissue). Okay $10,000. Last week, "Full House" (20th) (2d wk), $12,000.

Shea's (FP) (2,396; 40-80)—"Affair Trinidad" (Col) (3d wk). Neat $9,000. Last week, $12,000.

University (FP) (1,558; 40-80)—"Carrie" (Par) (4th wk). Nice $8,500. Last week, $10,500.

Uptown (Loew) (2,743; 40-80)—"Son of Ali Baba" (U) (2d wk). Oke $5,500. Last week, $8,000.

SEATTLE

$3,000. Last week, "Cry Beloved Country" (UA), $2,300.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,283; 65-90)—"Crimson Pirate" (WB(. Swell $11,000. Last week, "Merry Widow" (M-G) and "You for Me" (M-G) (3d wk), $6,800.

Orpheum (Hamrick )( 2,599; 65-90)—"Sudden Fear" (RKO) (2d wk-6 days). Down to mild $4,500. Last week, good $8,800.

Palomar (Sterling) (1,350; 75-$1)—"Caribbean" (Par) (2d run) plus stageshow. Opened Monday (6). Last week, "7 Sinners" (Indie) and "Scarlet Street" (Indie) for 7 days only $3,100 at 70c top; followed by "Diamond City" (Lip) 2d run), and Lionel Hampton band onstage, terrific $9,000 in 3 days at $1.25 top.

Paramount (Evergreen) (3,039; 65-90)—"Just for You" (Par) and "Arctic Flight" (Mono). Mild $9,000 or near. Last week, "Big Show" (RKO (2d wk), $6,800.

'Devil' Okay $5,000 In Mpls.; 'Gaucho' Lean 6G

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

Loop showhouses were not helped much by the Minnesota-California football game, which attracted 60,000 at $3.50 per, but it brought many into town over weekend. Wintry-like weather was more of a boxoffice stimulant. But also on the debit side for the week's net results is the comparative paucity of newcomers, holdovers being far in the majority. Lone fresh entries are "Assignment Paris," "Way of a Gaucho," "Devil Makes Three" and "Sally and St. Ann.' "Devil" is okay at Gopher but "Gaucho" looks only mild at State. "Quiet Man" shapes good in third Lyric round.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Par) (1,600; 50-76) — "Les Miserables" (20th) (2d wk). Moderate $3,000. Last week, $4,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 50-76)—"Devil Makes Three" (M-G). Okay $5,000. Last week, "Don't Bother To Knock" (20th) (2d wk), $3,200.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 50-76) — "Quiet Man" (Rep) (3d wk). Word-of-mouth keeping this exceedingly well-liked picture going. Good $4,000. Last week, $5,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,000; 50-76)—"Just for You" (Par) (2d wk). Down to $5,000. Last week, barely okay $10,000.

RKO-Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 40-76)—"Assignment Paris" (Col). Moderate $6,000. Last week, "One Minute to Zero" (RKO) $10,400.

RKO-Pan (RKO) (1,600; 40-76)—"One Minute to Zero" (RKO) (m.o.). Good $4,000. Last week, "Sudden Fear" (RKO) (2d wk), $4,600.

State (Par) (2,300; 50-76) — "Way of Gaucho" (20th). Customers like it, but cast names don't mean too much. Mild $6,000. Last week, "Fearless Fagan" (M-G), $4,000.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.20) — "Sally and St. Anne" (U). Fair $3,500. Last week, "Full House" (20th) (2d wk), $3,000.

CLEVELAND

(UA). Fair $3,000. Last week, "Lady of Burlesque" (Indie) and "Naughty Widow" (Indie). (reissues), light $2,500.

Palace (RKO) (3,300; 55-85)—"Yankee Buccaneer" (U). Okay $11,000. Last week, "Assignment Paris" (Col), nice $12,500.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 55-85)—"Quiet Man" (Rep) (2d wk). Big $12,000 after $15,000 last week.

Stillman (Loew's) (2,700; 55-85)—"Ivanhoe" (M-G) (10th wk-9 days). Sock $9,000 after $7,500 last week.

Tower (Telemanagement) (500; 55-85)—"High Noon" (UA) (m.o.). Lusty $4,600. Last week, "Comanche Territory" (U) and "Apache Drums" (U) (reissues), $2,500.

Twin Cities Suburban Asks Day-Date Mpls. Run

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

For the first time a Twin Cities suburban theatre, the Independent St. Paul Park, is demanding a day-and-date with Minneapolis downtown first-run houses. Ben Deinard, its counsel, has notified distributors that unless the demand is granted, court action will be taken.

Letters calling for clearance revision went to all film exchanges. House now has a 35-day clearance. It's contended the theatre is not in direct competition with loop theatres and has been illegally relegated to subordinate playing position.

Rachman Memorial Fund

Omaha, Oct. 7.

Jake Rachman Memorial Fund, in honor of late VARIETY mugg and World-Herald columnist, has been started here.

Money will go to Bikur Cholim, Jewish women's organization, which aids the needy and sick, an org Rachman had long supported.

Exhib Jack Fine Bkrpt.

Cleveland, Oct. 7.

Jack Fine, former operator of Cleveland nabe houses, filed a bankruptcy petition in Federal Court here, stating he had debts totaling nearly $70,000 and only $290 in assets.

Most of these debts were incurred, he said, as a result of the failure of a television film-producing venture in which he had a major interest.

Memphis Police Eye Revised 'Bank Nites'

Memphis, Oct. 7.

Memphis police have temporarily taken the spotlight from censor Lloyd T. Binford by announcing that they plan to see what the score is with "bank nights" now flourishing at several theatres here.

Police put the kibosh on "bank nights" here in December, 1936, but for the past several weeks nabe houses have been attempting to hypo their attendance with "bank" or "cash" nights. The Memphian, Linden Circle, Crosstown and Frayser Drive-In theatres, owned and operated by M. A. Lightman, Sr., have been running weekly "bank nights," Memphis police report. Similar giveaways are held weekly at the Princess and Hollywood Theatres.

American Westerns Find Huge Favor At Pakistan Boxoffices

Film biz is booming in Pakistan, with American western and action pictures drawing the largest audiences. Pakistani small-fry are as enthusiastic as American youngsters in their adoration of the sagebrush heroes. As a result, the byproducts of the horse operas—western garb, toy sixshooters, etc.—are enjoying an unusual popularity among Pakistani kids.

Above was reported this week in New York at the Motion Picture Assn. of America by Mrs. Khorshed Mobed, publicity director of Paradise Theatres, Ltd., of Karachi, outfit operated by her husband and father-in-law.

Mrs. Mobed, here for a four-week visit, noted that it was unnecessary to add subtitles to the American and British pix since about 75% of the population of Karachi speak and understand English. Mobeds operate five houses in Karachi, with the Capitol and Paradise being the leading theatres in the city. Both of the latter are first-runs and play only American and British pix, while the three other alternate between second-run westerns and Indian and native product.

Contrary to some reports, Mrs. Mobed declared that American pix have succeeded in creating a favorable attitude toward the United States. She decried the impression, offered in some quarters, that American films were presenting a false picture of American life to foreign countries.

Outside of pix from the U. S. and Great Britain, other countries have not succeeded in invading the Pakistan film market, Mrs. Mobed noted.

Mrs. Mobed said the imported films are subject to censorship from two sources—Pakistanian and Indian. Latter censorship, she feels, will be eliminated as soon as the U. S. companies build up their offices in Pakistan and the new republic gets the films direct instead of from Bombay, where they are first subjected to Indian censorship laws.

M-G's 50-50 With Cowan's 'Main St.'

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Metro is going 50-50 with Cinema Productions in the financing of "Main Street to Broadway," which will be produced here by Lester Cowan, starting Oct. 13, in association with the Council of the Living Theatre. Culver City will put up half the $1,110,000 required to budget the picture, with both companies splitting the profits. Deal was made with M. A. Lightman, CP prexy.

Metro will also handle the distribution. It will be the first time the Company has backed and released an outside picture since David O. Selznick's "Gone With the Wind."

Switch Lean Pic's Title

Title of Lopert Films release, "The Sound Barrier," has been changed to "Starbound." A London Films Presentation directed by David Lean, pic stars Ralph Richardson and Ann Todd. Terence Rattigan did the screenplay.

Film has been cut six minutes for the U. S. market and now runs 105 minutes. It's due to go into the Victoria, N. Y., after "The Four Poster," Oct. 15.

Walsh to Rule On WB, Local 306 Snag

One-night opening of the Warner Theatre, N. Y., two weeks ago for the large-screen telecast of the Walcott-Marciano fight has touched off a minor hassle between Warner Bros. and Projectionist Union, Local 306 (IATSE), with both sides agreeing this week to allow IA prexy Richard Walsh to make the final decision. Disagreement concerns the payment of boothmen who worked the theatre for the one-nighter.

Union contends that under its pact with WB, men should be paid for a full week's work. Its argument is that pro-rata payment, as offered by the film company, would set a dangerous precedent in that other exhibs, faced with poor mid-week biz, might decide to operate on a part-time basis.

Warners, on the other hand, points out that the telecast operation comes under a separate category and has nothing to do with a film presentation. Union's stand is based on its desire to keep its boothmen working full time, and it points out that none of its pacts allows pro-rata payment for part-time work.

'How Public Will Be Adversely Affected' If U.S. Wins 16m Suit

Indianapolis, Oct. 7.

Exhibitors and the film industry in general have vociferously protested the Government's suit to force the sale of 16m prints to television, but one of Allied Theatre Owners of Indiana's members has come up with a startling angle—"how the public will be adversely affected if the Government is successful."

ATOI-ite writes in the organization's current bulletin: "Why doesn't our industry get smart, quit howling with pain, and appeal directly to the American people pointing out the manner in which television network monopolies have conspired with politicians in 'big government' to keep fresh, new entertainment off TV screens!"

"By forcing the sale of old movies of the 16m free show variety to TV, the setowners face the inevitable prospect of sitting at home night after night and viewing entertainment they already have seen at movie theatres. Not only that, but the reception will be poor and the TV screen too small to capture vividly all the action.

"The public has cried long and loud about the ancient films now being shown over TV. If big government and their co-conspirators, the TV network moguls, win this suit, TV setowners might as well fact the prospect of fewer and fewer live shows, new faces and fresh entertainment. In place of new, live shows they will see hour and hour upon end of old movies interrupted every 15 minutes with a hopped-up huckster selling beer, wine and cigarets.

"Why doesn't big government outlaw old, second-run movies on TV and force the TV network monopolies to give the American people more live, new programs? Why can't the TV moguls dig down in their bulging pockets, fat with big advertisers' coin, and produce their own shows with their own talent and with their own money?"

DOS Registers 2 Titles Stemming From 'GWTW'

David O. Selznick has listed two new titles with the Title Registration Bureau of the Motion Picture Assn. which stem from his 1939 production, "Gone With the Wind." They're "Scarlett O'Hara" and "Tara," latter being the name of the southern mansion depicted in "GWTW," and either title will be used for an original feature, it's indicated.

Selznick has plans, also, to produce a musicalized "Scarlett O'Hara" on Broadway.

75 'Ivanhoe' Oct. Dates

With "Ivanhoe" racking up record grosses in 14 key-city engagements following seven pre-tested runs, Metro's sales force has pacted for 75 additional bookings for October in the U. S. and Canada.

Six other bookings are already set for November.

A warm and highly deserved tribute to

EDWARD G. ROBINSON

Not only is there no business like show business—there are no people like show people!

Their hearts are big, their devotion great—their willingness to give freely of their time and their talent unsurpassed.

Take the case of Edward G. Robinson—a great trouper and a great person.

On the night of Sunday, September 28, following his initial telecast of the fall season, Eddie Cantor collapsed—from overwork.

He had been scheduled to appear at four State of Israel Bond dinners—vitally important to the State of Israel—in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Kansas City beginning Sunday, October 5, and continuing through Wednesday, October 8.

With all these dinners all set, Eddie Robinson, right in the middle of making a picture, immediately offered to step in and do what he could in order that the people planning to attend the dinners would not be disappointed.

By the time this tribute appears, Eddie Robinson will have done much to make three of these dinners the success they had to be—and will be about to do the same at the fourth.

It seemed only fitting, therefore, to pay tribute to Eddie in this way—to call to the attention of his many friends and admirers a magnificent deed of which he, in his modest way, would never have made mention.

And in making this tribute to Eddie, all of show business can feel they are included—for this is typical of show people.

Fox Inter-Mt. Builds Flat-Rental Pictures Into Top Boxoffice

Building flat-rental pix into top b.o. attractions is an established policy of Fox Inter-Mountain Theatres, according to Robert W. Selig, in answer to a VARIETY query for comments on current film problems. According to Selig, who is aide to Inter-Mountain prexy Frank H. Ricketson, Jr., the company appoints a chairman—either a division office executive or a field manager—who is given the responsibility of building and executing a campaign for the flat-rental picture.

"We pay a fair price for these pictures satisfactory to the distributor," Selig noted, "and then we go all-out to capitalize the opportunity through aggressive, resourceful planning, which carries right down to the playdate itself."

An outstanding example of this operation, Selig pointed out, was the job done on Columbia's "Sound Off," starring Mickey Rooney, which was built "into a terrific boxoffice picture." Same policy, which Fox Inter-Mountain has dubbed "money bookings," is being set for Republic's "I Dream of Jeanie." "Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder," "King of Kings," "Encore," and the combo of "Red Shoes" and "Tales of Hoffmann" are also on the outfit's agenda as "money bookings."

"The theory," Selig says, "seems to prove itself that the movie-going public can sense in advance the 'big ones' from the 'little ones'."

Rocky Mountain chain regards titles as particularly important and it constantly adapts them for its territory. It may not change the main title, but it adds secondary ones. For example, on "Red Ball Express" it was felt that the title was misleading, and so it added "The Story of Old Blood 'n' Guts Patton," which was used in trailers, newspaper ads, radio plugs and theatre fronts.

SELZNICK BUYS 'STATION' AS JENNIFER JONES PIC

Rome, Sept. 30.

David O. Selznick recently purchased "Terminal Station" for his wife, Jennifer Jones, the film to be made entirely in Italy starting Oct. 15. It was written by Italian scripter Cesare Zavattini, and formerly was the property of French producer Paul Graetz.

Production set-up includes Vittorio DeSica as Italian producer; associate producer Marcello Girosi, who put the deal together, and the Selznicks. Coin will be provided from private Italian interests. DeSica also will direct the story, for which the English dialog will be written by Carson McCullers, who wrote "Member of the Wedding." Montgomery Clift will play opposite Miss Jones in the pic.

Scot Exhibs Would End Tax on Cheap Seats

Glasgow, Oct. 7.

Chi's 94G Amus. Tax In Sept. Reflects Upbeat

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Reflecting the upswing in theatre boxoffice in the past month, Chicago theatres paid $93,939 in amusement tax in September. The September figure was well below the $104,868 in the same month last year.

Nine-month total was $758,000, a drop of 10% from the comparable period of 1951. Tax was based upon the 207 houses currently operating.

Total of 109 theatres have shuttered here since 1948.

French Authors Fight Over $1,500,000 Cartoon Film; in Prod. Since '47

Paris, Sept. 30.

Full-length animated film, "Shepherdess And The Chimneysweep," is evoking intense industry interest here via the legal squabble over its artistic authorship. This row was started by the original creators, Paul Grimault and Jacques Prevert, against producer Andre Sarrut. At the recent Venice Film Festival, orders were given by a French court to impound all copies of the film including the one at the fete until hearings were heard on the charge by the plaintiff. Grimault and Prevert had claimed disrespect of their moral rights as authors.

At first Antonio Petrucci, Venice Fete prexy, bowed to the French court order and decided not to have the picture shown. Producer Sarrut as well as National Cinema Center topper, Jacques Flaud, persuaded Petrucci that French courts had no jurisdiction over a film in Italy and that it should be shown as part of the French film effort which transcended this hassle. Film was shown without the names of Prevert and Grimault in the credits and copped a special prize.

This film has been in production since 1947 and cost an estimated $1,500,000. It was started by Grimault with a script by Prevert. They had been responsible for top Gallic animated films that copped prizes at various festivals. This was to have been the first full-length animated film in the French idiom. Jean Image finished his "Jeannot L'Intrepide" before Grimault but it was rated largely for special moppet audiences.

Grimault claims that "Chimneysweep" was practically finished early in 1951 when difficulties started with associate Sarrut who took over the pic to finish it himself. Grimault says that at that time only $600,000 had been spent on the film and only $129,000 was needed to finish it. He contends the production was nine-tenths done.

When pix were being selected for Venice Festival, three members of the selection committee flew to London to see a copy, and it was chosen on the strength of their testimony. Film is an Anglo-French coproduction with an English version also in the can.

A meeting of industry authors, held here recently, decided that this had given a black eye to French film-making with the rights of the author being sacrificed by the producer. Affair remains to be settled. Film runs only 65 minutes and this may make it though to book without goog supporting fare.

Better Roads Help Mex To Build Tourist Biz

Mexico City, Sept. 30.

Motor car travel is prominent in expanding tourist biz in Mexico, more motoring being made possible by additional and better roads, according to the Mexican Automobile Assn. (AMA). AMA finds that 65% of foreign tourists travel overland and that there are 170,000 cars operating in Mexico.

The AMA says that tourist auto travel is only beginning in Mexico, pointed to the great use of cars by trippers from the U. S.

'Ronde' London Longie

London, Oct. 7.

Although it is being withdrawn from the Curzon, Mayfair, on Thursday (9) to make way for "Kon-Tiki," "La Ronde" is to continue in the West End. It switches to the Berkeley, Tottenham Court Road, for an indefinite run.

"La Ronde" has played the Curzon for approximately 18 months and has been seen by more than 500,000 paying patrons.

N.Y. Exhibs Push Press Campaign

Public relations program of the Organization of the Motion Picture Industry of the City of New York was given a vote of confidence Friday (3) at a general membership meeting held at the Hotel Astor, N. Y. Chairman Fred Schwartz, who presided at the conclave, disclosed that those attending the meet expressed a strong desire to continue the whole project.

Group, in which the Motion Picture Assn. of America is aligned with top exhibitor organizations in the metropolitan area, was formed early this year to combat an unfavorable press. "By making ourselves available as a checking point," Schwartz said, "newspapers and other information media have been supplied facts that have aided in proper conveyance of the truth."

A "changing attitude in the press," Schwartz added, has already been noted. He also revealed that a tieup arranged by OMICNY with NBC's radio and TV station in New York has resulted in good public reaction since becoming effective three weeks ago. Such airers as the Skitch Henderson and Herb Sheldon shows on WNBC and WNBT urge listeners to "visit your local neighborhood theatre for a few hours of relaxation . . . " Specific pictures are also puffed.

In return for the cuffo radio and TV plugs, participating theatres will reciprocate shortly by throwing a 45-second trailer on their screens carrying the legend: "For news of outstanding pictures coming to this theatre listen to the Skitch Henderson show," etc. Houses will also employ posters to promote this theme.

Radio and TV programs, in reporting on current films, are beamed around noon and 6 p.m. time slots so that they won't compete with peak theatre attendance hours. Several other N. Y. radio-TV stations have evinced an interest in such a tieup with the OMICY. However, Schwartz declined to name any specific outlet which may come in on the setup.

Among those attending the general membership meet, aside from Century Theatres' Schwartz, were reps from the Independent Theatre Owners Assn., the Metropolitan Picture Theatres Assn. and the MPAA.

Settle 3 Chi Trust Suits Out of Court

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Three separate antitrust suits were settled out of court here last Friday (3).

Action was filed against the majors, Balaban & Katz, and Warner Bros. Theatres, by Wicker Park Corp., operator of the Royal, for $750,000; Abraham Gumbinner, op of the Banner, for $600,000; and Investors Theatre Corp., which had the Paulina, for $750,000. Richard Orlikoff, attorney for each of the three plaintiffs, refused to reveal the amounts of settlement.

The Royal is still operating, but the other two houses have been closed for over 18 months.

Welles' 2 Italo Pix

Rome, Sept. 30.

Olympic Films of Rome has signed Orson Welles to make two pictures in Italy in the next few months. Welles will direct, serve as co-writer and co-producer on both as well as star.

The first will be a comedy which will have several name comics from the Italian theatrical revues and vaudeville. The films will be done in both English and Italian. The second will be a screen version of "Benvenuto Cellini."

Telepix as Features

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Allied Artists is doing something different—combining four half-hour "Wild Bill Hickox" telepix into four feature-length films for screening in theatres outside the TV zones. Pictures, costarring Guy Madison and Andy Devine, were originally produced by William F. Broidy for Kellogg.

Vidpix were made before July 21, thereby freeing Broidy from the necessity of paying extra money to the actors involved.

Methods of Selling

the quota system is in effect in the majority of European countries. Only 90 American pictures can be shipped to France annually, for instance, and the product of other nations far less.

Frankovich said that a distributor is always asked what country his product is from. In his own case, if he can't get in on the American quota, he can get in through the English quota, possibly, which though only from 30 to 35 pictures, may not be filled. By the same token, he can use the Italian or the Spanish quota for films made in those countries.

By tying up with an American releasing firm, Frankovich added, an indie sometimes won't be able to have his product shown at all in certain countries, due to these quota restrictions. This is one of the primary reasons why he set up his own sales organization abroad, coupled with the firm belief that through more personalized selling his pictures could draw greater revenues.

Through his own type of selling, Frankovich declared, he can sell different territories within the different countries, which generally are sold only on a full-country basis.

For instance, instead of selling the whole of Italy on a single distribution deal, he makes nine deals with as many distribs covering nine different localities. France is divided into five territories, each of which calls for a separate deal. Germany has two, West Germany and the Saar.

Dubbing Deals

Dubbing deals also are made, which give Frankovich dubbed product at no cost to him for sale to other territories in a particular country. As an example, he said that he can make a deal with a distributor in Paris to dub his picture, with the distrib paying all costs, in return for rights to the Paris area and a certain guarantee. Frankovich then can take the dubbed picture and sell it to the other four French territories. The same procedure is followed in Italy, Spain and Germany.

He never makes any deal in Switzerland until he has four versions, English and three dubbed, latter in French, German and Italian. With these four language versions, then, he offers distribs in the different cantonments whichever version they prefer.

That this treatment pays off, Frankovich said, is seen in the fact that $1,500 is the average take for an American indie in Switzerland. His is $10,000.

Producer also has another gimmick in disposing of his film wares. While never entering any of his pictures in either the Venice or the Cannes Film Festival, he always attends, with two or three of his films under his arm.

The film buyers of the different countries always are present at these annual festivals, he said, and he has come to know them all. By meeting with them at the festivals and showing them his films, he is able to make humerous advantageous deals which otherwise could not have been culminated.

Finally, Frankovich declared, he makes occasional swings through his sales offices, and with the sales manager makes personal contact with the distribs of the different countries, the men with whom he does business in selling his product. By these frequent get-togethers with the buyers, chain and theatre owners, he said he usually can get better terms than if he left the entire sales to his staff.

'New Era'

naval photography, praised Hollywood pictures, which he called "our greatest morale booster." He also praised the industry for helping Navy personnel receive training in the studios they could not get at service schools.

Major General George I. Beck, the Army's chief signal officer, praised the job being done by sound films in training UN forces in Korea. Calling TV and motion pictures "complementary and compatible, rather than mutually exclusive," he stated that the Army is currently working on "the complementary development and utilization of television and sound films in order to obtain maximum effectiveness of both media."

Brig. Gen. Brooke E. Allen, until a few days ago head of Air Force's air photographic and charting service, revealed his branch of the service is currently developing a TV closed-circuit for a program of "training and indoctrination in a matter of hours." The 1,354th video production squadron, consisting of 60 men, mostly recruits from the major webs and Hollywood studios, was recently organized on the Coast as a completely mobile, well-equipped TV unit. In this division, the general boasted, "we have effected a marriage of the two fields without the initial rivalry that ran through the industry when the motion picture people and the television people first eyed each other from opposite sides of the fence."

Reps of six foreign countries out of the 50 who have members in SMPTE trekked here for confab, which boasts the heaviest agenda in the 36 years of organization's existence.

Newly elected officers, for a two-year term, commencing Jan. 1, 1953, are president, Herbert Barnett; executive v.p., Dr. John G. Frayne; editorial v.p., Dr. Norman L. Simmons; convention v.p., John W. Servies; secretary, Edward S. Seeley; governors, Gordon A. Chambers, Charles L. Townsend, Frank E. Carlson, Malcolm G. Townley, William A. Mueller and Le Roy M. Dearing.

would be occasional setbacks in smaller territories as and when TV extended its coverage. As in the case of the bigger cities, he felt this would only be a temporary recession, and that motion pictures would regain their position in a comparatively short time.

British B.O. Dip

A slight drop in British theatre business, which is now beginning to bounce back, was reported Monday (6) by Al Daff, Universal executive v.p. and manager of world sales, following his return from a quickie inspection tour of Holland, France and Britain.

Daff attributed the British slump to an unusually hot summer.

There will be an eventual compromise in settling the remittance of the outstanding $4,500,000 in frozen U. S. film earnings in France, Daff thought, but added that it would be difficult. The exhibs, he said, although most affected by a shortage of American product, are content to let the distributors carry the ball and sit back doing nothing.

Daff said the Americans are angered and concerned over the continued stalemate. Even if the situation were presently resolved, and the U.S. distribs were again to pick up dubbing permits, half the season would be gone by the time new pix got into release, he opined.

Cinerama's Promise

even greater than its developers are aware of. When we first started making motion pictures there were those who told us they wouldn't replace vaudeville. I am satisfied that it (Cinerama) eventually can be developed along the lines by which intimate entertainment can be shown."

Will the new process revolutionize production and exhibition? A determination of this will be known in one to three years, Zukor said.

Louis B. Mayer, whose personal future plans have been a subject of speculation since he exited Metro last year, revealed he's one of the investors in Cinerama and has plans to produce a film employing its techniques.

There's also the wait-and-see caution evidenced in some film circles. Sol A. Schwartz, prexy of RKO Theatres, says he shares in the enthusiasm for Cinerama initially but wonders about its adaptability to dramatics or, specifically, how it can be reduced to intimate story telling in view of the large screen. Schwartz, along with numerous other observers, concedes that Cinerama is realistic in panoramic shooting and projection, plus a photographic technique which gives the onlooker the feeling of participation in what's taking place on the screen. But the RKO exec is awaiting further progress by Cinerama's engineers.

Italo Filmites

Castellani and Luciano Emmer. Among others attending from the administrative end of the Italian industry and from the Italian government are Dr. Eitel Monaco, president of the National Assn. of the Motion Picture and Allied Industries and president of Italian Films Export; Dr. Renato Gualino, IFE general director, and Comm. Italo Gemini, prexy of the Italian General Assn. of Show Business.

Succession of showings continued yesterday (Tues.) with "Times Gone By." The schedule includes, for today (Wed.), "Umberto D"; tomorrow (Thurs.), "Anna"; Friday, "The Little World of Don Camillo"; Saturday, Rosselini's "Europe '51," and Sunday, "2c Worth of Hope."

Steady round of receptions and social functions have accompanied the screenings.

Cary Grant for 'Thief,' Bernstein Brit. Prod.

London, Sept. 30.

Sidney L. Bernstein, back in London last week from Quebec, is now prepping production for two more Trans-Atlantic films, one of which, "To Catch A Thief." will be lensed in England. Based on a book by David Dodge, this will star Cary Grant. The second Trans-atlantic film will be "Dark Duty."

Bernstein had been in Quebec for the filming of "I Confess," which will get distribution through WB. Pic was directed by Alfred Hitchcock and stars Anne Baxter and Montgomery Clift.

Offbeat Shorts Winning Favor

Short subjects field, bogged down between rising costs and exhibitor resistance to higher rentals, is currently hypoed by offbeat reels which may point the way to a new approach in shorts production and selling.

Distributors still complain that economy-minded exhibs are apt to axe the program puffers before looking elsewhere to trim costs. But they are encouraged by the indication that unusual one and two-reelers are breaking through and manage to fetch higher prices than routine subjects.

Latest example is provided by the popular art film series now going into release through 20th-Fox. Seven shorts, all in Technicolor and photographed in European art galleries and museums, were produced by Art Films Productions. They have caught on very well and are grabbing circuit bookings at upped rentals. The series reportedly is also a big hit in Europe.

Designed specifically for popular enjoyment and appreciation rather than critical evaluation by artic audiences, the 20th films give a quickie survey of the work, life and background of such old masters as Degas, Botticelli, Vermeer, Renoir, Raphael and Rembrandt. Pix are couched in miniature story frame to further encourage popular acceptance.

Hope that offbeat shorts now stand an improved chance in the U. S. market is giving special significance to the Second Art Film Festival, set for the Hunter College Auditorium Nov. 28 to 30. Three-day fete is sponsored by the American Federation of Arts, Film Advisory Center and the Woodstock Artists Assn.

At 20th, Peter Levathes, shorts subjects sales head, is prepping a new series called "Eye Witness," which is due to go into production early in 1953. Idea behind it is to bring to the screen pictorial reviews of the great events of the past as caught by the camera.

At Metro they are reviving the old Nostrodamus series, with Carey Wilson producing and the first reel already finished. There'll be four pix for 1952-53 release.

Typical example of offbeat cartoon shorts making good in theatres is Columbia's United Productions of America series, which made a bang impression with "Gerald McBoing Boing."

$6,607,500 Grossed By L.A. 1st-Runs For 9 Mos. in '52

Los Angeles, Oct. 7.

Total of $6,607,500 was rung up by Los Angeles first-run film houses during the first nine months of this year, an increase of $27,500 over the same period in 1951. The increase is greater than the figures show, because the number of theatres counted as first-runs in this area is smaller than it was last year.

Irish Variety Tent's Big Show

Dublin.

The Variety Club of Ireland has picked Nov. 28 as the night of its first big show with talent imported from U. S. Louis Elliman, Chief Barker, revealed this after confabs with John Haskell who has been trying to establish tents in Madrid, Paris, Rome and Hamburg. Haskell will co-ordinate Irish Tent's efforts to obtain Hollywood talent for Dublin show. U. S. actors will be flown in after the Pittsburgh celebration dinner Nov. 23 and may do second show in Belfast, and follow through to European cities if tents are established by that time.

Religious Plays Rival Sexy Ones On Paris Stage

Paris, Sept. 30.

With three plays dealing with religion selling out here, it looks as though sex was taking a backseat at the French legit. Two of these, "On Earth As It Is In Heaven" and "Dialogue of Carmelites" are pious, pro-religious dramas while the third, Jean-Paul Sartre's "Devil and the Good Lord" is anti-religion. Sartre opus is being revived for a four-week run because illness of its stars, Pierre Brasseur, caused a lay-off last season. It has background of the German Reformation and its main character is a general in Peasant Wars who becomes a monk in his search for faith, returning to the battlefield because doubting the existence of God. It is enjoying big returns on this run.

"Devil and Good Lord" has played Zurich in German translation, but because of its length (4 hours), many changes of scene and its dubious subject-matter, it seems unlikely for a N. Y. production.

"In Heaven," a translation from the German of Fritz Hochwalder, had long run at Athenee last winter, staying until June. It is back at Athenee for remainder of the 1952-53 season.

"Dialogues with the Carmelites," by Georges Bernanos, deals with martyrdom of Carmelite nuns under the French Revolution. Play has already been translated into English and published in book form as "The Faithful Heart" by Bodley Head (London). English production has been discussed and play might also do for the U. S.

Sexy Plays Also Popular

While sex seems to have retired relatively into the background, Paris playhouses are still filled with sexy plays. Andre Roussin has two currently cleaning up "When the Child Appears," farce of a household visited by wholesale pregnancy, and "Nina," about a betrayed husband. Jean Bernard Luc's "The Fig Leaf" shows the impact of the Kinsey Report on a family; "The Duchess of Seaweed," has to do with an amorous mermaid; "Get Busy with My Minimum," by Peter Van Stalle, deals with sex and little else. "Jesus the Quail," "I'm Here and I'm Staying," "Dear Shade," "Waltz of the Toreadors" and Strindberg's "Miss Julie" are sexy enough for anybody.

Allentown Exhibs Ask 8% Tax Exit

Allentown, Pa., Oct. 7.

Operators of Allentown theatres have asked the city to eliminate the 8% amusement tax.

Operators pointed out that 20 years ago they charged 50c admission and now charge 51c, despite increased costs. A 10c federal tax and 4c city tax are added, making the total price 65c.

Revenues to the city dropped from $171,000 in 1949 to $139.000 last year. The owners claim that most picgoers are in the lower bracket and that the tax keeps

RKO Exec Overhaul

Gamble in a Coast circuit operation. Feldman and O'Keefe are longtime associates of Sherrill C. Corwin, of the new syndicate.

From outside the industry, Joseph Ollie, Chicagoan and exec assistant to RKO board member A. L. Koolish in Empire Industries, mail order operation, is slated for an important role in management. He'll take up residence in N. Y. and give his full time to RKO affairs at the homeoffice.

Leonard Picker, brother of the new exec v.p., is in line to replace Ross Hastings at the studio. Hastings had been exec assistant to C. J. Tevlin who, until his resignation last week, was second in command to Howard Hughes. It's understood Hastings will stay on in another spot.

Jack Gross, former RKO producer who has been active in television recently, reportedly will rejoin the studio to head production of a group of "B" pix.

Group in control, headed by Ralph Stolkin as RKO president, made it unmistakeably clear in a press statement last week that overhauling of the present exec setup is due shortly. It was declared formally: "A realistic approach must recognize the company's large losses and the urgent need for sure steps to stem and turn the tide. Of necessity, a number of executive changes will be made to bring in and promote youth with its vitality, fresh approach and aggressive thinking. Changes below the executive level will be kept to a minimum."

Statement had a morale-shattering effect upon RKO-ites, according to a Stolkin spokesman. "We're not coming in with promises to keep everyone, and then shortly after start the firing," he added. "There will be uncertainty for a while, perhaps a few weeks, until the proper adjustments are made. Then those who still are retained will know they're staying on."

Distrib Unit's 'Screening'

In line with this, the Stolkin-Grant group revealed that all execs in sales and distribution will undergo a "screening" process "on a daily basis in the hope that all major changes may be determined and consummated within the very near future."

Explaining the yearning for youth in exec ranks is the fact that Stolkin himself is 33 years of age and the majority of his associates are not much above that age bracket.

Personnel changes in exchange centres and at the studio also are impending, it was stated.

Studio's Future

Studio's operation presents the biggest problem to the new management and it may take 60 to 90 days before a production head is named. He said the entire lensing activity demands careful study and for this reason much time must be given to selection of the production chief.

Meanwhile, Sherrill Corwin, v.p. and board rep at the studio, left New York Monday (6) for Hollywood to take over immediate supervision of the lot, which is now totally idle. Plan is to get two films rolling shortly, namely Jerry Wald's "Size 12" and Eddie Grainger's "Split Second."

Wald, incidentally, is still regarded in trade circles as a candidate for the top production job. He'll be free to bow off the studio Oct. 31, under terms of his employment pact, but will stay at least until production of "12" is completed. His attorney, David Tannenbaum, flew in from the Coast today (Wed.).

Newly Elected Bd. Members

Board members elected at last Wednesday's N. Y. conclave are Stolkin, Grant, Edward Burke, William Gorman, Gordon Youngman, A. L. Koolish (Stolkin's father-in-law) and Corwin. Gorman is associated with Ray Ryan, major partner with Stolkin in the controlling stock ownership, in an oil business in San Antonio.

Unseated board members are Noah Dietrich, who had been chairman; Depinet, J. Miller Walker, Howard Hughes, Robert Mochrie and Francis O'Hara. Grant also was appointed general counsel, which post had been held by Walker. Latter's status, as, of course, all other officers, remains to be clarified. It's apparent that every RKO department head is faced with much uncertainty anent his future with the corporation.

In a further change, the law firm of Bautzer, Grant, Youngman & Silbert has been named corporate counsel in California, at a $75,000 yearly fee, succeeding Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp. Latter outfit stays on until Dec. 31 to conclude litigation on matters it is now handling.

Court Ruling

adequate." Compromise winds up a minority stockholders' suit brought on April 11, 1950, by David Cohn (no relation to the Col prez) and others against Col and certain of its directors. Action particularly challenged Harry Cohn's Feb. 10, 1949, salary contract.

Cohn's employment pact, the suit charged, was negotiated by attorney Arnold Grant, whose $40,000 fee was paid by Col This retainer, it was contended, should have been assumed by Cohn and not by the company. In making his settlement offer, Cohn agreed to pay $20,000 to the Col treasury, representing half the firm's disbursements to Grant. But at the same time he denied that any claims alleged in the complaint had any validity.

In disposing of the attorney fee question, Justice Eder held that "under ordinary circumstances it would seem but reasonable he (Harry Cohn) should pay for legal services rendered for his benefit. But here the situation was not the ordinary and usual one. Cohn, admittedly, is an executive and production manager of very high degree." Since Columbia was anxious to continue Cohn's employment, the court added, there was nothing wrong in the firm's step in engaging a lawyer to speed contract negotiations. "It was sound business judgment."

Likewise, Justice Eder disregarded stockholders' protests of a provision in Cohn's new pact which lifted his weekly expense allowance from $300 to $600 at the discretion of the company's board. Court cited Referee Klein's findings that Cohn had been receiving $300 for expenses since 1932. In light of the rise in costs over the past 20 years, the jurist found the allowance boost as fair but imposed a ceiling of $600 on such expenditures.

Plaintiff stockholders' third major objection centered around allegations that life insurance policies, originally payable to Columbia, were changed to name Cohn's family as beneficiaries. To this Justice Eder ruled: "There is nothing wrong in the corporation agreeing under the employment contract to pay death benefits to the members of Cohn's family . . . for Cohn was a very valuable asset to the corporation." Court noted that the payments were in the nature of an inducement to prevail upon Cohn to remain with the firm, and as such, were well worth it.

film (2) was to go, we were told that the Memphis and Shelby County Board of Censors had told the Warner management it couldn't play it, and that as second-high bidder, we would get it."

The Strand manager also revealed that "the story told to me (Beasley) was that the censor (Binford) wouldn't let the film be shown before whites and Negroes at the same time." James H. McCarthy, Warners' manager here, confirmed the Beasley statement to VARIETY and also said, "our New York office (WB) wired me that we had the film, so I prepared to exploit and publicize it, but the day before it was to open the RKO office here and R. J. Reagan, manager, called me and said that the censor said we couldn't show the fight picture at the Warner because of our colored gallery."

Binford hung up on Memphis' VARIETY correspondent when the latter queried him for a statement.

The Strand has an all-white house, while the Warner theatre seats 1,700 in its white section and 300 in the Negro gallery. The fight film was okayed to play the all-Negro Daisy Theatre on Beale St.

In another banning here by Binford, Charlie Chaplin's "Limelight" was also given the kibosh by the Memphis censor. Binford said that "Limelight" was "inimical to the public welfare."

TELEPIX REVIEWS

FORD THEATRE
(Life, Liberty & Orrin Dooley)
With Will Rogers, Jr., Marguerite Chapman, others
Writer: Mary C. McCall, Jr.
Director: Robert Stevenson
Producer: Screen Gems, Inc.
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
FORD DEALERS
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(J. Walter Thompson)

This is the eagerly-awaited vidpix series off the Screen Gems (Columbia Pictures subsid) production belt line and as such represents perhaps the closest thrust of a major Hollywood studio toward filming product for video. Enjoying a flexibility heretofore rare to the vidpix firmament, "Ford Theatre," sponsored by the Ford Dealers in the various NBC-TV affiliate communities, is in a position to bring top screen personalities to the TV cameras, with adaptations of plays, novels and original stories directed by some key film directors.

Whatever its promise and potential, the inaugural presentation ("Life, Liberty and Orrin Dooley," written by Mary C. McCall, Jr., and directed by Robert Stevenson) was no great shakes in vidfilm pioneering. It starred Will Rogers, Jr., in the role of a GI returning to his Oklahoma farm after a Korean stretch and enrolling in grammar school for some larnin' whilst making a play for the beauteous schoolmarm.

The story line sometimes projected Rogers as an untutored savant tossing off some profundities in hayseed terminology (reminiscent of his father), and again as an awkward and unconvincing romantic. On both counts the development was flimsy and the tale incredible.

Considering the impressive "Hollywood-will-show-TV" auspices, the allround production was not qualitatively top-shelf. Contrary to the supposition that "going film" permits for a greater flexibility in camera treatment, the impression remained that the performers were hugging the lens and might just as well have been restricted to a small TV stage. Certainly there was little imagination or any new device to set it off from the flood of vidpix mediocrity. Supporting players, too, were just adequate.

There's no doubt that Rogers does project an appealing warmth. He alone nearly captured what the script lacked. Rose.

FOREIGN INTRIGUE
(Foreign Intrigue in Heidelberg)
With Jerome Thor, Bernard Farrel, others
Producer-director: Sheldon Reynolds
Writer: Reynolds
30 Mins.; Thurs., 10:30 p.m.
BALLANTINE BEER
WNBT, New York
(J. Walter Thompson)

After a 13-week stretch, during which "Foreign Intrigue" reprised a group of its better entries, the show is starting the fall season with a new crop of vidpix. Latest batch was all filmed in Paris, while the first cycle had been shot for the most part in Sweden. Lensing in France will probably prove helpful from the casting standpoint, since in addition to more English-speaking natives there should be more suitable thesps coming through Paris than the northern countries.

Initial entry Thursday (2) was a cut above some others caught last year. Script, based on an original story by George and Gertrude Fass, was grounded in polictical currents in present-day Germany—the revival of Nazism, or neo-fascism, with Heidelberg students setting themselves up as leaders of the anti-democratic movement.

Bernard Farrel played a Prussian youth who engaged in duels, his sabre scar becoming the badge of his jingoism. A prof who spoke with Jerome Thor, who starred as an American correspondent, was slain in a duel with Farrel. Latter then provoked Thor, and, after being beaten in a fist fight, tried to kill him with his sabre. Using jujitsu, Thor saved himself and extracted a confession just as the authorities broke in to arrest the youth.

The conflict was political and generated interest. The diehard character of the neo-Nazi made for heightened tension, and the dueling scenes provided some dramatic visual action. Acting was effective, lensing and editing of good quality and the location shooting added to the authenticity. There was a

OZZIE AND HARRIET
With Ozzie Nelson, Harriet (Hilliard) Nelson, David and Ricky Nelson, Don DeFore, Eilene Janssen
Producers: Robert Angus, Bill Lewis
Director: Ozzie Nelson
Writers: Ozzie Nelson, Bill Davenport, Don Nelson, Ben Gershman
30 Mins.; Fri., 8 p.m.
HOTPOINT, LAMBERT
ABC, from Hollywood
(Maxon, Lambert & Feasley)

The Nelsons—there are five of them—have bounded into television after a long and starry span in radio and, judging from their vidpix preem Friday night (3) via ABC-TV, their TV record should be everywhere as good as on AM. Takeoff on the new concept was a warm, chucklesome stanza displaying what's inherent in the skills of Ozzie and his cohorts. It's a socko family show, built mainly around the talents of the young Nelson offspring, and the initialer was a winner all the way.

It became increasingly apparent that Ricky, 12, is being groomed as star of the family. He was cute only in spots, which was more the fault of the writing than his own talents at wringing a laugh from a line. David, the older, is used mostly as a foil for Ricky. Ozzie and Harriet are their usual selves and Don DeFore plays "Thorny," the next door friend, whom, it was indicated, will needle the old bread-winner into exasperating situations. The fifth Nelson, is Don, of the writing battery.

Story line had to do with puppy love rivalry involving the sprigs of the Nelson and DeFore households. While Oz and Harriet, along with DeFore, got the stanza rolling, it was the kids who took over and kept it perking. Solid timing of the youngsters, with Eilene Janssen giving the two Nelson boys a hefty assist in this department, evidenced the wizardry of Oz in both the scripting and directing departments. Granted that some of the situations slowed down, the overall impact was great.

The Nelsons are as typical and earthy as any normal family and at times problems have to be invented. Oz and Harriet are ingenious at this type of comedy but they seem to be sacrificing too much of their own participation to advance the youngsters. But any mistakes were minor and undoubtedly due to first show experimentation.

Filming by Volcano Productions was creditably done. Hotpoint (kitchen appliances) alternates with Listerine on both radio and TV.

DEATH VALLEY DAYS
With Brad Johnson, Kirkley Riley, Phyllis Coates, John Parrish, others
Producer: Dorrell McGowan
Executive Producer: Louis Gray
Director: Stuart McGowan
Writer: Ruth Woodman
30 Mins., Fri., 9:30 p.m.
PACIFIC COAST BORAX
KTLA, Hollywood
(McCann-Erickson)

Drama in the nation's hot-box is the basis for this new filmed series, a sight-and-sound version of a longtime standard AM offering. The transition has been made with ease and the new "Death Valley Days" series should enjoy a consistent, though not necessarily tremendous, following.

Initial teleplay by Mrs. Ruth Woodman tells how the nation's wasteland was aptly named by a group of pioneers who stumbled into it while seeking a short route to the California gold fields. It's told with an almost documentary fidelity that enhances the atmosphere and helps cover some minor story holes.

Production by Dorrell McGowan takes full advantage of the rugged country to enhance the grimness of the situation and Stuart McGown's good direction paces a well-selected cast through better-than-average performances. Best is Brad Johnson as a rugged young frontiersman who eventually saves the party with the aid of Kirkley Riley, a onetime storekeeper. Phyllis Coates as the latter's wife and John Parrish as a leader of the group also are good.

Stanley Andrews narrates as "The Old Ranger" and the filmed commercials, nicely handled, feature Rosemary De Camp. Program is sold on spot basis in 63 markets for one of the biggest vidpix spreads to date. Kap.

DOC CORKLE
With Eddie Mayehoff, Arnold Stang, Chester Conklin, Hope Emerson, Connie Marshall, Arthur Q. Bryan, Billie Burke
Writers: Alan Lipscott, Devery Freeman, Bob Fisher
Producer-Director: Lou Place
30 Mins., Sun., 7:30 p.m.
REYNOLDS METALS CO.
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(Buchanan)

This one reads good forward and backward. With Eddie Mayehoff as the star and probably the outstanding assortment of comedy character performers yet transplanted into the vidpix medium, not to mention the enviable post-Skelton 7:30 Sabbath period on NBC-TV with its guaranteed audience pickup, "Doc Corkle" was figured a cinch as TV's newest situation comedy click.

On last Sunday's (5) preem it almost made it—but not quite. If the Alan Lipscott-Devery Freeman-Bob Fisher scripting contrib failed to send the televiewer into spasms, the fact remains that the groundwork was laid for what may develop into one of the more sprightly of the '52-'53 season's additions to the TV spectrum.

There's a strictly professional aura about this new entry in the situation comedy sweepstakes. The promise is a good one—a neighborhood dentist (Mayehoff) beset by financial troubles and a highly individualistic wacky family. Anything can come out of it, and if the initial installment failed to realize its maximum comedy potential, nonetheless the assorted characters had already begun to groove themselves into their proper stances. There's little doubt that the burden from here on rests with the scripting trio. If they deliver, the Reynolds Metal Co. has itself a valuable property.

Mayehoff didn't ever do his stylized comedics, which was all to the good. It's to his credit that, by the time the first chapter was unspooled, he had endowed the role with a warmth and simplicity. Billie Burke plays the Doc's well-heeled sister to whom he appeals for help. Arnold Stang as her insufferable son is a natural for the role, easily sharing top comedy laurels with Mayehoff. The others know how to handle lines and situations, like the pros they are. Rose.

CHINA SMITH
(Celestial Pebbles)
With Dan Duryea, King Donavan, Douglas Dumbrille, Jorga Curtwright, others
Producer: Arthur Pierson
Director: Bernard Tabakin
Writer: Robert C. Dennis
Distributor: PSI-TV
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
CREBBEN & SEXTON
WNBQ, Chicago
(Christoansen)

This new adventure series assembled by Edward Lewis Productions and starring Dan Duryea looks, off the initial reelage seen (2), to have the stuff to get by with the action seekers. Essentially a B-type pic streamlined timewise and budget wise to fit the tele circuit, first yarn was a half-hour capsule of Oriental flavored cops and robbers high jinks completely familiar to film house double feature patrons. Nevertheless, it stacks up okay and as a spot-booked offering it should hook respectable ratings.

First installment established China Smith (Dan Duryea) as one of those typical carefree beachcombers, staying just one jump ahead of the law as he picks up a fast buck here and there by outsmarting both coppers and thugs. Activities took place in Singapore with all the standard characters from the sinister knife thrower, the dryly witty British police inspector and the sexy dame. Thesping by all hands was competent, if a bit routine. Duryea does give the title role name value and a lift with a light touch that should wear well.

Robert C. Dennis' tale was weakened by a switch ending that was played off by a two-way dialog and was an afterthought complication. What looked like a simple jewel theft with Smith working with the thief in making a deal with the insurance company for the recovery of the necklace turns out not so clear cut at the end. Viewers learn at the payoff that the real rocks had been pilfered earlier and that the femme victim later arranged the phony robbery so she'd have time to re-instate her insurance on the jewels. Of course, Mr. Smith knew it all along. Dave.

CAVALCADE OF AMERICA
(Poor Richard)
With Cecil Kellaway, Dabbs Greer, Henry Brandon, Alan Napier, Leo Britt
Producer: Gil Ralston
Director: Peter Godfrey
Writer: Fred Jackson
30 Mins.; alt. Wed., 8:30 p.m.
DuPONT
NBC-TV, from New York
(BBD&O)

Now in its 18th year on radio, "Cavalcade of America" is adding television and looks likely to garner new laurels. DuPont isn't sparing the coin on these vidpix—they're budgeted at over $25,000—but the price is worth it in terms of the re-use potential on TV as well as the public relations possibilities of screening the reels at schools and clubs. Bankroller has an NBC-TV lineup of 22 stations, plus 11 outlets inked on a syndication basis.

The initial vehicle may not set the tone of the series as a whole. It was a humorous effort based on a little-known event in the life of Benjamin Franklin. John Adams wanted to negotiate with the British early in the Revolution. At first Franklin objected, but later changed his mind when tipped off by General Washington to delay the talks until the rainy season so his army could escape from a British trap. Feigning illness, opening a window so that Adams catches cold and can't talk, showing the British (Gen. Howe and Admiral Howe) his experiments with ants, Franklin succeeds in gaining time for Washington, who slipped through the British lines under the cover of a rainy night.

Largely through the excellent thesping of Cecil Kellaway, Franklin came over as a charming septuagenarian. But the overall script had a juvenile quality—the British being completely unsuspecting, Adams coming across as a young fogey and not what the history books convey. The odds were so greatly tipped in Ben's favor that suspense was nil.

Nevertheless, the production was topflight. There were several impressive sets which seemed authentic in detail. Costumes (such as the British officers') were attractive. Direction gave the characters a historic quality, while keeping them natural—except for the naive characterization of Adams. Presumably the production is benefitting from the fact that three companies competed in turning out the first 13 dramas: Columbia Pic's Screen Gems lensed seven, Jack Chertok's Apex Films two and Gil Ralston's Screen Televideo four (including the opening show).

In keeping with the public service aura with which the company surrounds itself, the action is not interrupted by a middle commercial. Solitary blurb was a description of the corporation's fellowships to chemists. Bril.

MARCH OF TIME
With Westbrook Van Voorhis, announcer
Director: Fred Feldkamp
30 Mins.; Wed., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WJZ-TV—ABC, N. Y.

March of Time, which bowed out of theatrical film production to concentrate on vidpix work, debuted with its new title series on a group of ABC video outlets last week. As a weekly, rather than a monthly show, the TV version will undoubtedly concentrate more on current news than did the theatrical films. But, they're going to have to be more concentrated than the initialer if they're to gain either a sponsor or an audience.

For the kickoff, MOT editors attempted to depict in broad, documentary terms the state of the union in the month of August, 1952. Episodic half-hour covered the subject well but unwisely, ranging from highschool life and the college football season through the Presidential campaigning. There was even a large hunk of the show devoted to Broadway legit and the dearth of shows extant at the time, which brought in some amusing clips lensed in Sardi's eatery.

But, while the stuff on Ike and Adlai was handled fairly and well, the remainder of the show was too mixed and diluted to bear much interest. Westbrook Van Voorhis, who's been narrating MOT productions virtually since their inception, usually can give even the most unimportant scenes a ring of authenticity with his low-pitched, authoritative voice. For this stanza, though, he wasn't much help. Stal.

OUR MISS BROOKS
With Eve Arden, Robert Rockwell, Dick Crenna, Gloria McMillan, Gale Gordon, Jane Morgan, others; Wilbur Hatch, music
Producer: Larry Berns
Director:-writer: Al Lewis
30 Mins.; Fri., 9:30 p.m.
GENERAL FOODS
CBS-TV, from N.Y.
(Young & Rubicam)

CBS-TV might not have another "I Love Lucy" in its new video version of "Our Miss Brooks" but it certainly has a show which will attract and hold a king-sized audience. Series, starring Eve Arden and featuring most of the cast of the original AM show, is being filmed under the aegis of Desilu Productions (Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball of "Lucy" fame). Its humor may be more farcical and not quite so warm as "Lucy's" but it's yockful and should do a good selling job for the sponsor.

Judging from the preem edition last Friday (3), "Brooks" will follow basically the same pattern as the radio series, with the emphasis on sharp dialog and situations more than on slapstick. With Miss Arden an experienced and competent comedienne, TV's added sight values give the show a welcome new dimension and she and the rest of the cast take full advantage of this via their mugging and other antics. It's all in good fun, however, and plays well.

Miss Arden, of course, does a superfine job in the title role and the supporting cast is funnier on TV than on radio. Gale Gordon, as the terrible-tempered highschool principal, is top-drawer, and Robert Rockwell, only cast change (he replaces radio's Jeff Chandler as the biology teacher on whom Miss Arden has designs), is good in the role. Dick Crenna is a little too broad in his visualization of the adolescent student but milks his lines with a high-pitched voice for plenty of laughs. Gloria McMillan is good as his girl-friend and Jane Morgan gets results in the most difficult role—that of the zany landlady.

Initial script, penned Al Lewis, was a frothy thing about Miss Arden's taking Crenna's advice to start a fight with Rockwell so that they can "kiss and make up." Situation served only as a lightweight peg on which to hang the situations, which eventually included the entire cast in the shenanigans.

Plugs for various General Foods products, also on film, are standard. Stal.

MAN AGAINST CRIME
With Ralph Bellamy, Jack Warden, Gloria McGhee, Thomas Nello, Patsy Perroni, Jay Oken, Jack Howard
Writer: Checkley Ellis
Producer-director: Edward J. Montagne
R. J. REYNOLDS (CAMEL)
CBS-TV, from New York
(Esty)

"Man Against Crime," a conventional private eye meller, started its fourth season on CBS-TV Wednesday (1) with a mediocre yarn that viewers could either take or leave depending upon individual inclination. To refresh memories of the uninitiated, this half-hour show has Ralph Bellamy portraying the "defender of the oppressed and a fearless fighter for common justice." Show is now on film for the first time.

For Wednesday's preem the Checkley Ellis script had Bellamy finding his way into the lair of escaped convict Jack Warden with the aid of the latter's moll, Gloria McGhee, and stool pigeon Thomas Nello. Also "gathering for the kill"—to quote a line from the script—were a couple of gunmen from the inevitable "syndicate" whose mission it was to rub out Warden.

After Warden got the drop on Bellamy, the latter regained the upper hand by breaking the cap of an illuminating gas line. This sent the convict gasping across a window to be mowed down by the gun of a killer on the street. It wasn't explained why the gas had little or no effect upon the private eye.

Despite the cliche-ridden plot, the small cast made a valiant try in making the situations credible. Players were helped by good physical backgrounds and competent camerawork. Bellamy was forthright as the detective, Miss McGhee was sufficiently distraught as the moll and Nello was amply furtive as the stoolie. They deserve better material.

Puffs for Camel cigarets were framed around the catchline—"make your own 30-day test," etc. Gilb.

EVERYBODY (ALMOST) GOING FILM

NBC-TV Prepping Flock of Vidpix Situation Comedies in Trend Upbeat

NBC, which is fighting to get a toehold in the situation comedy sweepstakes virtually monopolized until now by the rival CBS web, has five major situation comedies for AM, TV or both ready to go as soon as new time slots open up on the web. Program veepee Charles (Bud) Barry revealed this week that he has signed Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy in the latest of a string of top-name talent being wrapped up for the shows, and that he is also dickering with Elliott Nugent and Peggy Ann Garner to do a radio version of "Father of the Bride."

In addition to these two packages, Barry already has in the can vidfilm pilots on a situation comedy series starring Mickey Rooney; the "Life of Riley" package, with William Bendix in the title role, and a series based on the "Ethel and Albert" stories (with Peg Lynch and Alan Bunce), which formed one of the integral features of the "Kate Smith Evening Hour" last season on NBC-TV.

Cronyn and Miss Tandy are to do a husband-and-wife show, similar to but not based on their current "Fourposter" legiter, in which they are touring. Barry hopes to have them cut an audition disk for the proposed series sometime this month in Chicago, where they'll be playing. He also has them in mind for a similar show for TV, and may lens an audition kine for a TV series at the same time.

Nugent and Miss Garner would be playing the roles held respectively by Spencer Tracy and Elizabeth Taylor in the recent Metro filmization of "Bride." Since M-G owns the film rights, it's presumed doubtful that NBC could clear them for a vidpix series.

All-Thru-The-Nite Pix on WNBT Sked

Despite the abortive attempts of WOR-TV, N. Y., to make a success of all-night programming, WNBT, the NBC video web's N. Y. flagship, is still planning to launch a midnight to dawn operation. But where WOR-TV tried live programming via the Freddie Robbins show, WNBT plans to utilize only film, hoping it can operate at a profit through use of the "continuous performance" idea which has proved successful on Saturday afternoons.

As explained by WNBT execs this week, very few viewers can be expected to tune into a station at midnight and watch it until dawn breaks. As a result, they said, there's no reason to run different films throughout the night. WNBT, as a result, will utilize only one feature and short each night, grinding them until dawn so that viewers can tune in just as though they had walked in on the middle of a feature at their nabe filmery, watch it until they had come to the part where they tuned in and then turn off the set and hit the sack.

Rating surveys on WNBT's continuous shows on Saturday afternoons show a steady flow of audience for the entire program. And the station is now SRO for that show.

Snader Stations at 53

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

E. Jonny Graff, sales chief of the Snader vidfilm outfit, left here by car over the weekend on a cross-country tour, during which he'll visit all the new TV markets.

Graff has just closed a deal with KOB-TV, Albuquerque, for his firm's Snader Telescriptions, which brings the total number of stations using the musical library to 53.

Jersey Barn as Studio

Owners of the Lakeside Theatre, Lake Hopatcong, N. J., erstwhile strawhatter, have converted the house into a vidfilm production studio and plan to launch their new biz as the Lakeside TV Co. According to prexy Dick Stevers, outfit will concentrate from the start on film syndication but plans to inaugurate production within the next few months.

Lakeside is currently editing a series of outdoor adventure films as its first entry for TV, but is looking for pilots on unsold vidpix series which it hopes to distribute as single programs. Company has also set up offices in Manhattan.

Gibbs Vice Lewis On Schlitz Vidpix

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Schlitz has terminated its deal with Edward Lewis Productions after 26 telepix for brewer's "Playhouse of Stars" which complete the series next month. Contract for the new collection of vidpix has been signed with John C. Gibbs, of N. Y., who supervises production of the Robert Montgomery dramatic series on TV.

Gibbs is now in Hollywood assembling his own unit to produce the teleplays from properties he controls. He holds exclusive contracts with foremost writers, who will provide material for the half-hour vidpix. He will start shooting late this month and function in a supervisory capacity.

For a time Schlitz was considering live dramatics on teevee, having been disappointed with the current run of films, but decided to give it another try and made the deal with Gibbs.

AFP Hurdles Prohibitive Cost Factor in Batch Of 1-Min. Test Film Blurbs

American Film Producers, N. Y. vidpic outfit, is turning out test films of 60-second commercials for $233.33 apiece, in contrast with one-minute celluloid blurbs costing several times that figure. First batch of six test plugs was delivered last week to Calkins & Holden, Carlock, McClinton & Smith for its Prudential Life account.

AFP set up a test film division to work with Horace Schwerin, the qualitative analysis researcher, some months ago. Big obstacle to testing film commercials was cost of production. Bob Gross and Larry Glesnes of AFP worked out a production line formula knocking costs down to $233.33 per test pic.

Pix are made under full union regulations but are not designed to be telecast. They're screened for a test audience of agency execs and 300-400 persons, Gross said, and are aimed at showing the relative impact of various copy themes, the appeal of specific announcers, the potency of various situations, etc. To get the cost down, no fades or dissolves are used. Lensing is on 16m. Shooting is in units of six films only.

"TV is too expensive for guesswork," Gross said. "Test pix will eliminate a lot of guesses and will be an important tool for creating more advertising efficiency in tele commercials."

Among other films now in production by AFP are "Private Ambrose" for Grant ad agency; "Men of the Forest" for the State Department; "Target: Recruits," for Robert Orr Associates; and "Air Force Scientists," for the U. S. Air Force.

OCT.'S ALLTIME RECORD PREEMS

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

October marks an alltime record for vidpix. At least 20 celluloid shows are bowing this month, of which only a sprinkling are repeaters from last season. Figure represents a striking commentary on phenomenal growth of telefilm, comparing to about half a dozen telepix shows last fall.

Rapid expansion of the industry is keynoted this month, as the actual product, work of the past several months, comes to life on the telescreen in the form of music, drama, comedy, adventure, and even newsreel, as exemplified in "March of Time."

One of the most important starters was "Ford Theatre," which teed off last week. Industry leaders in pix and vidpix eyed this closely since NBC-TV series is produced by Columbia's TV subsid, Screen Gems, and includes names such as Edward Arnold, Macdonald Carey, Diana Lynn, Marguerite Chapman, Joan Caulfield, Herbert Marshall, Mark Stevens, Ellen Drew, Will Rogers Jr., Arthur Franz, and Dick Haymes. "Ford Theatre" was the first public unveiling of telepix product produced by a major studio's subsidiary, and consequently has more than casual interest for the trade.

Other October telepix starters include: "March of Time," produced by Marion Parsonnet; "The Standard Hour"; "Cavalcade of America"; produced by several companies, NBC-TV; "The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," produced by Volcano Productions, ABC-TV.

"Our Miss Brooks," starring Eve Arden, CBS-TV; "Mr. and Mrs. North," starring Barbara Britton and Richard Denning, NBC-TV; "Captain Midnight"; "Ramar of the Jungle," starring Jon Hall, produced by Arrow Productions; Abbott and Costello series, produced by Cosman Productions.

"Your Jeweler's Showcase," produced by Screen Television; "Affairs of China Smith," starring Dan Duryea; "Inspector Mark Saber, Homicide Squad," starring Tom Conway, produced by Roland Reed.

"Death Valley Days," produced by Flying A; "I Married Joan," starring Joan Davis, NBC-TV, pro-

Indie TV Film Producers Gear For Windfall as New Stations Open Up

With some 60 new television stations scheduled to take the air during the next year, most of which will probably be scrounging for inexpensive and saleable programming, the indie TV film distributors are eyeing a landslide of new biz. Illustrative of the vidfilm syndicators' optimism is United TV Programs, which expects to gross some $600,000 to $1,000,000 in 1953 from the new video outlets alone.

Prexy Milton Blink, in N. Y. last week from his Chicago headquarters, noted that many of the new stations will be opening up video in their markets, so that they'll be paying the lowest possible prices for product. Despite this, Blink said, the new business possibilities deriving from them should be tremendous. He revealed that UTP grossed about $1,500,000 during its first year in operation and estimated that this year's gross would hit close to $2,000,000. With the new biz anticipated, he predicted the 1953 billings should come close to the $3,000,000 mark.

UTP chief noted a current dearth of good, new product for indie distribs such as his firm to latch onto. He attributed this to the fact that too many aspiring vidfilm producers got burned by sinking all their money into an expensive pilot film and then not being able to sell the series. He pointed out, however, that the banks are becoming more amenable to financing vidfilms, provided the producer can show them a good pilot and has a good distrib setup lined up in advance.

Seek 15-Minute Shows

Blink also spotted as a growing trend in the vidfilm business the demands of local stations for quarter-hour, rather than half-hour shows. Reason, he said, is that the networks are now programming a number of 15-minute live shows, which forces the local affiliates to fill the half-hour with another show of their own. Because of this, he said, UTP has re-edited its "Old American Barn Dance" series into quarter-hour form, and stations can now buy the show either in its original half-hour form or as a 15-minute stanza.

Despite the lucrative biz being done currently by distribs of feature film oldies to TV (it was revealed last week that Motion Pictures for Television will gross about $4,000,000 this year), Blink said that UTP will continue to bypass handling features in favor of concentrating exclusively on syndication of pix lensed especially for TV. He said each form of distribution is specialized, since outfits like MPTV deal mainly with stations directly, whereas vidfilm distribs, such as UTP, deal with agencies and sponsors.

Levoy Polls 'Em

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Gordon W. Levoy, vidfilm packager and TV consultant, has mailed out questionnaires to 700 TV execs across the country for his fifth annual TV poll, designed to determine the preference of station managers, agency execs, etc., on types of programming. More than 25% of those polled have already sent in their answers.

Survey asks the respondents to indicate their preference on program formats, program length, method of dramatic programming, type of production (live vs. film, etc.) and method of production (live audience vs. no audience, or dubbed-in audience reaction). There's also room on the memo for "suggestions for advancing TV programming."

Lincoln Vidpix On 'Omnibus' Agenda

CBS-TV's upcoming "Omnibus" series, to be produced by Ford Foundation, will present a series of five plays dealing with the early years of Abraham Lincoln, as one of the major features of the Sunday afternoon program. Plays are to be based on original scripts by James Agee, co-author of last year's Academy Award-winning "African Queen." To be lensed on film, the plays will occupy the same place in "Omnibus" as the series of six original William Saroyan one-acters set for the show.

Royal Dano will play the title role in the "Mr. Lincoln" series, which is to be lensed on location in Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois, where Lincoln was born and grew up. Series is being lensed for "Omnibus" by Vavin, Inc., under the supervision of Richard de Rochemont, with Norman Lloyd directing. Each is to run from 25 to 40 minutes.

"Omnibus" preems on CBS-TV Nov. 9, holding down the Sunday 4:30 to 6 p.m. period.

Lift 5% 'Format' On Pix TV Blurbs

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

American Federation of Musicians prexy James C. Petrillo has lifted the 5% format from all teleblurbs one minute or less in length, and replaced it with a fixed fee pattern, it was disclosed yesterday by Phil Fischer, TV-AM v.p. of Musicians Local 47. AFM change applies only to the brief blurbs and doesn't affect telepix or regular length in any way, it was stressed.

Petrillo notified Fischer, "The Federation has given great consideration to the matter of television film, jingles and spot announcements. Therefore in lieu of the 5% payment to the trustee, we have developed a new policy, relaxing the payment principle to the trustee. By substituting a fixed fee for the 5% of station time charges." Move follows thorough investigation of the situation.

New AFM deal will be effective as soon as proper agreements are signed with the tunesters.

"Mr. and Mrs. North" will have to catch up with its background before it can figure on catching on as a living room visualer. The judgment applies to the preem televersion last week (3) of a series based on the characters created some 20 years ago by Frances and Richard Lockridge in the New Yorker and since then a hardy in radio, as well as a legiter and film besides being encased between covers as a novel for about 16 outings.

What has previously been rigged as smartly styled comedy mystery comes out with little of the ingredients of either classification, being merely a conventional little whodunit wherein production credits overtake the pallid script.

Permanently anchored are filmites Barbara Britton and Richard Denning in the title parts (Pam and Jerry) with Francis DeSales the Lt. Weigand. Surrounding them on the bow were a competent cast of Hollywood players including such veterans as Rita Johnson, John Cavanagh and James Kirkwood. Miss Britton and Denning are attractive, but they do not impart the aura of slickness and sophistication inherent in the Lockridge fabrication, despite chichi mountings and wardrobe. Sub-par dialog and narrative serve further to sideswipe their efforts and those in support.

Story is of thin value, treating of the murder of Miss Johnson's estranged husband in her country home and, per usual, solution by Miss Britton, the "smart" side of the amateur sleuthing duo.

Series is being shot at Samuel Goldwyn Studios by Federal Telefilms (Harry Joe Brown) with casting by Buster Collier and scripts rotating among DeWitt Bodeen, Reginald Denham & Mary Orr, George Oppenheimer, and Hoffman Hays.

Colgate is plugging its various products. One of them spots N. Y. Giant Bobby Thomson on shaving cream during a week in which the Brooklyn Dodgers and N. Y. Yankees were fighting it out for the diamond tiara. Someone missed the boat; the big Thomson homer in the playoffs was last year. Trau.

Producer: Steve Alexander
Writer: Leo Rogow
15 Mins.; Fri., 7:15 p.m.

"Headlines on Parade" is a quarter-hour film stanza pieced together from old newsreel clips. A United World Films production, it differs from Ziv TV's "Yesterday's Newsreel" in that it's pegged on quizzing the viewer about past events. A sequence is screened and the audience is popped a question about the segment, with the answer flashed after five seconds. They're pretty simple queries, but will probably perk up the set-owner's self-testing appetite.

Clips are silent, but have a soupcon of sound dubbed in (chatter of guns, crowd roars) and a running commentary scripted by Lee Rogow and punched across by Fred Uttal. It's a breathless kind of soundtrack; for example, Uttal sums up the career of Cuban strongman Batista in a superficial phrase, "The limelight is irresistible."

On the initialer Friday (3) the subjects covered: Queen Juliana's coronation in The Netherlands; prisoner-of-war riots in Koke; the raising of Old Glory on Mount Suribachi in World War II; the two stormy coups d'etat in which Batista figured; and a feature on big diamonds. There was enough action and variety in the clips to sustain interest, although the stanza leaned too heavily on battle scenes.

In addition to the plugs, Budweiser gets a break on the screen during the question periods (which use a cute chime gimmick to tick off the five seconds). Airer has been sold on a spot basis in 42 markets. Bril.

"Fireside Theatre," the granddaddy of the major vidfilm packages, returned for another season on NBC-TV Tuesday night (30) with an interesting yarn about the Army Air Force during the years immediately following World War I. Story could have formed the basis for a good feature-length film and, in its compression into a half-hour format, suffered in the telling. But the acting, directing and production credits were good, indicating that "Fireside" will have little trouble this year in holding its place among video's Top 10.

Frank Wisbar, who's been doubling as producer-director on the series since the initial season's batch turned out by Bing Crosby Enterprises, is back in the same post this year. New season's preem evidenced again that he knows his way around a film studio. Because of the era in which the story took place, with vintage planes used, some of the stock shots Wisbar was forced to employ didn't come off too well. Otherwise, the show was entirely believable.

John Sheppard's script, based on an original story by Thomson Burtis, dealt with an Air Force squadron on the Mexican border. When Mex bandits kidnapped two of the fliers, the rest of the crew wanted to rescue them with guns but were prohibited by Washington brass, which feared stirring up an international mess. Conflict between one of the fliers and a "kiwi" colonel sent to the base to handle the situation, plus the eventual rescue of the kidnapped pilots, sustained interest.

John Agar, as the flight officer, and Milburn Stone, as the colonel, topped a competent cast, with Dick Crane turning in a fine job as the pilot feuding with the colonel. Plugs for Procter & Gamble products made for potent selling. Stal.

GRUEN PLAYHOUSE

Writer: Gruenberg
30 Mins.; Tues., 10 p.m.
GRUEN WATCH CO.
KTLA, Hollywood

"Face Value" is a taut, fast-moving story revolving about an old device attired in new dressing, with an ironic twist at the end. Story of a mobster who lams to Mexico and finds a refugee surgeon whom he forces to change his face by plastic surgery is a meaty one, with director Axel Gruenberg contributing a skillful hand, and extracting all the essential ingredients from his own teleplay.

Gangster goes south, accompanied by a young colleague in crime, and forces the Czech refugee to give him a face change, threatening to kill his wife if he doesn't. Medico performs operation unwillingly, then threatens he won't finish the job unless his spouse is freed. Hood reluctantly agrees to this. Once the gunman has a new face he kills his pal and the doctor, since they're the only ones who can identify him. In an exciting finish he's killed by the Mexican cops. It seems the doctor gave him the same facial appearance of a notorious Mexican outlaw.

Superlative acting by Raymond Burr, as the gangster, and Gabriel Curtiz adds to the realism. Tyler MacDuff is okay as the junior hood, but Suzanne Dalbert is unconvincing, and much too theatrical, as the medico's wife.

Production-wise, the telepic is a standout, with technical credits better than average, and Ellsworth Fredericks' camera work a particularly good feature. Daku.

STANDARD HOUR
With Dorothy Warenskjold, Carmen Dragon, Anne Adams, William Olvis, Standard Symphony, San Francisco Ballet; John Grover, announcer

They're fresh out of bouquets in San Francisco. They've all been enthusiastically tossed to the gents who masterminded this first locally produced telepix series.

It hit screens in Los Angeles, San Diego, Phoenix, Seattle, Salt Lake City and here the same week the Coast had its first looksee at the "Voice of Firestone." It came off with favorable "ohs" and "ahs."

This is a TV development of the famed West Coast "Standard Hour," radio's oldest hour of fine music. It has the same executive producer and the same show-sharp know-how. Series was recorded in San Francisco and filmed at Richmond across the Bay.

Thirteen are in the can. Each program stresses light classics, features a name vocalist, a topflight instrumentalist, a promising newcomer developed by the radio series, the Standard Symphony conducted by Carmen Dragon, and the San Francisco Ballet.

Premiere was a well balanced, smoothly integrated, handsomely produced showpiece, easy on the ears and exciting to the eyes.

It opened with Dragon conducting the Symphony through "Lohengrin's" Act III intro, "Standard" radio's original theme. Musicmakers wore white ties and tails, worked from futuristic but effecting setting with camera quick-shifting from long shots to intimate closeups.

Dorothy Warenskjold trilled "Mi Chiamano Mimi" from "La Boheme" with a story book setting and authentic costuming. Harpist Anne Adams soloed Debussy's "Premiere Arabesque" in number three spot as ingenious camera work melted from bold lighting to shadowy silhouette. Tiptoers from the San Francisco Ballet glided through a lavish setting for Chopin's "Les Sylphides." Show closed with Miss Warenskjold and William Olvis dueting another "La Boheme" number, "O, Soave Fanicula."

John Grover, long identified with "Standard's" radio show, turned the pages of an on-camera program for convincing intros. Hale Sparks, another "Standard" veteran made the middle commercial institutional and informative.

First thirteen shows are designed as an "experimental" series, but permanency seems assured. Show is eyeful good companion to the earful good 26-year-old "Standard Hour" air series. Dwit.

WHO GETS TV'S 1ST 99 RATING?

End of an Era

The Lever Bros.-Ruthrauff & Ryan rift which resulted last week in the agency blowing the $6,000,000 Rinso-Spry accounts, highlights the "new order" in agency-client relations and the virtual demise of the "one-man operations." Gone forever are the days when an agency clung to a multi-million dollar acount by the grace of a agency clung to a multi-million dollar account by the grace of a exposed to the advertiser.

The R & R-Lever casualty, one of the real tough ones of the year, was, from all account, percipitated by the agency's account exec falling into bad graces of the client. It was probably the last of the "old fashioned" techniques of putting complete reliance on one man.

Today the account exec is just a front man for the creative departments. The chances of a personality clash inviting a billings exodus, as in the case of Ruthrauff & Ryan, are slim. The agencies today recognize that there is strength in depth just as the client is aware, particularly in a TV era when so many additional problems are projected, that it's the overall effect that counts.

Thus the day is gone when an account exec does a solo performance, either able to walk off with a major account (and open his own agency) or bring down the wrath of the client on the agency. The sponsor today is exposed to a dozen key men in the agency, each sharing equal responsibility, frequently one not knowing at what point the other moves in. The agencies like it that way—and so does the client.

Record '51 Takes for AM, TV Stations But Net Way Off; Webs Hard Hit

Washington, Oct. 7.

The radio networks and 2,241 AM and FM stations had record high gross revenues in 1951, but their net declined substantially, with the webs especially hard hit, the FCC reports in a final roundup of last year's financial data.

The total revenues came to $450,400,000, a new peak figure and an increase of 1.3% over 1950. Net before taxes, however, was down to $57,500,000, a decline of 15.7% below 1950. Web earnings from radio alone declined almost 50% below the figure for 1950, while the net of the individual stations was off by about 4%.

However, more different stations managed to operate profitably during the year. The FCC says that only 519 (about 24% of the 2,200 AM stations) reported operating in the red. This was the smallest figure percentage-wise since 1946. Most of the losing stations were newcomers, started after World War II.

While the AM stations did well, the situation continues gloomy for the FM-only outlets. There are 66; last year 60 of them operated at a loss.

The average AM station, established before World War II, grossed nearly $300,000 last year, from which it netted about $50,000 before taxes. The postwar stations, excluding those established less than two years, had average revenues of nearly $100,000 and average profits of about $7,500.

One interesting angle in station operation, the report discloses, is that for the first time national spot sales exceeded nationwide network time sales. Spot sales climbed

'Victory' Spans Ocean

"Victory At Sea," NBC-TV's ambitious series on naval operations, will also be beamed by the British Broadcasting Corp.'s TV network.

Film is being shipped to London, where it will have a day-and-date screening on Sunday, Oct. 26, with the U. S. preem.

Cowan Beltline Grinds 'Em Out; '52-53 Sked Rolls

After several months of preliminary planning and blueprinting, the Louis G. Cowan package-production mill steps into high gear with nearly a dozen deals on tap. Finalization on most of them awaits the return of Cowan from the political wars (he's touring with Gov. Adlai Stevenson as one of his key advisers on TV).

Most imminent and lucrative deal involves projected Kellogg sponsorship of the Cowan-conceived "Pet Shop" in 19 markets. Show comes out of the WGN studios in Chi and gets a DuMont spread. Meanwhile the Cowan office has also closed with WGN for

DuMont Innovates Daytime Venture

DuMont network, which five years ago paced the television industry in inauguration of daytime programming, launches another major pitch for the daytime audience today (Wed.) with a new departure in soap opera production. To be aired locally only via WABD, the web's N. Y. flagship, the show will be a low-budgeted affair in keeping with the constant emphasis put on inexpensive programming by the network and station.

New series, which is to be aired cross-the-board from 11:30 a.m. to 12 noon, will have only two characters, a man and woman, each to be seen in a separate quarter-hour. Duo will work from a bare stage, utilizing a continuous flow of speech, sound, pantomime, etc., to get across their stories. Idea is the brainchild of Larry Menkin, who will produce and direct. Attempt

INFLATION ERA SEEN LUDICROUS

By GEORGE ROSEN

Inflation has hit the TV rating market. It's the era of the "fabulous figure," with new shows knocking off a 42 first time up, some 50... 60...70...

"How ludicrous can those TV ratings get?" is the growing opinion among bewildered segments of the industry, who foresee the day—perhaps this season—when the top show will hit the 99 rating jackpot.

When CBS-TV's "I Love Lucy" hovered near the 70 Nielsen mark last season, to top the previous Milton Berle high, and only last week hit a 60.2 for the "highest Trendex rating in history" it was cause for considerable network jubilation, attended by reams of "first time ever" publicity releases. Even more elated was the sponsor, Philip Morris, which wasn't accustomed to playing around with those kind of ratings.

In a Barnum world of bigger and better figures (in contrast to the days when even the late FDR couldn't bargain for better than a 40 rating for a vital fireside radio chat), industry skeptics are asking: "Who's kidding whom?"

"Life With Luigi" went on TV for the first time a couple weeks back—sight unseen, and only with previous radio exposure—and grabbed a fast tally of 42.6%.

But, they're asking, "percent of what?"

The same "Luigi" got a 64.4 share of audience.

And they're also asking, "share of what?"

The TV nosecounters, it's maintained, presuppose that every TV set is in use and while their judgment is not questioned in selecting the top favorites on the basis of the ~~homes polled, it's argued that~~ the multiplications are exaggerated out of all proportion.

Last month, it's recalled, John Karol, veepee in charge of network sales for CBS Radio, did a breakdown of figures in an address before the Advertising Club of St. Louis in which he reminded that "not all homes in TV areas have TV sets. In fact, the average television program, seen as it is in fact in 30 to 35 markets, actually misses about 70% of the homes in our land."

It's no secret that the advertisers, regardless of how realistic they are, like the inflated ratings. Back in the AM-only days when Crossley ruled the rating roost, he enjoyed the major popularity because he projected the tallest figures. Then along came Hooper and he knocked 'em off bigger and better. Sponsors

'Peepers,' 'Margie' Big Potentials As Summer-Incubated TV Clicks

The summer replacement season in TV appears to have paid off with some programs and personalities that look headed for the bigtime in the commercial sweepstakes.

There's little if any precedent for the traditional hard-boiled station manager to lament or protest the fading of a network program, particularly one doing summer duty. But that's precisely what happened in the case of the Wally Cox "Mr. Peepers" show on NBC-TV, which Ford had bankrolled during the summer. (The motor company's new entry, the Screen Gems "Ford Theatre" bowed last week in the Thursday 9 to 9:30 p.m. period, with the Cox show bowing off the video channels.)

NBC-TV execs now admit that there has been a veritable deluge of lamentations from affiliates around the country who see in "Peepers" a potential major comedy showcase. There has, in fact, been considerable client interest manifested in the show since it went off the NBC-TV airlanes. Ford wanted to retain the show for a Sunday afternoon slot but couldn't ante up the budget.

Philip Morris, already entrenched with the No. 1 rated video show, "I Love Lucy," also seems to have gained another top audience-pulling series. This is the "My Little Margie" situation comedy which the ciggie company had installed in the Monday night at 9 CBS-TV time as the summer replacement for "Lucy." Since the latter's return, "Margie" has shifted over to NBC-TV for a new 13-week cycle, and with such favorable response that Philip Morris

Love That Man

With time availabilities on the major television networks now of the essence, thus automatically shutting out advertisers seeking a favorable niche on the nighttime programming rosters, the key guy around the advertising agencies these days is the one with an "in" at the webs.

One of the top agencies in recent weeks has been frantically bidding for the services of an NBC-TV exec who stands in the good graces of the web echelon. Agency figures that by romancing him into the fold it will have top priority for a client when a choice time segment opens up.

NBC's 120G Rap As NABET Walks On Sun. TV Shows

Last-minute walkout Sunday night (5) by National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians staffers at NBC cost the web $120,000 in rebates to the two sponsors whose shows were knocked off the air by the fracas. These were Revere Copper & Brass, whose "Meet the Press" was forced off, and Colgate, which lost out on its "Comedy Hour."

Latter show was killed for east coast and midwestern viewers but was aired later Sunday night from Hollywood for the west coast and the 13 markets which regularly play the show on a delayed kinescope basis. Show is usually staged at 5 p.m. Coast time, where it plays at 8 p.m. in the east and is given the "hot kine" treatment for a playback on the Coast at 8 o'clock PST. With the strike settled at 10:30 Sunday night (Coast time), the show went on the air in Hollywood, from which a kine was lensed for the kine markets. Donald O'Connor starred in Sunday night's stanza.

Strike was reportedly caused by NABET staffers in Washington, who feared that NBC's new integration of its radio and TV networks would cause some overlapping in duties and thus some layoffs. Net execs were reportedly willing to get together with the union but the two factions couldn't

'Snooks' Silenced By Lion's Roar

NBC is still in the process of trying to work out an agreement with Metro whereby the latter will permit the return of "Baby Snooks" to the radio and video airlanes.

NBC had little trouble getting clearance from the estate of the late Fannie Brice for a revival of the "Snooks" series on radio, but when it came to talking of a TV adaptation, as well, it developed that Metro had the rights tied up. This situation stems from a pic made some years back for the studio in which Miss Brice portrayed the "Snooks" role, with MG then and there clinching the TV rights.

If NBC gets clear sailing, Dee Engelbach will supervise the AM-TV versions, with Caroline Burke producing. Mitzi Green is slated to inherit the "Snooks" characterization, with Jack Arthur, the original father in the series (before Hanley Stafford moved into the role) returning to the series. Arthur has been doing an early morning Sunday radio show for NBC.

Unions Tread Elysian Fields

Unions in the broadcast field are entering a new era, that of wrestling in a more concentrated fashion for improved wages and working conditions. The changed picture results from the general settlement of jurisdictional disputes, in which inter-union guerrilla warfare, plots and counterplots, had hindered the workers in pressing for more favorable terms from the networks, agencies and advertisers.

In the talent sphere, approval by the Associated Actors & Artistes of America of the Television Authority-American Federation of Radio Artists wedding has removed a knotty problem which had taken members' attention from bread-and-butter trade union questions. At the same time, the live unions and the screen guilds have generally buried the hatchet (although there is still some soreness on filmed spots, with AFTRA offering to sit in with Screen Actors Guild on negotiations).

Last week AFTRA opened talks with the radio networks, raising for the first time a demand for a health and welfare fund. There are a number of other points AFTRA is seeking, on rates, enforcement of contract, a new "doubling" clause, and payment for commercial spots and chain breaks by staff announcers.

TV Talent Talks Oct. 22

The TV talent talks get under way Oct. 22. The union's demands are still up in the air, with the committees working on them just getting started. It's a ticklish area, since video is still in a state of flux and unexpected changes may crop up. However, union sources intimate that a hike in pay will be pressed.

According to the talent leaders, the webs are making "healthy profits" in tele while a great many performers are finding it "rough going," particularly since the trend to vidpix. "The contract won in 1950 by TVA, which some network spokesman said 'will kill us,' hardly raised production costs when compared with the increase in time rates and other production expenses," an AFTRA exec said. "All it did was bring some stability into a chaotic situation. Now we have to take care of the performers' interests."

The network freelance scripters code in TV, due for inking by the Authors League of America on Oct. 16, does about what the '50 TVA pact does—i.e., stabilize industry practices and pay scales. Minimums established are about par for the course, with some bigger shows now paying above the ALA scale and some less pretentious layouts shelling out less.

Significantly, internal bickering in the ALA has simmered down, with ALA and Screen Writers Guild presenting a united front and Radio Writers Guild having concluded that it can't powder the League because of its jurisdictional peeves. Reduction of inter-union friction has strengthened SWG's hand in its battle with the vidpic producers.

Directors have just wrapped up their negotiations with the skeins. Radio-Television Directors Guild has never been seriously bothered by a jurisdictional problem, except for a brief threat by the Screen Directors Guild, and consequently has been able to devote more of its energies to bettering coin and conditions.

NBC GIVING 'PEEPERS' RIDE ON RADIO, TOO

NBC, which is currently trying to clear time for Ford to resume TV sponsorship of its "Mr. Peepers" snow, is also planning a radio version of the package for a cream nighttime slot. Wally Cox, who broke in the character as a summer sub on TV, will again play the title role on AM, with Fred Coe, who originally created the program, slated to produce.

Show will be one of the few to make the reverse transition—from TV into radio—and will probably be the first summer TV show to rate a regular season slotting in both media. NBC execs cited it as another example of the advantages to be derived from the recent reintegration of its radio and video operations, particularly on the programming side. Specific time slot for the AM version has not been selected.

Production Downbeat Worries Chi; Soap Opera Area May Reverse Trend

Chicago, Oct. 7.

This is the annual period of lament in Windy City radio-TV circles as another cycle gets underway, marked by a further downbeat in network production from this junction.

The tally again this season shows more minuses than pluses, with about the only optimism coming from a handful of web execs, who hint they still have a few big plans in the works that will at least partially stem the tide. But for the immediate future, there's nothing specific on the horizon.

The Chi video casualty list has been lengthened again this year with the departure of the NBC-TV Wayne King show and the failure of ABC-TV's Don McNeill display to make the grade. Both were fairly lush productions even by present stratospheric standards, and added up to a lot of payroll coin for AFTRA and AFM members.

And unless there's a last-minute decision change, WGN-TV's "They Stand Accused" is being dropped by DuMont Oct. 5. The courtroom dramatic series, one of the major local users of thesping talent, has been a fixture since March, 1948. It's demise will leave DuMont's "Down You Go" the only national TV nighttime offering coming out of the Loop, with the exception, of course, of the DuMont and ABC-TV wrestling remotes. WGN-TV's "This Is Music" sustainer is also due for the axe next month.

On Positive Side

On the positive side, there's the tele arrival of Tommy Bartlett's "Welcome Travelers," with Procter & Gamble backing the last quarter-hour of the daily half-hour NBC-TV show. Also there's the continuing success of the same web's "Hawkins Falls" soaper strip, which Lever has been sponsoring around-the-calendar the past 18 months.

It's in this soap opera area that the downbeat trend may be reversed. The Chi NBC execs from veep Harry Kopf on down are convinced that the record being racked up by "Hawkins" can eventually only lead to the berthing of other similar daytimers here. It's known that web program chief Ben Park, who pro-

Author Tallu's Hoked-Up 'Author Meets Critics' As TV Bally for Book

As part of the ballyhoo campaign for her new autobiography, Tallulah Bankhead will devote a segment of her TV debut Saturday night (11) on NBC-TV's "All Star Revue" to a hoked version of "Author Meets the Critics," to be titled "Writer Meets the Critics." Miss Bankhead, of course, will be in the writer's hotseat, with Groucho Marx and Ethel Barrymore, her two guests, as prosecuting and defending critics.

Producer-director Dee Engelbach, incidentally, breathed easier when the N. Y. Giants lost the National League pennant race to the Brooklyn Dodgers, since that meant he would not have to schedule his rehearsals around Miss Bankhead's attendance at World Series games (she's an avid Giant fan). He learned when Marx and Miss Barrymore arrived in N. Y. from the Coast, however, that they're as rabid for baseball as Miss Bankhead. Entire cast, consequently, took time out last week while the Series games were being aired on TV.

Client Interest Perks On NBC-TV 'Hometown'

NBC-TV has revived its projected "Hometown" morning show and web salesmen are currently out pitching the property to various agencies and potential clients in a series of luncheon meetings in N.Y. Presentation has already been made to Lever Bros. and to Ruthrauff & Ryan and other major agencies and advertisers will be invited to break bread with the web during the next week or so.

If the show is sold, Ted Mills will produce. Mills is no longer on the NBC-TV staff but is working with the web on "Hometown" planning as a consultant.

Of Cabbages & Kings

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who has signed her name in many places, put her personal signature in a new type of listing this week. She had a date at the Gotham Recording Co.'s studios after hours to cut some spots for Gov. Adlai Stevenson. Night elevator operator, however, refused to allow her in the building unless she signed in on his after-hours book.

Gotham execs spotted the signature and lifted it from the list to frame it for their office walls. Signature rests between those of the window-washers and floor-waxers.

Kintner's 'We'll Show 'Em' Stirs Coast Rivalry

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

ABC served notice on the six other TV stations in town, especially the network outlets, that it can be counted in on any high level competition. Prexy Robert Kintner left an unmistakable impression before returning to N. Y. that the net's KECA-TV would here on in be in the thick of the fight for better programming and higher ratings.

Just in case the others might have thought he was merely sounding off, he made immediately available for the station a revolving fund of $250,000. And if a more autonomous operation will help, the station can have that, too. Kintner asked only two things: more qualitative programming and a greater volume of shows from here for the network.

Kintner made it plain to the local operating heads that the Hollywood segment of the skein should contribute more in the way of programs to the net. After all, he reminded them, ABC has 30% of his capital investment centered in Hollywood and Frisco. That almost doubles the other networks' far west stake in radio and television.

In proof of his ambitious plans for KECA-TV and the parent chain, Kintner passed most of a day with Abe Lastfogel of the William Morris agency to get his full list of availables, cost notwithstanding. It is known he's interested in Danny Kaye and Betty Hutton, which would indicate the calibre of talent he is after. This is in line with his commitment to the FCC that he would meet CBS and NBC on their own level in the quality of programs and talent when and if the merger with United Paramount Theatres is finalized.

Ed Borroff Quitting His Westinghouse Sales Post

Washington, Oct. 7.

E. R. (Ed) Borroff, general sales manager of the five radio and one TV Westinghouse stations, is resigning end of the month. He is being dickered with by some TV stations for management-operations posts.

Borroff went to Westinghouse in an overall management post two years ago, but the post was dropped by the new management. He had an interest in KPHO, Phoenix, since 1941 and in KPHO-TV, but sold out in 1950 when he switched to Westinghouse. He had previously been associated with Westinghouse back in 1922.

In 1930, Borroff was with Niles Trammell's NBC setup in Chi, until the Red and Blue networks were separated. He then became a v.p. of the Blue skein in charge of the central division and WENR. Later he set up a station representative outfit with O. L. (Ted) Taylor, tagged Taylor-Borroff, but turned it back to Taylor about three years ago to go with KPHO-TV.

2-City Network

WFIL-TV, Philly, and WOR-TV, N.Y., have made an unusual tieup whereby both stations will be offered to bankrollers with the outlets paying the cable costs.

The two-city "network," the stations claim, will hit almost 25% of the nation's telesets.

WCAU's Alltime Billings Windfall

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

Third consecutive year of record-breaking radio business at WCAU was seen here, as sales manager Jack deRussy reported substantial increase in fall billings over same period in 1951, WCAU's peak year.

Local sales at start of fall jumped 28% above last year's figures, with national billings showing an 8% hike. Two combined produced an increase of 16% over 1951 fall sales and should push total business to alltime high this year, deRussy declared.

New and renewed business brought into WCAU during the period covered by deRussy's report call for more than 5,000 spot announcements and participations over 800 individual program periods. DeRussy saw in the rise indications of a decided swing back to radio programming on part of both local and national advertisers.

Heading up list of new program contracts and renewals include cross-the-board strips for Soilax, Pertussin, Bache & Co., and Jacob Reed, Sons; three stanzas per week for Wheatena, Serutan, Sinclair Refining, Dolcin and Dodge Metropolitan Philadelphia dealers, and a twice-weekly buy for Wise Potato Chips.

Philco Distributors of Phila., and Mort Farr, dealer, bought co-sponsorship of the Penn Football schedule, and Yellow Cab renewed its twice-weekly show.

Mutual's Aft. Revamp

Mutual is revamping its afternoon woman's block and is extending its service in the 4-5 p.m. segment. Web is inserting the "Jack Kirkwood Show" in the 4 p.m. slot and "Lucky U Ranch" at 4:30, starting Monday (13). Both are Coast originations.

Kirkwood airer will spot two comédiennes, Lillian Lee and Lee Albert. "Lucky U" quondam ABC stanza, is a Ray R. Morgan package and features thrush Betty Taylor, the Sons of the Pioneers and contests in which an acre of land is given away every day.

CBS-TV Rating Jackpot

Trio of new CBS-TV shows got off to a fast start over the weekend, beating their opposition on the rival NBC video web by heavy majorities, according to special ratings taken for the web by Trendex. CBS shows are "My Friend Irma," which resumed Friday night (3) and "Our Miss Brooks," which made its TV bow the same night, and the Jack Benny show, which bowed in Sunday night (5).

Trendex, which measures audiences only in 10 cities with three or more stations, which is claimed to give an authentic "popularity" rating, also showed CBS' new Jackie Gleason show to be climbing steadily. Aired Saturday nights opposite NBC-TV's "All Star Revue," "Gleason kicked off with a 14.2 three weeks ago, against the 28.3 copped by Jimmy Durante as "All Star" topper. Following week Gleason had a 17.9, against the 19.4 racked up by Martha Raye on "All Star," while last Saturday night Gleason drew a 21.5, only a shade off the 22.7 snared by the array of stars NBC used on the show to kick off its new Burbank (Calif.) studios.

On the other CBS entries, "Irma" drew a 30.6, compared with the 9.5 of NBC's "Gulf Playhouse," which was preeming that night. "Brooks" had a 30.6, compared with the 8.0 drawn by "Aldrich Family" on NBC. Benny smothered NBC's "Doc Corkle," which also preemed Sunday night, snaring a 33.5, compared with the 7.5 for "Corkle."

'Going—Going—G - -'

ABC's N.Y. video flagship, WJZ-TV, in what's believed to be the first time on record, made an on-the-air pitch for a sponsor to pick up the tab on one of its shows last Thursday night (2). Show is the new March of Time vidfilm series. At the spot where the commercial is usually inserted, Taylor Grant of the station's new staff came on camera to tell viewers they were about to see "the most unusual commercial of your life." He said that "it's addressed to only one of you—the one who will sponsor it."

Grant then put in a hefty pitch for MOT and its previous vidfilm package, "Crusade In Europe," complete with its rating history. Declaring the new series could attract even larger audiences, he listed its price as $2,300 per week plus time charges. "Think about it," he said. "Take your time. Take all night (there is no way our salesman can reach you until tomorrow morning). And I predict you'll sponsor it."

So far no takers.

Chi's 'In Stretch' Formula Major Obstacle on AFTRA Gabber Pact

Chicago, Oct. 7.

AFTRA's demands that the so-called in-stretch commercial unit system prevailing here for staff announcer be abolished is expected to be one of the major stumbling blocks in negotiations currently under way on a new gabber pact between the union and the Chi network stations. Present contracts expire Oct. 31.

Negotiations are being conducted jointly with the web-owned and affiliated stations. However, indie WGN has notified the American Federation of Television Radio Artists it wishes to do singleton bargaining.

Under the present pact, Chi staffers earn a base salary of $135 weekly and via the in-stretch formula they must work a maximum of 12 quarter-hours of sponsored shows or the equivalent for which no additional commercial fees are paid. New York spielers, except at WOR-Mutual, are currently working under a contract that gives them a weekly base stipend of $115 but all commercial activities earn the extra fees.

With the union asking a boost in weekly pay from $135 to $150, and with the elimination of the in-stretch clause, the new demands could more than double an announcer's minimum earnings. If commercial fees are paid for the 12 quarter-hours currently figured as stretch duty, it would cost the stations an additional $130.80, or $280.80 with the upped weekly scale.

Health, Welfare Issues

Another likely hurdle is AFTRA's request, here and elsewhere, for a company-financed health and welfare program. Union is asking that the parent companies pay the full tab on the most favorable h&w plan now in effect at each firm.

Prolonged wrangling is also expected over the issue of gabber exclusivity, with the union proposing that stations insisting upon exclusive work must pay the announcer one and a half time the base rate—or $225, plus fees for each commercial. Proposal also includes a kicker to the effect that the special "exclusive" rate shall remain in effect at least 15 consecutive weeks and shall continue

Evans to Hawaii

Salt Lake City, Oct. 7.

C. Richard Evans, v.p. and gen. mgr. of KSL and KSL-TV, will be leaving this town after 25 years in the local picture, to take over in the same capacity for Hawaiian Broadcasting System, Ltd., in Honolulu. Hawaiian operates KGMB, and has been granted a video construction permit by the FCC.

Evans was the first president of the Utah Broadcasters Assn., and past president of the Utah Society of Professional Engineers.

FCC Okays 5 More Video Channels; New Hearings On

Washington, Oct. 7.

Five more applicants got the greenlight last week to go ahead and construct television stations, in FCC actions. There was no competition for the channels.

At Asbury Park, N. J., theatre interests got another foot in the door of video when the Atlantic Video Corp. received a construction permit. President of the Corporation is Walter Reade, Jr., president of the New York and New Jersey film theatre circuit. He will be president of the new television station and own 49% of the stock. Another 49% is held by Edwin Gage, who will be vice-president and secretary. Gage is associated with the Reade Theatres. Station will have 50 kw power and will operate in ultra high channel 58.

At Saginaw, Mich., the Lake Huron Broadcasting Corp. was approved to operate a 1 kw station on Channel 57.

At Wilkes-Barre, Louis G. Baltimore received a construction permit for Channel 28. Estimated cost of the station is $438,572, with annual operating expense estimated at $340,000.

Also at Wilkes-Barre, Channel 34 was given to Wyoming Valley Broadcasting Co. Estimated cost of the transmitter is put at $397,500, and the yearly operating cost at $250,000. Officers of the new company and their stock holdings will be Dr. Isaiah C. Morgan, president, 12½%; Harold T. Gray, vice-president, 12½%; Roy E. Morgan, 12½%; Mitchell Jenkins,

Philly WPTZ's 125G Local Billings Windfall

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

WPTZ has signed 12 advertisers for new locally sponsored TV programs whose time billings alone total in excess of $125,000. The accounts are exclusive of existing contracts on the station, according to commercial manager Alexander W. Dannenbaum, Jr.

Dannenbaum reported increased activity in all time segments and predicted sock fall-winter business at WPTZ. He said early morning participation programs, such as the local news programs of the 7 to 9 a.m. "Today" show and the 9 to 10 a.m. "Let Skinner Do It" program are moving well, and that business in the late evening movie participation has reached an alltime high.

ABC Sets Track Record In Pacting of Vitamin For Pre-WW TV Slot

What may have been a track record for contacting, contracting and getting a tele sponsor on the air was set Friday afternoon (3) when ABC-TV national sales director Edwin S. Friendly, Jr., inked Vitamin Corp. of America for a 15-minute show that preemed Sunday (5).

Friendly hopped to Newark, N. J. late Friday afternoon to peddle the quarter-hour in front of Walter Winchell's telecast, which started Sunday (5) at 6:45 p.m. VCA made a fast decision and picked up the tab, with "Diamond Jubilee," a new sustainer starring Jimmy Blaine as emcee and spotting recording artists (Mills Bros. were on the initialer), suddenly finding itself sponsored. VCA will eventually put another package in the 6:30 slot.

Show was fed live to all stations carrying Winchell, although web doesn't know yet how many were able to pick it up. Like WW, "Jubilee" was hot-kinnied, with the playback following, rather than preceding, Winchell. Agency is Kastor, Farrell, Chesley & Clifford.

RADIO GETS A BELATED HOTFOOT

The Long TV Pull

Hubbell Robinson, Jr., CBS-TV programming chief, has been on the Coast for a week of huddles with Harry Ackerman, the web's Hollywood video boss. One of the major items on the agenda is the 1953-54 TV season.

Such long range thinking and planning, with almost a year's span between blueprint stage and actuality, is something new in the sphere of broadcasting. In radio, summer replacements didn't even get consideration until April or May. Fall schedules were tackled once the summer shows were set.

But TV shows come expensive these days, requiring painstaking planning so that they're done right. Casting has become a formidable problem. It's not only a case of what they sound like (as in AM) but what they look like. Similarly, there are fixed selling seasons and starting dates. If there's a hole in the schedule, the TV webs need a backlog of properties (preferably their own) that are ready to go.

Robinson and Ackerman have a flock of potential properties to kick around, some for next fall consideration, others for the summer, and still others to keep in abeyance in case of more imminent casualties this season. Two, especially, look encouraging at the moment in a further evolvement of the Robinson-Ackerman situation comedy concept that's paid off handsomely thus far. These are "Vanity and Mrs. Fair," scripted by Frank Galen, and a video adaptation of the "My Favorite Husband" radio series in which Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz starred a few seasons back. Latter now lead off the TV Nielsen parade with "I Love Lucy."

Chi at Fever Pitch on ABC Exec Switches When & If UPT Merges

Chicago, Oct. 7.

One of the most unusual games of musical chairs in the annals of Chicago broadcasting has been developing the last several weeks around the expected managerial changes that will accrue at ABC here, when and if the network's take-over by United Paramount Theatres is consummated. At times the situation has assumed cloak and dagger proportions.

The Windy City picture has become the focal point of attention because it's the one point where the web and the theatre circuit face direct problems of accommodation of two established video station staffs—one owned by the theatre interest and one owned by the network.

Speculation was heightened further by the recent visit of ABC prez Robert Kintner at the Chi ABC headquarters, where he briefed the WENR and WENR-TV staffs on the expected changes in managerial personalities. The Kintner stopover followed by a couple of weeks a hush-hush "orientation" tour through the WBKB plant by UPT prexy Leonard Goldenson. Theatre topper, it's understood, put his stamp of approval on a new chain of command for the combined operation.

Under terms of the wedding, now awaiting the anticipated blessings of the FCC, WBKB, owned by the Balaban & Katz theatre chain, which is a branch of UPT, checks

Set Top Stars For Blood Donor Show

NBC and CBS are combining forces for what's expected to be one of the biggest benefit shows in broadcast annals Sunday (12) in a pitch for Red Cross blood donors. Show, to be simulcast on the radio and TV nets of both CBS and NBC, will also be carried on the ABC and Mutual radio nets, airing from 3 to 3:30 p.m.

With CBS-TV's Franklin Heller producing, the show will be emceed by Arthur Godfrey. Heller described the format as variety with a human interest angle. CBS and NBC are currently lining up their top talent for the shindig, with Ezio Pinza the only one set yet in addition to Godfrey. Archie Bleyer's orch will provide the musical accomp. David Rich, who directs Godfrey's "Talent Scouts," will rein the show.

Under Television Authority rules, the talent must be paid at least the TVA minimum for the production. It's expected, however, that most of the performers will follow the usual procedure in such cases by kicking back their fees to the Red Cross.

Smellovision

Following is a letter addressed to the Chanel No. 5 perfume outfit in N. Y. and delivered by mistake to the DuMont network's Channel 5:

"Dear Sirs:

"Recently my two sons returned from spending two weeks in St. Petersburg. They brought with them four bottles of Chanel No. 5 (they thought they paid $7 something or other) for me, a girl-friend and their grandmothers. One of the grandmother's was absolutely dry (sic)—no perfume. The bottle is still sealed, but no perfume.

"They've forgotten the name of the store where it was purchased so I am writing to you. Could you help me in some way to have this replaced? We all love the scent so much.

"Very truly yours."

Longines' 400G Symphonette Biz For NBC's O&O's

Longines-Wittnauer Watch Co. has just tossed a $400,000 billings windfall into the laps of the NBC owned-and-operated radio stations in New York, Washington, Chicago, Cleveland and San Francisco.

Watch company has negotiated for cross-the-board slotting of its "Symphonette" program, in a half-hour format with Michel Piastro conducting. Transcribed series, sold on a spot basis, is exclusive of the Sunday CBS Radio network full hour of Longines-Wittnauer programming featuring both the Symphonette and the Choraliers in separate 30-minute shows.

The 400G added splurge for the '52-'53 season is an expansion of the client's previous excursions into the spot field. A few years back it was placed variously on the ABC and Mutual stations and other key outlets throughout the country.

Longines' Holiday Spreads

In the first deals for those full-scale holiday extravagazas staged each year on radio or TV, the CBS video web this week pacted with Longines-Wittnauer for its 5 to 6 p.m. slot on both Thanksgiving Day (Nov. 27) and Christmas Day. As in previous years, the two shows will feature both the Longine Choraliers and Symphonette, plus guest artists.

CBS will not be forced to preempt any regularly-scheduled sponsors for either of the two dates. Victor Bennett agency handles the L-W account.

BIG BIZ BACK VIA NEW RATES

Radio never had it so good—at least not since the days when the AM fraternity owned up to the facts of TV life and were willing to accept the new dollars and sense values.

Encompassed within the span of the past 10 days have been some of the most heartening signs to bolster the egos and the pocketbooks of the network radio clan. Down for the count of nine, radio in one fell swoop appears to have regained its equilibrium and is slugging away with a fresh vitality and interest.

The signing of the Lever Bros. $2,000,000 deal for Bob Hope sponsorship both on daytime and nighttime radio on NBC; the willingness of Willys-Overland Motor Co. to plunk down $1,000,000 for a longhair radio program via weekly pickup of the Sunday afternoon New York Philharmonic-Symphony concerts on CBS; the expansion of their radio network programming rosters by such major clients as Lucky Strike and Camel with their sponsorship of Horace Heidt and the new John Henry Faulk show—here is abundant evidence of the advertisers' faith not only in radio as a still-alive-and-kicking medium but in the ability of its administrators to repattern and restructure to give radio a sound economic framework.

The Hope deal is significant from several aspects. It restores the Jell-O Division of General Foods to its onetime sphere of importance in radio advertising, after a long and ominous period of silence. It puts the stamp on the recognition of daytime radio's new stature in the scheme of advertising. But above all, it brings back into radio the kind of coin that hasn't been around for three or four years. Not even in its heyday has network radio parlayed a personality into a $2,000,000 non-cancellable deal, as in the case of the Hope-General Foods contract.

On an even broader pattern, both CBS' and NBC's final scorecard on their new rate formulas—with every radio affiliate falling into line in accepting the webs' economic repatterning of the medium—translates itself into an expression of faith not only in the potency of network radio, but in the administrative ability of the Frank Stantons, the Joe McConnells and the other top echelon in wooing fresh coin into AM and reestablishing the medium as a bigtime vehicle in the eyes of the major advertisers.

FCC's Okay on ABC-UPT Merger Seen Despite New Dissenting Beef

Murr-der!

For the past few seasons the "hard to sell" periods on TV have been opposite CBS' Arthur Godfrey and NBC's Milton Berle. A new "menace" has now cropped up, in the eyes of some of the agency folk.

They're now telling their clients: "Don't go against shows that feature TV reviewers."

Major program preemed last week slotted opposite a panel show featuring one of the N. Y. critical fraternity. Although the show generally drew a negative vote, nonetheless the agency and client were wondering just how much the rivalry contributed toward the sheet's pan.

ABC's New Rate Feature Pays Off With Radio Sales

ABC's new discount structure, with its new "vertical contiguity" feature, is credited with bringing in a spate of new business. Old Gold has bought two Sunday evening quarter-hours and Toni has bought an evening half-hour and four daytime quarter-hours.

OG is picking up the 9:15 p.m. Sunday period following Walter Winchell. It will insert a news stanza with a gabber still to be selected. It will also take the "Monday Morning Headlines" show at 6:15 p.m. after Drew Pearson. Latter has shifted back to 6 p.m. after his stint in Winchell's 9 p.m. berth.

Toni has bought 15 minutes of the Don McNeill "Breakfast Club" on Tuesday and Thursday, which sells out the strip. O-Cedar, which has the period on a Monday-Wednesday-Friday basis on a limited network, is expanding to a full lineup. Toni, which was going to drop its backing of "Break the Bank" on Tuesday and Thursday after mid-November, also decided to stay on with the first 15 minutes, as part of its move for a bigger spread in daytime radio. Seaman Bros. is taking the last quarter-hour on those two days.

In the nighttime spectrum, Toni

The 'Deac' Is Dead

By G. W. (Johnny) JOHNSTONE

(The writer, now radio-TV director of the National Assn. of Manufacturers, was NBC's first press relations manager and assistant to Merlin H. (Deac) Aylesworth, the first NBC president, who died last week. He recalls some anecdotes about Aylesworth and the pioneer days of network radio).

The late Tom Beck, president of Crowell-Collier Corp. (Collier's, American Magazine and Woman's Home Companion), was an early enthusiast of network radio advertising. His company sponsored the "Collier's Hour" in 1926 and Beck called upon Aylesworth for his approval of Collier's leasing a Broadway theatre from which the "Collier's Hour" could be broadcast. Aylesworth, with his lightning mind, vetoed the idea but instead leased the roof of the New Amsterdam Theatre on West 42d St., off Times Square, named it NBC's Times Square Theatre studio and permitted the "Collier's Hour" to be broadcast from that point. "You see," said the Deac, "if I permitted all NBC clients to lease theatres for broadcast originations, NBC engineering costs would be insurmountable." Besides, with NBC acquiring the New Amsterdam Roof, scene of many Broadway musicals intime, NBC derived nationwide publicity—which was always first in the Deac's mind!

Private Clippings

The Deac, during the first several years of his NBC presidency, lived in Pelham, a suburb of New York City, and commuted by electric train. Fellow passengers let him sit in silence, for he would dash up to the Pelham station, grab a copy of every newspaper on the stand (New York then had four or five metropolitan morning dailies) and spend his time on the train rushing through the papers, tearing out items of interest with gusto. Arriving at his 711 Fifth Avenue office, he would sweep by me in his outer office (I often got "pneumonia from the breeze") calling for me to follow him in. Then the Deac would unload the clippings from his pockets, sort out those which mentioned NBC by name and ask me (who had two clipping clerks on hand each morning at 8 a.m.) to "match them."

One day I thought I would outsmart the Deac. It was the morning

Washington, Oct. 7.

Despite the opinion handed down last weekend by the Federal Communications Commission Broadcast Bureau that a UPT-ABC merger should not be allowed, general concensus here is that the FCC will wind up giving the nod for the wedding. Decision is expected between Nov. 1 and 15.

Fact that the Broadcast Bureau registered a dissent on the merger was, of course, anticipated. In some quarters, in fact, it was believed that the brief would be even more severe in its language.

Some are of the opinion that, with Robert F. Jones now off the Commission, the FCC approval vote will be unanimous. Jones alone was figured to vote against the UPT-ABC link.

Brief was filed with Leo Resnick, hearing examiner in the combined Par cases, in which it "urged that the transfers be denied." It said the risks of monopoly and reduced competition were too great.

With all the testimony and briefs now in, the hearing examiner must make a decision, which he will then submit to FCC for final okay, modification, or complete reversal. While the FCC action—whatever it should be—may be appealed to the Federal courts, it is unlikely that the courts would accept jurisdiction and override the Commission.

DuMont, also involved in the consolidated hearings, submitted its brief urging thumbs down on the merger. DuMont said such a merger would give the combined company unfair competitive advantages in both telecasting and theatre TV.

On Aug. 1, the Communications Commission directed Resnick to limit consideration of Paramount's fitness to matters no more than three years old. This eliminated most of the anti-trust testimony

Lotsa NBC Radio For Kuklapolitans

"Kukla, Fran & Ollie," originally scheduled to bow in on radio Sunday afternoons for NBC, is now to get a 10-minute afternoon spot five days a week on the web. Program veepee Charles (Bud) Barry explained this week that he thinks the weekday slotting will prove better for building a nationwide radio rep for the Kuklapolitans, and said Burr Tillstrom, star and creator of the show, had agreed with his theory.

Show is to hold down the 2:45 to 2:55 p.m. period cross-the-board, starting originally on NBC's five o&o stations. If the program is successful, Barry hopes to expand it to a full cross-the-board setup, grooming the troupe for a nationwide audience and a sponsor. With Tillstrom handling the voices of his various puppet creations, Fran Allison, of course, will be on hand for some songs, with Jack Fascinato handling the piano accomp, as on TV.

Murray's 'Dance Party' In Shift to DuMont

Arthur Murray's "Dance Party," which has previously been aired on both the ABC and CBS video webs, will hit a third network starting Oct. 19. Dance instructor has pacted for the 10 to 10:30 Sunday night slot on DuMont, via the Ruthrauff & Ryan agency.

Show will have the same format as in its previous tours, with Mrs. Murray hostessing a supposed party at which various guest celebs turn up as entertainers.

OUR MISS BROOKS

With Eve Arden, Jeff Chandler, Jane Morgan, Dick Crenna, Gloria McMillian, Gale Gordon; Wilbur Hatch Orch; announcer, Bob LeMond
Writers: Al Lewis, Joe Quillan, Arthur Alsberg
Producer: Larry Berns
Director: Al Lewis
30 Mins.; Sun., 6:30 p.m.
COLGATE
CBS, from Hollywood
(Ted Bates)

"Our Miss Brooks," a situation comedy which has been riding on CBS Radio and has also been converted to TV, returned to that net Sunday (5) with Eve Arden again in the title role. Followers of this zany show in the past will find that the new edition retains the same general atmosphere—at least the fall inaugural abounded in familiar misadventures.

Trio of scripters for Sunday's installment came up with a lot of contrived stuff about how high-school teacher Miss Brooks disposed of a trailer she jointly owned with her landlady. Upon first thought it would seem that there are only a limited amount of gags about cramped space in a trailer.

But don't underestimate writers Al Lewis, Joe Quillan and Arthur Alsberg. They wrung levity out of unbelievable approaches after having milked conventional ones dry. Per usual, Miss Arden's timing and inflection was firstrate. Solid support was provided by Jane Morgan as the landlady, Jeff Chandler as another teacher, Gale Gordon as the principal plus Dick Crenna and Gloria McMillan as students.

Bankroller Colgate utilizes this airer to puff its Palmolive "chlorophylled" soap, Palmolive Shave Cream and After Shave Lotion. Sample blurb: "Don't be satisfied with a half-day shave—use . . ."etc.

BREADTIME STORIES

With Ralph Kanna
15 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Fri., 5:15 p.m.
FREIHOFER CO.
WRGB, Schenectady
(Goldman, Walter & Kanna)

Artist Ralph Kanna's story program for children, unfolded before a studio audience, has grown in technical, narrative and presentation stature during three years of uninterrupted telecasting. Its advertising and merchandising angles have also been expanded—to a point where the show probably constitutes the solidest selling job of any local origination.

Central character in an animal fantasy is named "Freddie Freihofer," which cues the plugging line. Guest kids spell Kanna in tabbing Freddie, Mr. Bear, Mr. Duck, Mr. Horse and other participants. The former Albany-New Haven radio announcer sketches them on large sheets of paper, torn off as the tale progresses. Some, at least, of the drawings are pre-blocked. However, Kanna demonstrates undeniable sketching skill. He also handles the narration simply but apparently fascinating to tots, with a light, effective touch.

Kanna, sharply dressed, is photogenic. Kids are completely natural, eager and enthusiastic. Camera work is excellent. Program is spotted immediately ahead of "Howdy Doody."

OLIVIA BROWNE SHOW

Producer - director - writer: Miss Browne
15 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 1:45 p.m., Sat., 8:15 a.m.
Participating
WMC, Memphis

Olivia Browne keeps the radio wheels moving at a brisk pace down here in Dixie, and handles her assignment on WMC in a smooth, sparkling manner. Miss Browne definitely has a style in patterning her daily shows to hold her audience during the easy-to-listen, newsy women's program that she spiels.

Although her shows are mainly geared for femme circles, she injects beaucoup of the "he man" atmosphere to gain better than a toe-hold with both sexes as listeners.

This was clearly displayed on show caught (15), when Monte Blue, vet film star, was her guest. Miss Browne's sharp, alert ad libbing with Blue proved a most WMC women's director has a amusing 15-minute stint. The keen knowledge of show biz and brings up many interesting yarns of the show world—especially those she poured out during her interview with Blue. She does a full research job on her many guests, and pens, produces and directs her own shows.

PHIL HARRIS - ALICE FAYE SHOW

With Miss Faye, Harris, Elliot Lewis, Walter Tetley, Janine Roose, Anne Whitfield, Robert North, Sheldon Leonard; Bill Foreman, announcer
Writers: Ray Singer, Dick Chevillet
Directors: Carl Gruener, Frances Purcell
30 Mins., Sun., 8 p.m.
RCA VICTOR
NBC, from Hollywood
(J. Walter Thompson)

After a summer's layoff, Phil Harris and wife Alice Faye are back on NBC with their domestic problems and occasional incidental warblings to please their fans. If there is no sparkling originality in their scripts, there is the warmth of old familiarity, and judged by the studio audience's reaction at Sunday's (5) opener, it rings a bell. Situation comedy format had some cute gags Sunday, but premise was a little too silly to take seriously, even as jest.

Airer had the Harrises returning home from a summer of personal appearances, to find that the friends they'd left in charge had turned the house into a motel—with all sorts of complications. There was seldom pretense to real situations. For one believable jest like Harris forgetting to have the milk deliveries cut off, with the resultant pile-up on the back porch over the the summer, there were many more of the silly variety, like the roomer making gin in the bath-tub.

The song apiece which Miss Faye and Harris worked into the proceedings, if worked in without finesse, at least were pleasant to take, Harris contributing "Happy Man" and Miss Faye, "Somebody Loves Me."

ILGWU CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

With President Harry S. Truman, Bette Davis, George Jessel, Dorian St. George, announcer
Producer: Morris S. Novik
Director: Nat Rudich
15 Mins., Wed., 10:15 p.m.
ABC, transcribed
(Furman, Feiner)

The ILGWU (International Ladies Garment Workers Union) Campaign Committee got on the Stevensoh-for-President bandwagon on Wednesday (1) with the first in its series of 15-minute transcribed shows touting the Dem's presidential candidate. Series will run weekly until the Wednesday before the election and will use for its pitchmen top politicos as well as show biz celebs.

Opening show was a neatly constructed airer which was topped by a high-powered speech by Pres. Truman. It was a briefe, but it hit hard. Session also showed off the serious side of emcee-toastmaster George Jessel. The importance of the election and a Stevenson victory were stressed in dramtaic terms by Jessel. A sock "first" for the ILGWU was the entrance of Bette Davis as a partisan in the political battles. Heretofore, she admitted, she kept her political preference to herself but this election was so vital that she felt she had to come out of political hiding and campaign for the Illinois governor. Her spiel packed a wallop.

With both parties out to get as much radio and tele time as possible, the ILGWU effort is a strong asset for the Stevenson side.

Inside Stuff—Radio

The two weeks before he died, according to the widow of Merlin Hall (Deac) Aylesworth, "his mind was clear, much clearer than it had been since his illness dating back to April which kept him in St. Vincent's Hospital (N.Y.) all the time, and he talked of a lot of things." Mrs. Aylesworth, the former Caroline McInteer, states that, for all his friends—because Deac Aylesworth's lust for the good life undoubtedly contributed to his fatal liver ailment—"he was full of bitterness inside, in the belief that many of his friends in broadcasting, the film industry and in publishing had passed him by."

As pioneer president of NBC, later ditto of RKO and Radio City Music Hall, and publisher of the N. Y. World-Telegram (for Roy Howard), Deac Aylesworth was distinguished for his participation in the three greatest media of mass communication as we know it today—radio, films and press. An over-capacity crowd taxed the Campbell's Funeral Chapel at his services last Friday (3) morning, attended by such industry toppers as David Sarnoff, Bill Paley, Spyros Skouras and Ned Depinet.

Daytime holdup of NBC's homeoffice cashier's booth Friday (3), which netted the stickup men $4,000, has led, of course, to the usual strings of gags within the trade.

With police reporting the trio of robbers were well-dressed men wearing dark glasses, majority of the would-be jokesters claimed they were agency men with a beef of some kind against the network. Also in the running, of course, were numerous suggestions that NBC turn the case over to one of its numerous private-eye characters, such as Martin Kane or Barrie Craig.

A. Frank Reel, national executive secretary of AFRA, will accept the post of New York local executive secretary of the merged American Federation of Television & Radio Artists at the union's board meeting today (Wed.).

George Heller, Television Authority topper, is taking the post of AFTRA's national executive secretary, which made it necessary for Reel to switch. Local board last week passed a resolution urging that Reel stay with the union in the N. Y. spot. He'll retain his present salary as head of probably the biggest single local in the show biz talent field. N. Y. local will probably have over 50% of the total membership of AFTRA.

AFTRA has appointed Jaffe & Jaffe as its counsel.

Lowell Thomas has waxed a 14-minute special stanza on "What Every Voter Should Know" which CBS is sending cuffo to its affiliates. Newscaster, introed by Nelson Case, describes background and mechanics of a Presidential election and urges citizens to participate in the "get out the vote" campaign.

Thomas' sponsor, Procter & Gamble, the Compton agency and CBS Radio helped wrap up the public service show.

Radio, Newsreel & TV Working Press Assn. of N. Y. will kick off a new program showing newsmen how their confreres in the other media work. At the Oct. 14 evening meeting, which will be held in the Warner-Pathe offices, members will tour the newsreel outfit's facilities, see examples of its films, eye special cameras and new equipment.

Meetings are being rotated among the various shops which have members in the organization. Arnold Lerner, of W-P, is in charge of the special program.

Press group, open only to reporters, cameramen and engineers who work at the source of the news, is serving as voice of the AM-TV-newsreel legmen. Temporary prez is Chester F. X. Burger, of CBS-TV.

As a public service toward the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra's annual drive for funds, WCCO in that city will present for 90 minutes on Oct. 12 a special "Salute to Minneapolis" by the Italian Symphony orchestra on the occasion of the 15th annual Music Festival at Florence, Italy. The "salute" will take the form of a full length recording of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" by the Italian orchestra which recorded it in the Piazza SS Annunziata, Florence.

"The tape is actually a 'thank-you' from the Italian city in response to a program dedicated to Florence last year by the Minneapolis orchestra," explains station manager Larry Haeg. "A tape recording of the latter was sent to Italy and was played on the Italian network."

---

Charlie Chaplin's musical compositions will be played for the first time on the air on WQXR's "Music Magazine" tomorrow (Thurs.) at 9:05-10 p.m. The N. Y. indie is dubbing the soundtracks from "Modern Times," "City Lights" and his latest pic, "Limelight," from reels provided by United Artists.

Arrangements were made by WQXR emcee-producer Fred Grunfeld and UA flack Leon Roth.

(Ted Bates)

With Walter Winchell back on the air, Drew Pearson, who had held down WW's 9 p.m. Sunday slot, returned to his 6 p.m. berth Sunday (5). It was his usual air-column, consisting of short, terse items—on the national and international scenes. In contrast to WW, who rapped the D.C. administration, Pearson fired his salvoes at Nixon and Eisenhower. He commented on the meeting between McCarthy and Ike after which the GOP Presidential candidate supposedly revised his Wisconsin talk. Syndicated columnist also leveled a blast at Nixon's fund.

In his crystal-balling segment (his predictions are announced as 85% accurate), Pearson said that the Soviet Ambassador to Washington would be asked to leave. That although his polls show Ike ahead in popularity on a national basis, several key Southern states would remain in the Democratic column; and that the courts would order Los Angeles officials to go ahead with a housing project or face contempt charges.

Gabber charged that the press is "blacking out" some pro-Administration stories, and cited an L. A. daily for not carrying a Truman speech and dropping two columns by Walter Lippmann. Because of the "blackout," he declared, he'd do his best to bring buried stories to his listeners. What be came up with was interesting, although not earth-shaking. It was breezily delivered, with an aura of coming from confidential sources. Carter Products plugs its Rise shave cream, Arrid and Liver Pills.

STEVE ALLEN
With Louis Armstrong, Velma Middleton, Johnny Johnston, Johnny Mercer, Kay Armen, Hal Simms, Jerry Shard Trio
Producer-director: Al Span
60 Mins., Sat., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from N. Y.

Steve Allen has devised an informal Saturday night set of transcribed proceedings which should attract a good quota of listeners, Allen has had so many shows on both radio and tele as to have attracted what could be a permanent clientele. As in his other programs, he's the mainstay of the session, and as Allen goes so goes the show.

On opening night of this stanza, an entertaining show was taped. Allen was in top form. The lines flew around nicely. He attained a fine air of informality and with aid of some good guests hit it off extremely well.

The guest retinue included a taped shot of Louis Armstrong and Velma Middleton. The Satchmo is one of the most ingratiating performers around. He's one of those staples that gain strength with the years, and he's reached the stage where his followers will take anything he has to offer.

Others in the guest lineup included Johnny Johnston, Johnny Mercer and Kay Armen, all of whom made for some bright spots. Allen his some bright lines in his interviews. At times it sounded as though his subjects might have been plants, but no matter, the verbiage was funny.

PRUDENCE PENNY SHOW
With Eileen Burr, Jean Myers, Jerry Cole, Others
30 Mins.; Thurs., 1 p.m.
ALBANY TIMES-UNION
WRGB, Schenectady

The Albany Times-Union "Prudence Penny," Eileen Burr, is teaming with Jean Myers, now of the society staff and formerly featured on a department store block over WRGB, and Jerry Coyle, of General Electric Co. station, in the third year of this women's and public service program. Show focuses attention on features which appear in the Hearst paper the next day. It is also used as medium for sale of products. Advertising arrangement with the sponsor does not emerge too clearly, although surely handled.

One of the program changes spots Mrs. Myers, who substituted for Mrs. Burr part of last season, as hostess. Intelligent, articulate and well informed, Mr. Myers registers nicely if not spectacularly.

Mrs. Burr, who displays improvement in projectability despite a dryness of speech, prepares tastetempting dishes. Coyle's light, kidding, mildly obtuse manner (about food) lifts the program; he proves it's nice to have a man around.

EDDIE CANTOR SHOW
Producer: Archie Scott
30 Mins.; Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
NBC, from Hollywood

Eddie Cantor's disk jockey stanza returned to NBC's airlanes Thursday (2) after a brief summer respite. Fact that the veteran comic was in the hosp didn't affect his preem, since the stint is taped in advance.

Cantor had an intriguing theme on which to peg his platters: the teaming up of celebs who ordinarily don't wax together. Items were: Bob Hope and Jane Russell tunefully doing "Am I In Love?" from their flick, "Son of Paleface;" Danny Kaye, Jimmy Durante, Groucho Marx and Jane Wyman joining for fun on "Blackstrap Molasses;" Tony Martin and Dinah Shore's sock blending on "The Kissing Song;" and the Bing Crosby-Al Jolson solid duet on "Alexander's Ragtime Band." It was a topdrawer selection, not only easy on the ears but also prodding the imagination.

Cantor intros the sides with anecdota about the artists: quips Durante made at the track, Hope's antics on the Par lot, etc. Some of the yarns were familiar to fans, but for the most part they were interesting sidelights on men (and women) Cantor knows personally He also works in some trailers for NBC radio programs.

Platter spinning sessions, generally speaking, haven't clicked on the webs as they have on indie outlets, but this actually is not a disk jockey program. It is Cantor reminiscing, with the tunes an added fillip.

JUNIOR MISS
With Barbara Whiting, Gale Gordon, Peggy Knudsen, Beverly Wills, Sarah Selby, Myra Marsh, Gil Stratton, Jr.
Writer-director: Hank Garson
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8:30 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from Hollywood

"Junior Miss," a longterm extension of the Sally Benson characters, is back on CBS after a two-year hiatus and in a new cream time that aims at a wider audience which it should get in a hurry. It had previously been sponsor-berthed on Saturday mornings, when its appeal was largely teenager.

In making the transition, the initialer seemed to tip off an approach that takes some of the accent from the title role and spreads the situations around to give the program a wider base. With Barbara Whiting again in the name position, show is further plussed by an intact cast, all of whom perform their chores with obvious zest, to raise the laugh meter on the skillfully wrought Hank Garson script. Garson doubles on direction with a fine sense of pace and timing in exploiting every possible facet of the goings-on in the Graves family. And the goings-on in this taped tapestry of family life are plenty, the bow show encompassing the trials and tribulations anent an age of telephones, radio, TV and refrigerators. Father Graves was the butt of most of the laff-laden framework. and he supplied a nice quota of chuckles himself. Score one up for "Junior Miss" on its welcome return.

SEARCH THAT NEVER ENDS
(The Naked Heart)
With Ralph Bell, Vicki Vola, Luis Van Rooten, Arnold Robertson; Jackson Beck, narrator
Producer-director: Sherman H. Dryer
Writers: Judith & David Bublick
25 Mins., Tues., 9:05 p.m.
MBS, from New York

Sherman H. Dryer, who was kudosed in the past for his documentary airers, "Exploring the Unknown," has another meritorius series in "The Search That Never Ends." Dramas slotted for the current Dryer run will cover the latest in medical achievements, as well as health, community and economic problems confronting the public today. It's a wide scope, but Dryer has demonstrated that his documentary pattern can blend entertainment and educational values for clicko impact.

Series teed off Tuesday (30) with "The Naked Heart," scripted by Judith and David Bublick. Yarn dealt with the development of heart x-ray technique and although, at times, it skidded over technical terms, making it difficult for the layman to savvy, the drama was well constructed and held the dialer's ear throughout.

Dryer, who's at the production-direction helm, kept the show at an even keel and got top performances out of the slick cast, headed by Ralph Bell, Vicki Vola, Luis Van Rooten and Arnold Robertson. Separate scenes were knit together by Jackson Beck's deft narrative chore.

MEET CORLISS ARCHER
With Janet Waldo, Irene Tedrow, Fred Shields, Sam Edwards; John Hiestand, announcer; Felix Mills Orch
Producer: Harfield Weedin
Director: Harry Kronman
Writer: Jery Adelman
30 Mins.; Fri., 9:30 p.m.
ELECTRIC LIGHT COS.
ABC, from Hollywood
(N. W. Ayer)

"Meet Corliss Archer" returned to ABC, after its 13-week hiatus, in a new slot, Friday at 9:30 p.m. Following "Ozzie and Harriet," the Jim Saphier package (based on F. Hugh Herbert's characters) should do extremely well, since both shows will form a block of topflight situation slanted for the family trade.

Kickoff edition Friday (3) found the Archers back from their summer vacation, with teen-age Corliss much taken by a wealthy girl she had met. Rich kid put in another appearance while traveling from her mother in the east to her divorced father on the Coast. In order to impress her friend, Corliss banished her boyfriend Dexter from the premises and tried to get her parents to put on the dog. The broadcast ended, of course, with Corliss learning that "money isn't everything" and that a happy home and a devoted beau count for more. Situation was nicely handled, with Mrs. Archer saying that she wouldn't punish her daughter but would let her punish herself.

Some of the gags didn't get over, particularly in the opening portion, but the overall situation had warm overtones and a pleasing touch. Cast, which has worked together for a long stretch, does well. It includes Janet Waldo as Corliss, Irene Tedrow and Fred Shields as her folks and Sam Edwards as Dexter (in the preem effort the latter was less scatterbrained than in past seasons). Commercials, per usual, plug the "business-managed, privately-owned" light and power companies. There are local cut-ins for the regional utilities picking up the tab.

U.N.—ON THE RECORD
Producer: Helen J. Sioussat
15 Mins.; Sat., 6:15 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from New York

Produced for CBS Radio by the United Nations Radio Division, "U.N.—On the Record" returned to the air Saturday (4) to start its fifth season of news about the United Nations and notables associated with the organization Saturday's transcribed kickoff was a quiet quarter-hour since the script merely set the stage for the opening of the U.N. General Assembly next Tuesday (14).

Basic principles and objectives of the U.N. were recalled by recorded excerpts from addresses by such international leaders as Britain's former Prime Minister Clement Attlee, Russia's Andre Vishinsky, America's Gen. Marshall and France's Robert Schumann, among others.

A more contemporary note was sounded via a description of the new U.N. General Assembly Bldg. in midtown New York. Just how the new meeting hall came into being was explained by architect Wallace K. Harrison. Withal, this initial stanza in the new "U.N.—On the Record" series represented a good wrapup of the situation on the eve of the General Assembly's resumption.

Radio Follow-Up

Bob Hope cleverly trailerized his pic, "Son of Paleface," and his supporting appearance at the Paramount, New York, Oct. 1, and whetted curiosity for his NBC television dates on behalf of Colgate and his daytime NBC radio "hustling" for Jello, midst gales of laughter on Arthur Godfrey's show via CBS the same morning.

Hope machine-gunned guffaws from Godfrey, the latter's cast and the studio audience, as he commented on his recent trip to England and Scotland, Bing Crosby, "Paleface" and the new season's radio-TV schedule. Some of the gags had been worked on and other quips sounded as though ad libbed. but the all-over routine was fast and funny.

After Hope left, Godfrey commented on "the screwball's" lightning fast brain, adding, "He is a great guy and a wonderful entertainer.

THE RAILROAD HOUR
With Gordon MacRae, Dorothy Kirsten; Carmen Dragon orch; Norman Luboff, choral conductor; Marvin Miller, announcer
Producer: Murray Bolen
Writers: Jerry Lawrence, Robert E. Lee
30 Mins.; Mon., 8 p.m.
ASSN. OF AMERICAN RAILROADS
NBC, from Hollywood
(Benton & Bowles)

NBC's "Railroad Hour" launched its fifth successive year Monday night (6) with every indication that the show will prove as successful as it has in previous seasons. With Gordon MacRae as permanent star, emphasis is again to be on light opera and operettas and, despite the inability to inject much story matter into the half-hour condensations, the music involved in such productions is easily enough to keep listeners happy.

On the new season's preem, MacRae teamed with Dorothy Kirsten to give a fine going-over to the tunes from Sigmund Romberg's "Maytime." With seven songs delivered by the duo during the show, scripters Jerry Lawrence and Robert E. Lee had little chance to build much of a story but managed to follow the book of the original show closely enough to build an okay background for the tunes. Finale, with the grandchildren of the two stars supposedly digging up their buried jewel cask, failed to come off but it was the only weak spot in an otherwise enjoyable production.

MacRae and Miss Kirsten were both in fine voice, teaming solidly on such near-classics as "Sweetheart," "Will You Remember," etc. They were more than adequate in whatever straight thesping was required. Chorus, under the direction of Norman Luboff, backed them competently and Carmen Dragon, conducting the orch, provided excellent musical backing. Show clicked off smoothly under the production aegis of Murray Bolen.

Plugs for the Assn. of American Railroads, delivered straightforwardly by announcer Marvin Miller, pointed up the service aspects of the various rail organizations.

INVITATION TO LEARNING
(War and Peace)
With Dr. Lyman Bryson; Margaret Webster, Andre Mikolopoulos, guests
Producer: Dr. George Crothers
25 Mins.: Sun., 11:35 a.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from N. Y.

New 13-week series on CBS' "Invitation to Learning," which preemed Sunday (5), will comprise a discussion of the great books in literature on the subject of war and peace, under that title. This is a weighty subject, but Sunday's (5) preem started off happily on a light note, in a discussion of a play instead of a book, Aristophanes' "Lysistrata."

It was a charming program, in a literate, amusing half-hour of interesting talk by a couple of witty, informed people. Guests were actress-director Margaret Webster and Greek scholar Andre Mikolopoulos. Latter was particularly impressive, carrying major share of the conversational ball, for an illuminating session. Dr. Lyman Bryson, associated with the airer since its inception in 1940, was a modest, effacing chairman.

Talk discussed the 2,360-year-old "Lysistrata" not only as an antiwar treatise, but as the amusing social comedy it also was. Thought was expressed that you can't make a joke out of war, especially when your country's losing, and that most attempts to laugh war out of existence have failed. That didn't minimize the importance of the play, which has managed to survive these many years and still be staged.

The social comedy side—the angle about femmes denying themselves to their men until the latter foreswore war—got most of the discussion. Miss Webster thought the primitive joke went on too long, and that was why the play bored her. Mikolopoulos, on the other hand, warmly defended the play on that score. Obscenity to others was normal biological fun to him. In its original Greek, he said, the play has direct descriptions of amorous fun that he finds in good taste, and that were inoffensive to ancient Greeks, but are frowned on now due to modern puritanical attitudes.

Refreshing, literate talk made for a stimulating half-hour of discussion, to spark the new series to a fine start.

HERE'S MORGAN
With Henry Morgan, guests
Director: Jerry Fritz
180 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Sun., midnite
Participating
WMGM, New York

In a radio career that dates back prewar—interlarded with quondam TV tactics—Henry Morgan has bounced back into focus time and again after many a skirmish on the ramparts. If his special attitude on (1) the numerous sponsors he has magnetized and (2) the world at large has put him into aqua caliente more often than not, at least his witticisms have run good interference for the criticisms.

True, a cancellation or an option not picked up, as per the Morgan history, do not help the exchequer. Apparently this comedical citizen likes his acknowledged status of giant killer, leveler of stuffed shirts, a man who sticks to his torpedoes. He can lash out with a rapier tongue, but always or nearly always with the true jester's objective—chuckles, eyebrow-lifting, upper echelon humor.

The comic is one of the most opinionated pliers of his trade in show biz, with sardonic wit that betimes can mow 'em down. He also can be extremely hearty and engagingly impudent amid the bursting bombs, as witness some of the gab he's exuding on his new Monday-through-Sunday, midnite to 3 a.m. show from Hutton's West 51st St. eatery, under the generic tag of "Here's Morgan." In his longevity niche for the stayer-uppers he has pitted himself against veteran stalwarts Barry Gray (WMCA) and Art Ford's "Milkman's Matinee" (latter on WNEW to 5 a.m.).

Morgan is about as different from that twain as anything that can be imagined. Indication of the first couple of his night hawkings is that he will leave commentating, pontificating and deejaying to them and engage himself largely in carving the roast. On the teeoff (29), for instance, he spun but one record during the first hour, a Margaret Whiting "Blue Boy" pleasantry from Billy Rose's '35 "Jumbo." A tipoff here was Morgan's observation that he intended to play lotsa showtunes.

What gave the opener its tremendous impact was his boffo series of exchanges with guest Fred Allen in 20-odd minutes that rank among the slickest badinage that radio has heard in years and remindful of Morgan's couple of guest shots on Allen's NBC program a few semesters ago. Everything fell into hilarious place in this clickola tandem that encompassed repartee, anecdotage, tall ribbing and articulate pieces of business. Morgan broke it up here and there with bits on his mythical parakeet, Sam, who could almost be seen.

Between times, Morgan got on the phone with the monology stuff, flung out the gauntlet on Stuhmer's Bread (which should popularize that product in a hurry) or threw in some stilettos on the restaurant itself. Though Allen is tough for anyone to follow in the guest lineup, Morgan had another hypo session via Norman Dine, who runs the Sleep Shop at Lewis & Conger. This Dine gent immediately proceeded to wallop over, with Morgan as feeder. Dine thought the program to this point was "sufficiently irritating" to help his firm sell more reclining equipment. He called it "progressive beducation." Morgan never did let Dine play out his teaser on "the bed as a sanctuary." The laughs came frequently for a winning stanza.

Morgan's banter with Peter Donald brought the show to the 1 a.m. mark, when even conscientious reviewers must lay me down. The hour's picture was enough to indicate that Morgan's latest try is way up there on the gabbery lists. He should corral a large quota of savvy night owlers once the word gets around.

DIAL DETECTIVE
With Paul Flanigan
50 Mins.; Mon.-thru Fri., 4:05 p.m.
WTRY, Troy

Catchy title applies to a clever gimmick for spotlighting WTRY local and CBS shows, on a program which is a variation of Paul Flanigan's "Record Man" deejay matinee. He makes three telephone calls on each block to women forwarding numbers, questioning them as to name and/or time of a particular feature. Clues are given where type of show is not tabbed. Winners receive prizes, tieups with merchants.

Femme dialers anxious to hit the jackpot must study program log or listen to air output closely—which is a shrewd way of promoting the WTRY habit. On the last block caught, Flanigan queried about time slots for three daily five-minute weather reports, a feature instituted 48 hours before. A Troy housewife—Schenectady and Duanesburg were also buzzed— came in on the nose.

. . . and awaaaaay

We're off with the strongest schedule in CBS Television history—all the well-established favorites plus some exciting new ones to beat our record of last season: the highest average rating of all the networks.

Limelight personalities—like Jackie Gleason in a new, wonderful, Ziegfeldian setting...

Brilliant translations of great radio successes—like Life with Luigi, Our Miss Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. North...

Newly created shows—like Life With Father and Mother (based on the stories that made Broadway's biggest hit), Leave It To Lester (starring Eddie Albert), The Red Buttons Show, Jane Froman's U.S.A. Canteen.

That kind of programming—combined with the most thorough campaign to build audiences in all television—makes CBS Television a sounder investment than ever before.

As of this month—the first big one of the big season—advertisers are investing 18% more than they did at this time last year, on...

HEAVEN FOR BETSY
With Jack Lemmon and Cynthia Stone
Writer: Russ Beggs
Director: Richard Linkroum
15 Mins., Tues.-Thurs., 7:45 p.m.
Lever Bros.
CBS-TV, from New York
(McCann-Erickson)

Jack Lemmon and Cynthia Stone, who projected themselves as a likable pair on the ill-fated Frances Langford-Don Ameche daytime entry on ABC-TV last year, are now starred in a new twice-weekly quarter-hour evening series for Lever Bros., called "Heaven For Betsy." It's out of the "Claudia" school of light-hearted-youthful-marital comedy designed to showcase the "tiny problems so typical of newly married couples," as the CBS-TV press release has it.

"Tiny" perhaps is the word that best suggests the thinness and fragile quality of the format and content. Oddly enough, "Betsy" betrays some painstaking production, both in the designing and sets, and some skillful direction. It obviously entails a hefty expenditure on the part of the sponsor. But unfortunately it's all dissipated by the flimsiness of the saga of Pete and Betsy Bell of Maple View Park. At the pace achieved in the skimpy vignette (of Pete Bell installing a TV set antenna) as revealed on the second (Thurs.) installment, it'll probably take years to actually cultivate a fondness for Betsy and her spouse.

Certainly within the framework of a 15-minute format, the comedy, the drama (or whatever else one wishes to project), has to be more intense than this. "Betsy" is too content to ride along on its shallow dialog. It has to be yocked up —but plenty. The Lemmons fulfill their obligation toward the show, but there isn't much show to speak of. Rose.

FREE RIDE
With Elaine Sheppard, guests
Producers: Norman Kuhne, Sol Panitz
Director: Carl Degen
30 Mins., Sat., 5 p.m.
Sustaining
WNBW, Washington

This is an interview show with a novel twist and an eye filling emcee. Capitalizing on reputation for color of town's large corps of cab drivers, show features a panel of cabbies, a guest of the day, a current topic of interest, and a taxi motif on sets and language.

General idea of show is a sound one. Concentrating on one topic each week, questions center around cabbie's experience with subject and their opinions. For example, on last week's show, a panel of three vet drivers for town's leading taxi chain swapped anecdotes and got into a heated verbal battle on the relative merits of the World Series contenders. All three vets had played pro baseball in their young days, so had not only the average American's passion for the sport, but unusually extensive backgrounds as well.

Elaine Sheppard, former film player, now married to an Army officer stationed here, makes a fetching, if at times stilted, moderator. Too obviously reading from prepared notes, Miss Sheppard sometimes slows things up. However, this is a mechanical detail that can be ironed out by practice. On the credit side of the Sheppard technique, is her way of deliberately backgrounding herself. She tosses the ball and, unlike many of her male counterparts, she lets her guest team carry it with a minimum of interference from her. As a result, debate tends to have a spontaneous quality.

An interesting sidelight of show caught, for example, was a session of reminiscences of celebs the trio of drivers had carried in their cabs. Teed off by a question on famous baseball fares, discussion trailed off into side lines, and such names as Joe Di Maggio, Anna May Wong, Wallace Beery, and Hedy Lamarr were injected into show. One driver told how Mickey Rooney made a ride from Union Station memorable by standing on the seat and gabbing all the way. Such anecdotes are gravy and add special color and interest to show.

Guest of the day, a standard feature of show, was capital insurance broker Bill Werber, a former Big League player who had competed in the World Series of '39 and '40. His appearance sparked the discussion and lent authenticity to the baseball background.

Camera work is deft, and the Sheppard enunciation and voice is pleasant and clear. Show needs a swifter pace before it can compete for network time, but seems a safe bet for a local sponsor. Lowe.

Gulf is offering a new half-hour dramatic series as replacement for "We The People" in the Friday night at 8:30 slot on NBC-TV. Judging by script on the initialer (3), however, series will need a hypo to lift it out of the routine class.

Opener, "Double By-Line," which could have been a good human interest story about the problems or rivalries of a husband-and-wife newspaper team, proved instead to be a hoked-up farcical melo, with stock characters and situations, and performances to match. Yarn had the marital team as byliners on rival dailies, with the wife constantly scooping hubby on stories, and the latter's managing editor riding him plenty because of it.

The two are domestically very happy, but hubby eventually walks out on wifey when she won't quit her job and save him embarrassment. There are a couple of tearfull barroom scenes, before wifey decides to quit to save her man and her marriage. Then comes the chance for him (with her assist) to capture a noted criminal, which insures his job and gets her back to an old job on the paper with him.

Situations were telegraphed constantly, while the cast played the drama out broadly and hectically, with little attempt to make the characters tick. Dennis O'Keefe was the wide-eyed husband reporter, and Nina Foch his tearful, flighty wife. William Harrigan played the apoplectic managing editor in similar vein. Frank McHugh brought some integrity and warmth to the role of the sympathetic photographer-friend of the family.

Show gave evidence of hurried or careless preparation. Once, when camera had to pan to a clock, a technician's arm reached out hastily to turn the hands to the proper time, but not before viewers got a full look at it. There were a couple of very unflattering closeups of some femmes, too. Bron.

MY FRIEND IRMA

Writers: John Greene, Jay Somers
30 Mins.; Fri., 8:30 p.m.
R. J. REYNOLDS CO.
CBS-TV, from Hollywood
(William Esty)

CBS-TV's new streamlined Television City in Hollywood had a "sneak preview" last Friday night as "My Friend Irma" became the first program to originate from the plant at Beverly and Fairfax, and millions must have been impressed with the slides of what the finished City will look like, as slides preceded "Irma" on the show. Formal opening of Television City is Nov. 15.

As for "Irma," the initialer was disappointing, and didn't measure up to standards set by this Cy Howard creation in the past. Relying on incredible situations for laughs, the show fails to draw more than chuckles, while many of the situations were so far-fetched they didn't even rate polite laughter from the studio audience. Writers John Greene and Jay Sommers didn't do right by Marie Wilson and Cathy Lewis.

Irma becomes interested in reincarnation after a more-than-silly scene in a museum. When her girl friend is in a plane forced down in a storm, Irma immediately figures she's dead, and a cat which has come to her door must be her reincarnated friend, Irma having been told those who passed to the great beyond often come back in feline form. This leads to some rather asinine lines and situations which just don't hit the jackpot. To no one's surprise, the girl friend turns up safe and sound, after all Irma's purring over the cat.

This hodgepodge of unbelievability fails to show Marie Wilson at her best as Irma, nor Cathy Lewis as the g.f. Sid Tomack, Brooks West, Gloria Gordon, and Donald McBride are competent in supporting roles.

Richard Whorf's direction keeps it moving, although he has little to work with script-wise. Producer Nat Perrin missed the mark on this one. Lud Gluskin's music backing satisfactory. Cavalier ciggie commercials are okay. Daku.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

NBC used a stack of aces to open formally its new TV studios in Burbank, Cal., Saturday night (4), in a special "All-Star Revue," but there must have been a joker in the pile. It was a crowded show of names, but the overall result was disappointing. It was a question of teaming too many names without the right elements of programming or production to project them.

A notable example was limiting Jimmy Durante to the finale, in which he recited a brief, meaningless lyric. It was a complete waste of talent. An active Durante would have been a terrif lift and the show's saver at this point. Rosalind Russell as a hostess flounced around and generally deported as if she were undecided whether to be Bea Lillie or Tallulah, but she wound up being recognized anyway.

Red Skelton was on at the beginning in a filmed sequence that was meaningless, and Harpo Marx suffered through two unfunny appearances. Dinah Shore in a pair of song interludes could have been presented with a little more imagination. Her singing merited better staging. Phil Harris resorted to his standard "This Is What I Like About the South," after some old jokes with Milton Berle, who planed out to help in the preem ceremonies.

Of the names on the show it was Berle and George Jessel who came off best, though the latter was allotted too little time. Projecting Jessel and Durante into the spotlight they should have had, along with the brisk pace given the program during Berle's gagging interludes, was exactly what this layout needed, along with special material to do justice to something as obviously important as the opening of NBC's new studios.

As the hostess, Miss Russell sashayed on stage at the opening to cut the ribbon and throw the switch that, for the show's purposes, officially opened the big studio. Miss Russell had a lyric to match the occasion, which she did a little too coyly, with much of the lyric incomprehensible because of her failure to project.

"How does it feel to be next to a great comedian," Berle asked Miss Russell.

"I'll see when Phil Harris gets here," was her retort.

Which gives an idea of the jokes.

Then, too, Berle should have been better informed when he pulled the one about Rita and Aly reconciling. The newsprints the night before told of how they've split again.

Jessel made his first appearance 15 minutes before the final curtain, in a few moments with Miss Russell and then in his familiar telephone bit. He proceeded to show in the couple of minutes that he was on why he can win friends and influence audiences. Even his walkoff had an element of showmanship stamped all over it. He had a four-word message for the audience, but it told much more. "Eddie is much better," he said.

The old vaude bit of the soprano whose gown is sheared to shreds by the comic, while she's intoning her operatics, was one of the Harpo Marx contributions, but the latter failed to do it effectively. It lacked the pace and comedy value that Will Mahoney has given it for years.

Of the supporting people, Nelle Fisher & Jerry Ross, formerly of NBC's "Show of Shows," terped their way effectively through a shoeshop number. Otherwise, the program had the advantage of some showgirl beauts—though the general production seemed like that of a Madison Square Garden benefit. Kahn.

Ed Sullivan observed that "The ASCAP Story" is so full and rich that he plans to do more than the two-parter which finaled this past Sunday over CBS-TV, Prexy Otto Harbach, from the audience, readily acquiesced. Part II had more substance than the kickoff, with Lauritz Melchior doing a Victor Herbert oldie, following the 73-year-old Fritzi Scheff's "Kiss Me Again"; Vaughn Monroe's group vocalized a Vincent Youmans med-

DOUBLE OR NOTHING

CAMPBELL SOUPS
CBS-TV, from N. Y.
(Ward-Wheelock)

Video version of "Double or Nothing," with Bert Parks at the helm, is another example or TV taking up where radio left off. It's the usual supercharged quizzer that's proved marketable on AM, especially during the daytime, and may well entice hausfraus who like their tele fare simple, direct and noisy. That it'll also leave some of the gals cold is the gamble daytime bankrollers have consistently taken down through the years on radio with similar formats and with apparently satisfactory returns.

As unveiled on the preem (6), five contestants are led up to Host Parks and asked questions in various categories. Each time they hit a correct reply, they get the option of shooting the works. Three right answers and they get to sit in for the sweepstakes jackpot. Everyone got by the prelim rounds but missed the final query, with the boodle going over to the next show. Questions were simple, guests no gigglier than usual and Parks was loaded with enthusiasm.

Production was clean on the initialer but with plenty of sponsor identities in evidence. Some of the queries were sight questions, such as showing pix or objects connected with categories.

Both film and live blurbs were used, with Bob Williams doing a good job on the latter. Dave.

SEMINAR
With Prof. Donald N. Bigelow, students
Producers: Erik Barnouw, Jack Pacey, Dorothy Oshlag
Director: Alex Segal
30 Mins.; Sat., 7 p.m.
ABC-TV, from New York

Communications Materials Center of Columbia U. Press and ABC have a public service series which is certain to win critical and educational laurels in "Seminar." Video cameras and mikes are eavesdropping and peeping in on an actual course in American civilization, with the set-owners invited to participate on their own; the syllabus is available and exam papers will be graded gratis.

Importance of the stanza is that it is on the college level, with an integrated theme in studying the contributions made to American thought by figures such as St. Augustine, Calvin, James Madison, Marx and Engels, Freud, de Tocqueville, Hamilton, John Locke, Adam Smith and Harriet Beecher Stowe.

The seminar is conducted at a round table with 11 students kicking around one of the classic books under the guidance of Prof. Donald N. Bigelow. Latter makes a fine moderator, using a Socratic method, drawing out the students' views with sharp questions. He has, at times, a humble approach, putting forth his own opinions on a tentative basis; and at other times tautly tells a participant to avoid a side issue. His flashes of humor spark the gab, as when one femme read at length from Toynbee's "Civilization on Trial," the tome under discussion, and Bigelow quipped, "Are you going to read the whole book?"

The students represented a fair cross-section, including a Negro, a Siamese and an Austrian student and three women. They gave a critical analysis of Toynbee's thesis on the rise and fall of civilizations, stressing his mystical interpretation of history and pointing out that his out-sized collection of "facts" actually was slanted research to bolster his own spiritual hypothesis. Next week's subject, incidentally, will deal with a materialist interpretation of history, the Marx-Engels "Communist Manifesto" — century-old book which relates to the news via the Soviet Communist Party congress.

This proved an informative and stimulating show. However, the pace set by Bigelow was rapid-fire and some of the points may have been lost on viewers who may not have read Toynbee recently, or at all. Eventual expansion of the airer to a full hour might eliminate this need for speed and compression.

"Seminar" was given excellent production with Alex Segal (megger on the late "Celanese Theatre" and a quondam teacher himself) exhibiting a sure touch in the staging and camerawork. Telecast started and wound with a striking overhead shot of the round table. Lensing was effective throughout and switching was on the button. Artwork on the titles and credits was distinguished. All in all, a classroom show with class. Bril.

DONALD O'CONNOR SHOW
(Colgate Comedy Hour)
With Broderick Crawford, Ben Blue, Lisa Kirk, Sid Miller, Andy Clyde, Chester Conklin, Eddie Gribbon; Al Goodman orch

Writers: Sid Kuller, Miller
60 Mins.; Sun. (5), 8 p.m.
COLGATE
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(Sherman & Marquette; Ted Bates)

Lacklustre material placing emphasis on slapstick and contrived routines resulted in a disappointing Donald O'Connor "Comedy Hour" Sunday night (5) via NBC-TV. Only socko production was the finale, reminiscent of the O'Connor who established himself as a video topliner on the same program last year.

Opening hodgepodge had little to recommend it, with a good deal of talent wasted. Opening takeoff on silent pix featured silent screen thesps Andy Clyde, Chester Conklin and Eddie Gribbon. It had some chuckles, but was overlong. Ben Blue picked the pace up with a skit where he played a butler, but this also disintegrated into sheer slapstick, ending with a cake being tossed in a bit player's face. O'Connor and Sid Miller teamed on their song-writing stint to approach the previous standard, turning out neat carbons of pop vocalists, probably the best being the essaying of Marlene Dietrich and Rosemary Clooney dueting "Cut the Mustard" and the Bell Sisters on "Bermuda." Sketch with Broderick Crawford was anemic material-wise, with the film star forced to speak some silly lines in another example of good talent tossed down the drain. Finale, O'Connor's patter with Scatman Crothers, led into a boffo production number set in the Hollywood Bowl, with O'Connor singing and hoofing "Fascinating Rhythm." Lisa Kirk gave the show a much-needed lift, vocalizing a pair of pop tunes in socko style.

Producer-director Ernest Glucksman failed to marshall and make good use of talent in the loosely-put together collection of acts, and the writing by Sid Kuller and Miller didn't help. Al Goodman's music backing was fine, and so was choreography by Louis Dapron and Willeta Smith.

Show was originally scheduled for airing on the Coast at 5 p.m., which would have put it on eastern stations at 8 o'clock. Union trouble, however, forced a delay until 8 p.m. Coast time, so that eastern viewers did not see the show. Daku.

DARK OF NIGHT

Producer-director: Frank Bunetta
Writer: George Lowther
30 Mins.; Fri., 8:30 p.m.
Sustaining
DuMont, from N.Y.

DuMont, which came up with a real sleeper last season in its Bishop Fulton J. Sheen show, may have another one in this new "Dark of Night" series—and one which, unlike the bishop's program, has good commercial possibilities. It's a dramatic series but one in which the entire action takes place on actual remote locations in and around N.Y.

That "on location" idea for TV is not new, but it's never been used as effectively as producer-director Frank Bunetta did on the DuMont show. (NBC-TV's first post-midnight series embraced remote dramatics several months back, while Franklin Schaffner did a story from a N.Y. subway barn on CBS-TV's "Ford Theatre" two years ago). Perhaps TV technically was not up to the job on those previous attempts, but Bunetta's work came off extremely well. There were some technical flubbs, such as a heavy wind creating considerable mike static, but these are things which are easily corrected.

What DuMont must strive for now is better scripting and, probably, a heftier sustaining budget which would provide for more rehearsal time so that the actors wouldn't fluff their lines. On the initialer, which took place on board the new Navy troop ship, Geiger, the cast was miscueing all over the place. And, while the story held interest, it was a little too pat and, in some spots, incredible, to bear much impact. George Lowther script told of the ship's captain forced to slow his return to N.Y., where his wife lay dying, because of a hurricane in his path, with a less credible subplot about a D.P. on his way to the U.S. trying to jump overboard because of his obsession that the ship was really manned by Gestapo agents. Grant Sullivan, as the ship's first officer, and Joseph Holland, as the captain, fared best in the cast. Stal.

TWO FOR THE MONEY

With Herb Shriner, Dr. Mason Gross, Milton De Lugg orch, contestants; Dennis James, announcer
Producers: Mark Goodson, Bill Todman
Director: Jerome Schnur
30 Mins.; Tues., 10 p.m.
OLD GOLD
NBC-TV, from N.Y.
(Lennen & Mitchell)

Goodson & Todman, the ubiquitous packagers, have wrapped a parcel in "Two for the Money" that could easily come under the heading of "Go for Broke." And Old Gold, with its aptly phrased "treat instead of a treatment" pitch, is the playboy of the piece, tossing out the lettuce. Operating strictly in character through all this mint-sized julep is Herb Shriner, the Hoosier humorist out of Ohio who can be expected to hypo the proceedings with his disarming wit. He does.

"Two for the Money" was originally whipped up for Fred Allen who ankled upon medico's orders. Shriner, like Allen, knows how to wring a good line or anecedote out of a contestant's background without being caught with his cliches showing, or bloodthirstily pursuing the standard joke route from the Joe Miller compilation.

He is completely relaxed. As star of the show, you know he's there, but he's almost unobtrusive, putting in a smartie here and there to step up the session between quiz portions. But there's no mistaking his true function—that of a placid looking individual with a crackerbarrel mien who's in there with a bit of arsenic-dipped raconteurage when the occasion demands.

The contestants would almost be props were it not for the Old Golden Fleece. Three sets of mixed pairs (not related) are each engaged in a ditto number of rounds, each round being limited to 15 seconds with the second intervals punctuated by a beep signal. During each period they are rewarded for each correct answer to questions fashioned by Dr. Mason Gross (Rutgers U.), such as naming capitals of Europe, countries of South America, etc.

Dr. Gross also judges the answers pronto, with a miss stopping the round. In the first period, the duos start with $5 for each correct answer and the total won becomes the prize for each correct response in the second round, which in turn progresses for the final set-to.

Curiously, no hoopla attended the boodle—no business about how the money would be spent, ad nauseam. There were no "easy" queries, especially considering the time limit. It's surprising how few persons can name a majority of Supreme Court justices, or film actors whose surnames begin with "C."

Commercials are standard with OG via the dancing cig pack and matchbook and Dennis James in his conversation pieces. End tag is for Embassy Cigarets. Aural portion of show becomes the radio program over NBC, starting this week. Trau.

DOWN YOU GO

With Bergan Evans, Toni Gilman, Carmelita Pope, Fran Coughlin, Robert Breen
Producer: Gail Compton
Director: Barry McKinley
30 Mins.: Fri., 9:30 p.m. (CST)
CARTER PRODUCTS
DuMont, from Chicago
(SSC&B, Bates)

"Down You Go" is a clear cut example of the importance of the emcee and the rostrum personalities to a panel show. Pegged on a simple word building game, this WGN-originated DuMont program which unfurled the Carter Products banner Friday night (3) gets its spark from the heady hosting by Northwestern U prof Bergan Evans and the patter byplay of the sharp quartet around the table. End product is an adult divertissement that may be expected to continue to win favor with the increasingly critical tele audience.

The DYG device has the panel filling out phrases sent in by the viewers. The phrases are completed letter by letter on a visual "work sheet." Guesser who comes up with the wrong letter goes down and the sender gets an extra fin.

Evans furnishes his cohorts with clues, generally via the pun route but consistently witty. And his off-the-cuffers as he leads the group through the game have earned him a rep as a highly adroit gent with the bon mots. Also his panel, composed of Toni Gilman, Carmelita Pope, Fran Coughlin and Robert Breen, has plenty of that necessary brain sparkle.

Overall production trappings for this Louis G. Cowan assembled show are topnotch.

Blurbs were on celluloid and neatly paced. Dave.

HOLLYWOOD OPENING NIGHT

With William Bendix, Peggy Ann Garner, Gil Stratton, Jr., Jimmy Fidler, others
Producer-director: William Corrigan
30 Mins.; Mon., 9 p.m.
PEARSON PHARMACAL
NBC-TV, from Hollywood
(Harry B. Cohen)

NBC is bucking Columbia's "I Love Lucy" with another Hollywood product—but live rather than film. "Hollywood Opening Night" should give the Ball-Arnaz duo some competition. With the marquee names NBC-TV is lining up for its half-hour teleplays, it's highly probable that "Hollywood" will do considerably better than "Lights Out" did last season against "Lucy" and consequently cut into CBS-TV's standout share-of-audience.

Kickoff vehicle Monday (6) was "Terrible Tempered Tolliver," a baseball yarn which cashed in neatly on the current World Series interest. It starred William Bendix as a bull-headed but likeable umpire, with Peggy Ann Garner as his winsome daughter. Plot revolved around the gal's falling in love with a ballplayer (Gil Stratton, Jr.), a superstitious rookie who irked her dad by wearing a rabbit's foot, and other didoes. Brash youth, who took a shine to Miss Garner (seeing her hypoed his batting average), held a club over the ump because he discovered Bendix wears specs and the arbiter was forced to reverse his decision against the lad. It was amusingly done, nicely utilizing diamond lingo and traditions, as woo was pitched and pitcher was wooed to good comic effect.

Production originated from NBC's new studios in Burbank. Thesping was good, with the cast milking a cute comedy script. Staging was smooth, although settings were limited and didn't take advantage of the space the new layout offers. Production was slick, but not up to the standard of the bigleague eastern half-hour dramas. A reason may be the fact the show was done with a live audience.

Program opened with a street scene outside the entrance, as cars and people passed by, and moved to Jimmy Fidler spieling in the lobby to intro the show to simulate an opening night (he also trailerized the next vehicle). Commercials for Ennds (chlorophyll) tablets were integrated into the script by means of a TV ballcast announcer cueing in the plugs. Bril.

THE HOT SEAT

With Stuart Scheftel, Alistair Cooke, James A. Farley, Harold Stassen
Producers: Scheftel, Rocky Wall
Director: Robert Doyle
30 Mins.; Sun., 7 p.m.
ABC-TV, from New York

"The Hot Seat," which returned to ABC-TV Sunday (5), generates hot interest in current issues; but, more important, it yields more light than heat. The format of this show is stripped down to the essentials to get controversial news figures to amplify, clarify and explain their views—and even to deny news reports as published in the press. Under this setup, a quizzee faces two interrogators, Stuart Scheftel and a guest expert, who confront him with clippings on his statements and actions. That tends to get the discussion down to specifics and out of the realm of airy conjecture. Further, there isn't the confusing cross-chatter which mars some debates.

On the initialer the guest prober was Alistair Cooke, BBC and Manchester Guardian correspondent. In the uneasy chair were James A. Farley, former Democratic national chairman, and Harold E. Stassen, quondam governor of Minnesota. First "victim" was Farley, who backed Stevenson strongly, said he didn't feel Nixon had "fully explained" the $18,000 fund, and added that after a half-dozen visits to Spain he is in favor of aid to Gen. Franco. Second half of the program had Stassen, a GOP proponent, argue that "Gen. Eisenhower is not dominated by any group," that Stevenson's special fund was suspicious and that the Dem Presidential candidate had been "in the same group with Alger Hiss."

There was nothing sensational spilled, but the airer did give some interesting sidelights on the campaign and reveal some facets of these two politicos not too familiar to the public. Scheftel and Cooke didn't throw any fast punches, just some light jabs.

Production is good. It's done in the arena theatre manner, without a set, and with cameras hidden in the darkened studio. That eliminates distracting scenery, as well as cutting the budget and allowing for tight closeups of the participants. However, the lighting (mostly from overhead) was a bit too contrasty and occasionally there were unflattering shadows on the quizzees. Bril.

DENNIS DAY SHOW

30 Mins., Fri., 8 p.m.
RCA

(J. Walter Thompson)

The new Dennis Day show reflects the "you-gotta-go-situation-comedy" fever that's gripped TV. RCA, which alternated last season with both Day and Ezio Pinza, has settled this season for Day alone. And to "update" him in keeping with the new format trend, he's now rigged out with a complete story line as a young bachelor facing the vicissitudes of life in a Hollywood apartment. Unfortunately, it's too much situation and too little comedy.

The new Dennis Day show, in fact, gave evidence on the preem installment (3) of approximating something in the nature of a male "Irma" comedy. There are the assorted tenants, including a moppet who worships him; the inevitable ham actor, the superintendent, the girl friend, etc. Along the way Day gets a crack at some vocalistics and some mimicry in which, on this specific show, he did a takeoff on Rudolph Valentino in a scene that provided the stanza's top (but all too few) moments.

There's no questioning Day's gifts as one of broadcasting's fine performers, particularly the characterizations and when he's grooved in the right songs. But when these more qualitative aspects are relegated to secondary interest and importance to make way for some sorry continuity and dragged-in props, the result can be pretty disastrous. It would make a lot more sense to let Day play himself, with maximum stress on his distinctive talents—come what may as format.

Cliff Arquette's casting as the superintendent carried with it the only genuine comedy spark. The half-hour could have used a lot more of him. Rose.

THIS IS YOUR LIFE

HAZEL BISHOP
NBC-TV, from Hollywood

Corny as it is, Ralph Edwards' new video version of his "This Is Your Life" radio series has enough widespread appeal and human interest to draw a respectably-sized audience to this Wednesday night at 10 slot for Hazel Bishop. A no-holds-barred attempt to play on the emotions of emotional viewers, it's the kind of stuff that Edwards does best and, while the intellectuals and more literate-minded setowners won't have much to do with the show, the masses should be right there week after week.

TV version, judging from the initialer last Wednesday night (1), follows closely the format of the AM series. Edwards starts the show by walking through the audience chatting with his customers, then suddenly draws one of them up to the stage where he or she becomes "it" in the re-creation of his life story. On the TV preem, the "it" was a nice old lady, Mrs. Laura Stone, mother of actor Milburn Stone and a fine example of American pioneer stock of the type which helped settle the west in the 1880s and '90s via covered wagon.

While the same show would play well on radio, TV's visual capabilities gave it extra impact, via the constant look of surprise on Mrs. Stone's face as Edwards read her life story from a prepared script and, in turn, paraded out various members of her family and old friends, some of whom she hadn't seen in a number of years. Edwards wisely subdued his usual ebullience, letting the story and real-life cast speak for themselves. Result was a heart-warming, albeit off-the-cob show.

Anne Russell, perennial sales spieler for Hazel Bishop, handled the no-smear-off, no-rub-off pitch capably. Edwards also got in some potent plugs for the sponsor's product and the cosmetic was amply displayed on-camera during the show. Stal.

JACK BENNY SHOW

With Bob Crosby, Eddie (Rochester) Anderson, Don Wilson, Mahlon Merrick orch
Producer-director: Ralph Levy.
Associate Producer: Hilliard Marks.
Writers: Sam Perrin, George Balzer, Milt Josefsberg, John Tackaberry
30 Mins.; Sun., 7:30 p.m.
LUCKY STRIKE
CBS-TV from Hollywood
(BBD&O)

After but one season in the sight medium as a Lucky Striker every six weeks or so, Jack Benny is now in the enviable position of commanding attention merely by his presence. His previous attempts have established his comic artistry in television with much the same authority that has been concomitant with his aural packages over the years. Not dependent on a jokefest or elaborate production motifs surrounded by a large cast, he can conceivably go on forever. That he is ably backed by such a scripting quartet as Sam Perrin, George Balzer, Milt Josefsberg and John Tackaberry will not hurt his standing. The Benny timing and the savvy Benny manner are the super-socko elements in the comedian's equipment.

Last Sunday's preem (5) was the first of 10 shows Benny will front this season for Lucky Strike. It was a well-knit excursion full of situation pleasantries and a load of laff props to help them along. The pattern's mitt was tipped at the start when Eddie (Rochester) Anderson was discovered in the head man's apartment engaged in long-handled dusting of the place while lazily reclining. He even employed an elongated stick to open the door to an interviewer on the political scene.

This segued into Benny at rehearsal in which slick treatment was given to his one-way conversation with Bob Crosby as Don Wilson sounded the commercial. It was a delightful bit that set up the overall theme—Crosby's dissatisfaction with his contract for TV appearances. Before the full-blown pacting sequence, Crosby piped a neat "You Belong to Me" while seated near the stage apron alongside the orch's harp. In this and the followup, Crosby, who is slated for seven of Benny's 10 outings, showed himself a relaxed performer who can be counted on for a plus on his guestings.

For the end piece in solution of the contract squabble, Benny fortified himself with a fast slug of coke and a water chaser, a rousing swiftie. Rochester brought out additional props, preparing eggs for the master via another long pole which found its way in and out of an invisible kitchen, finally producing the eggs with the gloved end of the long-distance baton.

To break down Crosby's resistance, Benny and Rochester proceeded to convert the apartment into a poorhouse; even the star's snazzy portrait was changed to display him as a poverty stricken character. Under these conditions, Crosby agreed to accept 50 bucks per show. In a quick switch, Crosby's ragamuffin sons and daughters to the number of five came upon the set in succession, causing JB to repent his stinginess and reward Crosby with the originally agreed $500. With the ink hardly dry on the document, Crosby yoo-hooed his frau, who emerged in chichi grooming including a fur coat, to an amazement that only a Benny can panto with terrific impact.

Series is produced and directed by Ralph Levy and Hilliard Marks as associate producer. They're a top team. Trau.

TV cameras looked in on a typical rehearsal of "The McFlannels," w.k. Scot radio family, at a big television exhibition in St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow. Thespers were caught reading their radio scripts, cameras also giving closeup of megger Archie P. Lee directing the rehearsal from the radio control-room. Authoress of the weekly series, Mrs. Helen W. Pryde, was interviewed by senior Scot announcer Alastair McIntyre, and told how the series (which deals with a homely West of Scotland family) originated.

Program had a dull patch in the middle, when only a radio set was seen on the screen, ostensibly to show contrast between sound and vision effects. It had average viewing entertainment. Gord.

(McCann-Erickson)

The showmanship that is Winchell pays off in person.

The hoopla, color and excitement that pervades the ether via a Winchell newscast is enhanced, if anything, by the visualization of the Gruen clocks around the globe; the clickety-clack of the manual telegraph key and the arm-gestures he throws when he cues for the overseas signals.

The same Winchellian manner which has distinguished him from the orthodox newscasts is accented on his TV debut. Unlike the AM pattern, the visual values on TV may create a need for a sprightlier presentation by all telenewscasters than has been the case until Winchell, producer Charles Dubin & Co. evidenced that there can be something more to the news periods than the AutoCue, Teleprompter, and kindred techniques. Winchell, of course, is more than the average "15 minutes of the latest news" because he is permitted positive editorial opinion and strong views on politics, personalities and problems than is the case usually.

A personable gent off and on, Winchell looks the real-life "Front Page" character that he is. Gray hat turned up, shirt loose at the collar, and necktie becoming more askew as the proceedings pace forward, he reads his news flashes in a natural manner. An experiment to do it via AutoCue was wisely discarded during the dry runs but the "editorial" sees him with his glasses off, full-facing the cameras and speaking his weekly piece with aid of the prompting device.

The camera work is as effective as the general production investiture, the lensing taking him from several angles, and all effectively. The Paris, Moscow, Oslo, Cairo and Berlin timepieces, with their respective time zones, and constantly flashing the Gruen trademark, is a natural and automatic commercial for the sponsor which, originally, was to have been the alternate weekly bankroller but is seemingly making an intensive Xmas biz drive. Lizbeth Scott's midsection and finale commercials (filmed) have an "until Oct. 31" bargain pricetag gimmick which should tell the sponsors pronto on their in-person Sunday night newsbow's impact.

Winchell coincidentally resumed his usual 9 p.m. Sunday night radio for the same sponsor after an enforced layoff because of illness. Incidentally, as all hands expected, Winchell repeated some of his flashes on AM, two hours after his TVcast, but that didn't minimize the excitement and appeal on both fronts. As also expected, the traditional Sunday-at-9 spot permits for later flashes, denials, corrections, and the like. He experienced his first qualification by rightly mentioning the racetrack which he erratumed earlier.

Winchell will make Sunday at 6:45 the same "must" evening spot as he has done over the years with his trademarked 9 p.m. Abel.

LIVE AND LET LIVE

With Ann Holland, guests
Producer: Ann Holland
Director: Bob Jones
30 Mins.; Tues., 9:30 p.m.
WBAL-TV, Baltimore

This series of half-hour public service airings in cooperation with the University of Maryland, has built a big following on its down-to-earth discussions of medical problems as it affects the laymen and professional as well. Utilizing outstanding figures in the medical, dental and pharmaceutical life of Baltimore, plus additional personnel and patients from the University Hospital and its clinics a wide variety of subjects has been covered.

Current discussion of allergies, hay fever, etc., with actual projection of skin reactions, made for a clear-cut understanding of this subject and previous airings of such problems as heart attacks, dental malformations, and difficulties with hearing and seeing should help clarify popular misconceptions about these problems and serve to alleviate fear and terror.

It's all down to earth and smartly broken up by pictures, charts and in many cases, by actual people shown before, during and after their problems have been clearly defined. Medicos and lecturers are switched around and kept fairly brief. Not all of these are telegenic or paragons of crisp, clear and unfrightened speech, but they come through on the average and everybody likes to hear about their operations or pet ailments. This show tells it. There's good pacing by Ann Holland, who also organizes the weekly setup.

...and out front with the customers

You might easily picture this time clock in stores all over the country. And with the same names. For Benny, Bergen, Crosby, Godfrey, and company have started a new fall season on CBS Radio. And they're giving their greatest performances not only in 43 million homes and 27 million cars—but as salesmen behind counters from coast to coast.

There's no sales force like them—for selling more things to more people in more places...

It makes a difference that so many of the leading shows are heard on the same network. (More of them are on CBS Radio than on all other networks combined.) For they bring all the network's sponsors into a main stream of customer traffic. They create the best locations in all advertising.

For this reason 25 per cent more time is sponsored on CBS Radio than on any other network. And the time-slots still available have all the "crowd" advantages of stores next to Macy's or Gimbel's.

Around the clock CBS Radio's star attractions assure the greatest carry-over of listeners from show to show...the largest average audience... the lowest advertising cost.

You too can be out front with the customers on the CBS RADIO NETWORK in progress and made a tour of Independence Hall.

The House of Correction has a prison population of 800—narcotic addicts, vagrants, juvenile delinquents, psychotics, etc. — all of whom are short termers, the top sentence being two years. Physically, however, it is designed as a maximum security institution. WPTZ sent out a crew of 17, with four cameras and covered the main cell block, the mess hall, dispensary, chapel, hospital and other focal points.

Presented in semi-documentary fashion in cooperation with the Prison Welfare Department, the purpose of the teletour was educational and not an expose. But the need for reforms became evident in the questions by Smith and the answers from the superintendent and a member of the Welfare Board. The interviews brought out evidence of crowding, insufficient staff, mixing of juveniles with older prisoners at feeding, the feeble-minded and epileptic waiting for admission to State institutions and the minimum social service facilities.

Besides the views of the stone exterior and the barred windows, the long cell blocks, such casual references as locked in a 7, unlocked at 7, established locale and mood. Smith interviewed two inmates. A teenager, whose voice only was heard, and who was in for driving a car without a license. The youth had no interest in the World Series, he said. The camera played upon the body and nervous hands of the other interview subject, an alcoholic—a plumber who never worked at it. There was a verbal jolt in the man's acceptance of being locked up 38 times in 20 years. Interviews sounded unrehearsed, although some social service sentiment seeped into the vagrant's summary of his condition: "maybe things would be different if there was a job or something to look forward to."

Smith closed with the plea for rehabilitation and urged that inmates should not be left in a "crucible of crime." Musical background and script were good.

SUPER CIRCUS
With Mary Hartline, Claude Kirchner, Cliff Soubier, Nick Francis, Bardie Patton, Bernie Hoffman; Don Francisco, Los Robertos, Mandos Sisters; Bruce Chase orch
Producer: Phil Patton
Director: Edward Skotch
Writer: Bill Adams
60 Mins.; Sun., 4 p.m. CST
KELLOG, MARS
ABC-TV, from Chicago
(Burnett)

"Super Circus," ABC-TV's Sunday afternoon anchor going into its fifth year, is a good example of a show that has kept pace with the technical improvements of the medium. The Kellogg Co. came aboard Sept. 28 as the first-half tenant, joing Mars, sponsors of the last half. New bankroller was welcomed with a realistic new background layout and just enough format changes to give the 60-minute simulated tanbark display a refurbished look.

Basic circus formula still prevails, as does the open-valved enthusiasm of emcee-ringmaster Claude Kirchner, the offbeat baton waving of Mary Hartline and the cued hysteria of the studio audience kids. Outside vaude routines are still featured (three were used this time) but more and more emphasis is being placed on animal acts and the antics of the show's regular trio of clowns — Cliff Soubier, Bardie Patton and Nick Francis.

Changes seem to be in the right right direction. First, cutback in outside turns means that those that are used may be somewhat more costly. And it saves more time for the beasts and clowns.

Comic troupe, headed up by vet showman Cliff Soubier, is rightly given more to do. The group's "Hot Air Force" enlistment sequence, with an assist from Miss Hartline, was a laugh-exciting bundle of sight gags that played off especially well for the moppets setside at home. It looks like a wise move by producer Phil Patton in giving the three funny men more space for development and identification.

Another addition is the newly launched baton twirling contest. First entry was a cute eight-year-old lass.

Pro talent was topgrade and rounded out the hour nicely. Slack wire prancer Don Francisco got the festivities off to a lively start. Los Robertos came on midway for some fancy dual juggling, and the clincher was provided by the two Mandos Sisters with their upstairs acrobatics on a revolving anchor.

The two clients left no doubt as to who was paying the bills. Plugs for the cereal and candy bars were frequent and direct. Slugging selling job was done by the cast regulars.

HERMAN HICKMAN SHOW
With Rex Marshall, announcer; others
Producer: George Foley
Director: Don Hillman
15 Mins.; Fri., 7 p.m.
GENERAL CIGAR CO.
NBC-TV, from N. Y.
(Donahue & Coe)

Herman Hickman, who gave up his job as head coach at Yale in order to devote his entire time to TV, probably made a wise choice. Yale's football chances this year look none too good, while Hickman's video chances, judging from the preem of his new show last Friday night (3), seem excellent. And that's really switching jobs while the switching is good.

Hickman broke in on TV as a permanent panelist on CBS-TVs' "Celebrity Time" (now defunct), surprising viewers with his erudition and wit. He displays the same qualities on it, since he's talking sports, which is his trade. Format of the show is extremely simple, with a group of unidentified sportswriters supposedly interviewing the rotund Hickman in his office, which gives him the chance to spin stories, expound on football, predict scores, etc.

Whether the questions were prepared in advance or not, some of them on the preem were loaded. Thus, one writer queried Hickman on reports that he had been fired from his Yale job (which he denied), and another asked him who was the best player he had ever coached (it was Glenn Davis of Army, which is surprising in view of the fact that Hickman is still a grid consultant at Yale). Through it all, he gave out with that grin almost as wide as he is, that hefty laugh, etc., all of which have brought him his "jovial" tag.

Since the show is sponsored by General Cigar, with whom Hickman has a contract, both he and announcer Rex Marshall sport cigars throughout the performance. One question, on how he, as a trainer of youth, could endorse a cigar, gave him a chance for a neat integrated plug and Marshall handled the usual pitching chores competently. This stanza is another of those for which NBC had trouble clearing stations, and it's too bad that football fans in those markets which refused to clear for Hickman won't get a chance to see him.

THE STORY BEHIND WONDER DRUGS
With Dr. Robert L. Swain, moderator; Dr. E. E. Leuallen, Graydon L. Walker, Marty H. Sasmor, Rose Fried
Producer: Mike Jablons
Director: Arnold Knox
30 Mins.; Thurs.; 12:45 p.m.
Sustaining
DuMont, from New York

Pharmaceutical Council of Greater New York and the DuMont net collaborated in presenting a special half-hour show called "The Story Behind Wonder Drugs" on Thursday (2). It was beamed in conjunction with the Fifth Annual Professional Show and Trade Exhibit of the PCGNY held at the Hotel Statler Oct. 1-3.

No doubt the story behind wonder drugs is a fascinating one. But unfortunately it was told on this program in a dry and mechanical manner. For the format provided for a panel of four experts in the pharmaceutical field over which Dr. Robert L. Swain, editor of Drug Topics, presided as moderator.

Panelites included Dr. E. E. Leuallen, dean of the Columbia U. College of Pharmacy; Graydon L. Walker, sales director for Parke, Davis & Co.; Marty H. Sasmor, a PCGNY exec, and Rose Fried, chief pharmacist of Womens Hospital, N.Y. Each read a paper discussing wonder drugs insofar as his own field was concerned.

While the papers were informative, they also were repetitious, indicating that little advance preparation had been made to scrutinize the contents. Session took on more movement when an eight-minute film was thrown on the screen to show how antibiotics reach commercial production at an E. R. Squibb plant.

But even with the film tossed in, "The Story Behind Wonder Drugs" emerged as a disappointment. For it was a mistake to rely upon dry papers to tell the history of penicillin, aureomycin, etc. via a visual medium. A script written especially for the occasion plus good production could have done a much better job with the subject at hand. It would have cost more, too.

TRASH OR TREASURE
With Sigmund Rothschild, Nelson Case, others
30 Mins., Wed., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WABD, N. Y.

"Trash or Treasure" is a show that should entice virtually every class of viewer, especially those that make hobbies out of attending auction sales or rummaging through the antique shops.

Format is fairly simple, An article is brought in for appraisal by Sigmund Rothsehild, who appears to have an encyclopedic knowledge of a variety of subjects. His appraisals seem to indicate that he can set up shop in the antique district and dole out evaluations for a fee. He speaks interestingly of the points that enter into his appraisals, tells why an item should be valuable and, at the same time, why others have lost right to a pretentious price-tag.

Nelson Case interviews those seeking Rothschild's advice, seeking out info on price, origin and other vital statistics of the item under discussion. As an added gimmick, those that seek advice are asked to appraise a series of articles on display and their evaluations are compared with actual price.

It's an interesting show that can perform a valuable personal service for many.

Orrin Tucker Sells KLUF Back to Cloughs

Galveston, Oct. 7.

The FCC has granted the reassignment of the license of KLUF, AM-FM, from Orrin Tucker to George Roy Clough, Helen Clough, LeRoy D. Clough and Braden E. Clough. Tucker, the band leader, purchased the outlets from the Cloughs.

George and Helen Clough were majority stockholders while LeRoy and Braden Clough were minority stockholders. LeRoy D. Clough is engineer of the outlets; Braden E. Clough is traffic manager and program director.

Transfer involves cancellation of a $90,000 note.

Inside Stuff—Television

NBC-TV's early-bird "Today" show will screen a contraband newsreel clip some day this week, sneaked by an NBC camera crew in Paris of Jose Ferrer in the "abbreviated legs" makeup he sports for his currently-shooting "Moulin Rouge" film. Woolf brothers and execs of Romulus Films (Sam Spiegel, John Huston and Ferrer), who are coproducing the feature, had banned all such shots on the grounds that they would be "too shocking."

NBC-TV execs in N.Y. this week said they knew the clips had been taken but that they didn't know when they would arrive in N.Y. to be inserted in the "Today" show. Pictures of Ferrer in the makeup (he plays the role of the late Henri Toulouse-Lautrec in the picture) received a spread in Life magazine two weeks ago.

NBC today (Wed.) received the "Best of All Industry Grand Award" for its 1952 TV direct mail campaign, from the Direct Mail Advertising Assn. at the outfit's annual conference in Washington. NBC also received separate awards for the best mail advertising in radio and in TV.

Awards were based on the web's promotion use of both radio and video, which is supervised by Rudd Lawrence, director of promotion, planning and development for both media.

Bruce Stauderman, program supervisor at WXEL, Cleveland, has been spending a fortnight in Manhattan lining up production ideas and gimmicks for the new downtown studios of that station. Formerly located about 10 miles from central Cleveland the main studios and executive staff will now be in a former film house. Stauderman was also under instructions to line up some TV "personalites" for Cleveland, but ran into nothing but discouragement in the shape of salary demands "fantastically out of line for Ohio."

Meanwhile Stauderman's boss, Herbert L. Mayer of the Empire Coil Co., of Mt. Vernon, will be among the new tycoons of TV. He's opening the first UHF station in Portland, Ore.; has a license for Denver, and will probably withdraw from Puerto Rico and seek a fourth TV station somewhere else.

Melissa Hayden and Andre Eglevsky, dance leads in the Chaplin film, "Limelight," have been pacted by agent Deborah Coleman for a series of 10 appearances on the Kate Smith NBC-TV show. Duo has been set as a package, either by themselves or with an added corps de ballet when needed. Pact starts Oct. 17 when duo will appear in "The Dream," to be followed the next week with "Swan Lake" excerpts.

Dancers had three shots on the show last season, and one this fall, Sept. 16. As result, they were signed for the 10 dates.

Miss Coleman also pacted prima ballerina Alicia Markova for an appearance on "Show of Shows" Oct. 18.

Barrere's BAB Post

FAE Ready to Help Educ'l TV With $5,000,000, But Won't Toss It Around

Fund for Adult Education, which has a $5,000,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to help educational television, has quietly been talking to groups with financial backing and plans well afoot for educational stations.

FAE is not just going to toss around the $5,000,000, giving it to outfits which have just a good idea. Instead, it will provide funds only when the group concerned has already substantial assurance of raising a certain figure (varying with the community). FAE grants to stations will be geared to a sliding scale, with projects that raise more coin on their own getting a bigger gift from FAE. Money would not be earmarked for buildings, but only for equipment.

It's understood that the minimum amount of backing which a group would need to qualify for FAE assistance would have to cover a transmitter, cameras, sound equipment and kinescope recording facilities.

Delbert Clark, eastern representative of FAE, told VARIETY that prospects are good in terms of the Fund's finding groups progressing with plans for getting educational channels. These groups are not all universities, Clark said, but include communities, groups of colleges, school systems, libraries and museums.

No Final Terms Yet

No final terms have been agreed on to give anybody a grant as yet, Clark said, although letters of intent have been received from some institutions and groups giving preliminary details of the engineering, financing and programming plans. By a certain deadline more complete data will be furnished.

FAE is distinct from the Foundation's Television-Radio Workshop, which will back the "Omnibus" series on CBS-TV starting next month. While the Workshop works entirely through commercial channels, FAE concentrates on informal adult education. Since its inception, FAE has been aware of the potentialities of AM and TV in spurring group discussion, Clark said.

A year ago, FAE granted funds to the sole educational video station, WOI-TV, Ames, Ia., for the experimental production of TV shows, to be recorded via kinescope for study and possible later use by other educational outlets when they get on the air. This year the U. of Iowa station has been given another FAE grant to work on programs that would be suitable for other educational telecasters.

Central Exchange

Part of the $5,000,000 fund is allocated for possible help to a central programming exchange. This would operate along the lines of the tape "network" formed by the National Assn. of Educational Broadcasters which has also received FAE aid). Film and kines developed by one station would be bicycled to other outlets. Some coin may go to contracting with stations to produce shows that could be beamed on other educational outlets by kine.

Clark told VARIETY that there is no good reason for a fight between the commercial and educational broadcasters. On the contrary, he feels that growth of educational video can supplement the diet on commercial channels.

In announcing the $5,000,000 grant, FAE board chairman Paul H. Helms said that two matters are being studied: (1) ability and willingness of educational institutions to raise the sums necessary to get into TV; and (2) methods by which high-quality program material can be provided for educational stations that do go on the air.

Helms stressed that grants would have to be limited to "strategically located" communities where there are groups that can carry a major part of the financial burden. FAE will also be guided by geographical considerations so as to reach the most people.

Gambling Duo Cleared Of Contempt Due To AM-TV 'Distraction'

Washington, Oct. 7.

Federal judge ruled yesterday (Mon.) that a witness is not in contempt of Congress if he refused to testify before a Congressional committee while television, radio and photographic apparatus are operating.

Trial involved Morris Kleinman and Louis Rothkopf, of Cleveland, cited for contempt after their refusal to testify before the Kefauver Crime Investigating Committee, March 10, 1951.

U. S. District Judge Henry A. Schweinhut ruled that the presence of the equipment, even though not "shooting" them, could "disturb and distract any witness to the point" where he might say something he didn't mean and which could get him into trouble.

Government prosecutors had described Kleinman and Rothkopf as "hardened criminals" and leaders of an interstate gambling combine. Case was heard without a jury. Witnesses refused to give evidence before the Kefauver committee even when the cameras were turned away from them and focused on the committee bench.

"They were in close proximity to the witness," said the judge, "Television cameras, newsreel cameras, news photographers with their flashbulbs, radio microphones, a large and crowded hearing room with spectators standing along the walls, etc.

"The obdurate stand by these two defendants must be viewed in the context of all these conditions."

Ban Gridcasts

Keene, N. H., Oct. 7.

Radio broadcasts of all home football games of Keene high school have been banned by school officials for this season in an effort to boost sagging gate receipts.

Ban came as a surprise to WKXL in Concord, which had aired the first half of the Keene-Concord game when authorities stepped in and halted broadcast.

ley; and Ray Henderson (DeSylva, Brown &) pianologed a generous medley of their rich catalog, to which silhouetted, superimposed terpers pirouetted, on occasion, against his Steinway backdrop. A George Gershwin film clip with "I Got Rhythm"; W. C. Handy, in person, trumpeting his immortal "St. Louis Blues"; Rudolf Friml playing his exceedingly durable operetta medley; and Les Compagnons de la Chanson, singing "Trois Cloches" (American version: "Jimmy Brown"), rounded it out. The French group was squared away as ASCAP's salute to the French society—the oldest and parent of all performing rights societies. Sullivan, of course, meant SACEM (Societe des Auteurs, Compositeurs et Editeurs de Musique, to give it the full handle) although not mentioning it by name. He opened with comment on the preceding show's fanmail, mentioning George M. Cohan's daughter's letter particularly.

Sullivan introduced Dorothy Fields, L. Wolfe Gilbert and Mitchell Parrish from the audience, identifying the latter—a lyricist—as "composer" of "Stardust"—a detail concerning which Hoagy Carmichael brooks no patience. A nice touch was introducing the last four presidents of ASCAP—Gene Buck, Deems Taylor, Fred Ahlert and Harbach, calling the latter onstage for a bit about some trifling royalties due Sullivan for "Water Under the Bridge," a song based on one of his columnar captions, and awarding him an "associate membership" ("let's call it a fellowship," said Harbach) in ASCAP. Latter invited Sullivan to resume his just revealed, yesteryear songwriting bent, adding that "the doors of ASCAP are always open." Productionally, other than the silhouetted terping groups for "Varsity Drag," in Henderson's medley, Melchior essayed a Tyrolean gambit for his "I Want What I Want," and Miss Scheff essayed a horse-drawn carriage for her "Mlle. Modiste" excerpt. Abel.

Ace Twin Cities Analyst Expelled by AFTRA For Passing A Picket Line

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

AFTRA has expelled George Grim, one of the Twin Cities' ace radio personalities, from membership because he crossed the picket line of KSTP, radio and TV station, where the technicians went on strike two years ago and where they now claim they're locked out.

Grim recently quit WCCO, with which he has been associated for 10 years, and joined KSTP. As a reason for not renewing his WCCO contract, he gave objections to the Hadacol patent medicine spiel on one of his shows and the station's refusal to accede to his request to be disassociated from the commercial copy. His new KSTP contract, he announced, gives him the right to approve or reject sponsors and commercials.

Explaining Grim's expulsion, Merle Edwards, AFTRA head here, says the union's bylaws, "which Grim helped to write," prohibit members from crossing the KSTP picket line. Grim also is a Minneapolis Morning Tribune columnist and is now in South America for the newspaper, writing a series of articles. Edwards has notified him by letter of AFTRA's action.

In connection with Grim's departure, WCCO officials point out that the radio topper, who wrote as well as starred in many shows in addition to being a leading news analyst, and who has been a war correspondent and traveled extensively abroad for his newspaper, "did the Hadacol show for 25 weeks before starting to squawk or balk."

It's expected that at KSTP Grim will appear in a number of TV shows as well as continue with his various types of radio programs.

off its Channel 4 and takes the place of WENR-TV, the ABC-owned station on Channel 7. Obviously much more than just the transference of call letters is involved. There's the key matter of personnel, which has been the source of considerable conjecture hereabouts since the merger was first projected.

As far as can be learned, Kintner made no disclosures as to who, if anyone, would be dislodged at ABC's Central Division. But he did say that John Mitchell, currently general manager of indie WBKB, would come over to Channel 7 as general manager of the new WBKB when it becomes the UP-ABC outlet. Also, present WBKB program director Sterling Quinlan and chief engineer William Kusack will move from the indie to the web operation.

However, it's believed that Goldenson, during his Chi visit, assured Mitchell that he would be given topdog status at the merged headquarters here. This is taken to mean, in some quarters, that Mitchell will be handed veepee chevrons, with full command of the entire operation.

Mitchell Role

That Mitchell will play an important role in the UPT side of the picture is assumed, because he's the one member of the theatre circuit's exec family who has direct video experience. Under his tutelage the past four years, WBKB has been projected into one of the top coin earners in the country. It's known that when the merger was first proposed, he was offered a top berth in the New York homeoffice officialdom, but convinced the UPT execs that he'd be more useful for the time being by remaining here and working on the o&o side.

It's also considered a certainty that Mitchell will take with him to Channel 7 several other members of his present WBKB force than those mentioned by Kintner. All of which is expected to affect nearly every ABC department to some degree.

Still unclear, if Mitchell is to take over the No. 1 slot here, is the status of John H. Norton, Jr., present ABC Chi veep and head man. Norton's radio experience, besides his four years as the Chi ABC AM and TV major domo, extends over 21 years, dating back to 1931, when he joined the NBC engineering staff.

CBS is also involved in the "who's on first" guessing game. The web has a contract to buy WBKB's Channel 4 for $6,000,000 if the ABC-UP melding goes through. This means that for the first time, CBS will have its own Windy City station and will no longer have to work through indies to get its programs aired in this No. 2 market.

Whatever plans the local CBS hierarchy under veepee H. Leslie Atlass has for WBBM-TV, as far as studio facilities or staff is concerned, is the town's best-kept secret.

The situation, too, bears indirectly on WGN-TV, which is currently sharing the Chi CBS-TV affiliation with WBKB. The Chi Tribune station is carrying the web's morning block of soaper strips and "Strike It Rich."

'The Deac'

following the relay broadcast by Pope Pius from Rome. Aylesworth dashed into the office at 8:30, as usual, followed by me—both with clippings referring to the Pope's broadcast and NBC. "Betcha a dollar this morning I got one you haven't!" I ventured. "Make it ten! Don't be a piker!" said Aylesworth. "Okay," I replied, quivering a bit from the possibility of a loss of 10. Out I came with a clipping from New York's leading Italian daily, "Il Progresso," the story carrying the Pope's message in full text (in Italian) but with mentions of NBC (in good American letters, I recall) and the Deac admitted defeat!

Border Stuff

One day in the late '20s, a promotion man from the Toronto (Can.) Globe and Mail came in to see the Deac. It being my job to screen all such persons before they saw the Chief, the promotion man's idea sounded so good he was quickly ushered into Deac's presence. "My idea," the Globe and Mail man said, "is for NBC to bring its programs into Canada through a tie-in with the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. The Globe and Mail would like to promote it — naturally, a good circulation stunt."

Here the Deac's fetish for quick thinking and diplomacy came into play. "Great idea," he said, "but my conception of the approach is somewhat different than yours."

"You go back to Toronto," continued the Deac, "get letters from the Mayor and City Council of Toronto, the Governor General of Canada and leading members of the Canadian Parliament. Get letters from as many Canadian citizens throughout the width and breadth of Canada. Have 'em write me. Have 'em invite the National Broadcasting Co. of the United States to come into Canada—the mechanics will be taken care of after that."

"After all," concluded Aylesworth, "the National Broadcasting Co. could never come into any other country without being invited!"

In less than two weeks the mailroom at 711 Fifth Avenue was filled with mailbags—at least 20 of them, stuffed to the brims with letters from enthusiastic Canadians. Shortly after, CBC and NBC jointly announced an exchange of program schedules.

ABC's New Rate

is adding the 8-8:30 p.m. spot on Fridays. "Top Guy," a whodunit, is currently in the berth and may be retained. If Toni adds a new show, "Top Guy" will be reskedded elsewhere.

Under the vertical contiguity clause, the advertiser can combine a quarter-hour on a Friday morning with a quarter-hour on a Friday evening to earn contiguous rates. Toni can thus combine its "Top Guy" with its parent firm's (Gillette) backing of the Friday night fights. OG can combine its 6:15 and 9:15 p.m. periods in like manner.

For example, a backer using a morning half-hour can buy a half-hour that evening at 50% the gross evening hour rate (less discounts), instead of at 50% the hour rate as heretofore.

New ABC card has "horizontal contiguity" also, for periods totaling at least 60 minutes per week. A spender can buy four quarter-hours on four nights for 100% of the gross hour rate (less discounts), although it would have cost 160% of the hour figure. This policy has been in effect for some time, but not publicly announced.

Rate card also gives a break to those backers who take a summer hiatus, allowing them an "overall" maximum discount based on the volume of business they place on the skein.

against Par which was placed in the record earlier. In its bristling brief, DuMont declared:

"The Commission's orders . . . violated the constitutional and statutory rights of DuMont . . . The examiner has been significantly bestowed with special rights and privileges designed to render him absolutely independent of his agency in carrying out his statutory obligations.

"With rights and privileges go duties and responsibilities. DuMont hereby submits that the hearing examiner must disregard the Commission's orders of Aug. 1 and Sept. 10 and moves that the merger applications be decided on the entire record."

The network pointed out that the Commission did not set a three-year statute of limitations upon testimony affecting DuMont's stock connections with Par and that, therefore, DuMont was being discriminated against.

In their conclusions, the attorneys for the FCC Broadcast Bureau declared that there are three areas of conflict for audience between motion picture theatres and television—"Competition between theatres and the television network; competition between theatre television and the television network; and competition between theatres and theatre television, on the one hand, and pay-as-you-see television on the other."

Because of the newness of television, theatre TV and subscription TV, admitted the brief, "there are no facts, figures or percentages to produce which have any realistic application to the future of the resulting company.

"The only basis, therefore, for a determination of the vital issues in this proceeding is to undertake to visualize the possible developments and to use the factors there unfolded to arrive at the answer as to whether the assignment and transfer of control of the licenses could substantially lessen competition in any line of commerce, and thereby fail to serve the public interest, convenience and necessity."

Dems, GOP Spending

that, at the local level anyway, no big advertisers or their agencies have asked that their franchises on spot slots be turned over to any political party.

When the orders for spots come through, it's understood, they will have general instructions, requesting (for example) six spots a day on an outlet, two in the morning, two in the afternoon and two in the evening, with the station asked to provide the best possible niches.

Most stations have time to sell to both parties. Spot field is a kind of continuing parade, with some spenders coming in and others going out, so that stations would have openings in which to insert the electioneering plugs. These could be skedded in the various participating shows, disk jockey stanzas and femme gab airers.

On the network level, reports were circulated that some bankrollers had given over time to the GOP. However, there was no confirmation. Webs have pitched time slots to both parties and also one-minute participations (for example, ABC offered both factions 60-second spots in its Pyramid Plan programs).

Both Sides Against Middle

There is no rule that if a web or station sells Party A time it must tell Party B in advance. Usually, however, the broadcasters will tell the rival party, in order to make another sale, if possible.

Amount of money spent on radio and tele is actually not limited by law. National committees are restricted to a total outlay of $3,000,000 apiece, but volunteer groups, citizens organizations and state and local committees can spend additional sums (except where limited by state legislation).

As first revealed in VARIETY last week, the GOP had a plan for a $2,000,000 spot drive. Plan was masterminded by Michael Levin, of Erwin, Wasey agency, for Rosser Reeves, exec of Ted Bates agency, which was working for Citizens for Eisenhower. A number of conflicting statements resulted.

Levin said that the citizens group had persuaded some spenders to relinquish time for the announcements. Reeves said that the $2,000,000 figure quoted by Levin was "too high," and was based on an old plan rejected because the spots are "not for sale and money is not available." He said the figure is closer to "several hundred thousand dollars." Reeves also lashed at the Dems for "buying up AM and TV spots in huge quantities" and "paying cash on the barrel head for these spots. Walter Williams, chairman of the citizens group, denied existence of a $2,000,000 kitty, but said his outfit was collecting funds for the drive.

Republicans hit at the Democrats, pointing out that the Dems have skedded 12 network simulcasts, plus film segments, for this month, but George Ball, a Dem spokesman, said that funds were lacking. Volunteers for Stevenson are out trying to raise the coin. Furman, Feiner is agency on the account.

Emerging from the hubbub is a reaffirmation of the power of radio and tele, with AM in particular getting added prestige; further, spot AM and TV is being touted. The GOP plan said, "It has been proven over and over that spots are quickest, most effective and cheapest means of getting across a message in the shortest possible time." Additionally, the furore (which may have been built up by the newspapers in a down-with-broadcasting pitch) underlines the flexibility of spot, which permits bankrollers to tailor their coverage to specific markets. Both GOP and Dems are concentrating on 12 states, with California, Texas and Ohio getting top priority.

Doubt GOP Probe

Washington, Oct. 7.

FCC plans no investigation at this time of the reported $2,000,000 GOP radio-TV blitz for the final days of the Presidential campaign, according to an agency spokesman.

George W. Ball, executive director of the National Volunteers for Stevenson, has wired to the Commission, demanding a probe on the ground that the plan "circumvents the principle of equal radio and TV time for rival candidates."

FCC position is that it cannot step in until somebody is hurt. First the Democrats would have to seek equal time from the webs and find out that they could not get it. Ball did not indicate whether the Demmys have bid for last minute spot time to counteract that obtained by the Republicans.

treasurer, 12½%; Thomas P. Shelburne, 2d vice-president, 12½%; Vernon L. Wise, asst. sec., 12½%; John L. Wise, asst. treasurer, 12½% and Leon Schwartz, 12½%. Vernon and John Wise each own 20% of radio station WBUT at Butler, Pa., and Gray owns 25% of WCED at DuBois, Pa.

At Lincoln, Neb., the Cornhusker Radio and Television Corp. was granted permission to build a station for Channel 12. Corporation is owned by Edward M. O'Shea, president, 48.25% of stock; Bennett S. Martin, sec., 48.25%; Harold E. Anderson, vice-president and general manager, 2½%. Anderson is now general manager of station KOLN, in Lincoln. The other two are businessmen in the city.

Competitive Batches

Meantime, the Commission opened hearings last week on the first batches on applications where applicants are competing for the same channel. Hearings involve Denver and Portland, Ore., with motion picture interests important bidders.

Seeking Channel 7 in Denver is Aladdin Radio and TV, Inc. A 13½% owner is Frank H. Ricketson, Jr., president of Fox Intermountain Theatres and 50% owner of Atlas Theatre Corp. Ted R. Gamble, of Gamble Enterprises and Standard Theatres, Inc., and Mrs. Gamble are listed as 20.3% owners. Harry E. Huffman, another exhibitor, is also a stockholder.

The opposition for this channel is Denver Television Co., which includes John M. Wolfberg as its present and 34% stockholder. He operates a Denver theatre chain. Associated with him in the application is screen actor James Stewart, who has a 19.6% interest.

One of the two applicants for Channel 4 in Denver is Metropolitan Television Co., which owns radio station KOA there. Bob Hope is a 50% stockholder.

Another hearing involves Channel 6 in Portland. One of the three contestants is Mt. Hood Radio and Television Broadcasting Corp., which recently acquired station KOIN there. Ted Gamble and his wife are listed as joint owners of 43.5% of the stock. Another 11% is held by Sherill C. Corwin, L. A. exhibitor associated with the Relph E. Stolkin group in the purchase of the RKO studio control.

agree on a meeting date. When the web nixed the union's request for a meet Sunday afternoon, NABET staffers walked off the job at 5:55 p.m., five minutes before the scheduled start of "Press."

Coast edition of the strike was reportedly caused by NABET staffers there choosing the Colgate time to call a meeting to discuss the D.C. situation. According to NBC, the NABET men on the Coast walked off the stage after receiving a wire from Washington to call a rush meeting to talk over the D.C. action. No Coast radio shows were affected, since the Phil Harris-Alice Faye program, the only Sunday night show from Hollywood, had been taped in advance and ran off on schedule.

Radio version of "Press," which airs regularly Sunday nights at 10:30, was also killed by the walkout. No rebate was involved, however, since the show is sustaining. NBC affiliates losing out on the two TV shows filled with film on a local basis.

Cowan Beltline

a Brookfield Zoo show, also emanating from Chi.

Several vidpix deals are on the Cowan horizon, including the shift of the "Ask Me Another" panel show from live to film. Ethyl recently turned in a cancellation notice because of NBC-TV's inability to deliver stations, but the client is talking in terms of a renewal via the film route. Syndication deal for the filmed "Fearless Fosdick" series is also on the '52-53 Cowan agenda.

With "Down You Go" now riding high for Carter Products on DuMont, the radio version of the panel program has been inked for a commercial ride in Canada. Show currently tops the rating parade on the Cuban TV Network, where Cowan's "Quiz Kids," sponsored on CBS-TV by Cat's Paw, is also a Latino fave.

Kine of a "moppet nitery" show called "Little Club" is on the immediate calendar. It'll be slanted for the juve customers, featuring juve talent with a sophisticated background setting. Cowan office last week set Bobby Sherwood for the five-days-a-week WJZ-TV spread as a disk jock.

The Monday night Paul Winchell NBC-TV show is also off the Cowan beltline.

Chi Downbeat

duces and directs "Hawkins," has been blueprinting another strip series.

Another bullish factor, as far as NBC is concerned, is that discussions have been revived again about possible studio expansion. It's still all in the talk stage, but strengthens the arguments that the parent web hasn't written off its Windy City plant as a source of additional output.

Merger Angle

Just what effect the pending ABC merger with United Paramount will have on the local picture, as far as network activity is concerned, is still purely conjecture. ABC-TV's current Chi contributions are "Super Circus," the Sunday afternoon bellringer, and Wednesday night wrestling from Rainbo.

As a by-product of the melding, CBS-TV will get its own station here when it takes over WBKB's Channel 4. Unless the Windy City CBS AM trend, which has seen network feeds drop to practically zero, is reversed, little TV web production is anticipated when the WBBM boys launch WBBM-TV.

Besides the aforementioned survivors still going strong, there's Burr Tillstrom's "Kukla, Fran & Ollie" (although cut back from its daily ride to a Sunday afternoon halfhour) and "Zoo Parade" on NBC-TV. Same web's "Ask Me Another," which rode through the summer for Ethyl, and "Super Ghost" are checking off next month.

WGN-TV continues to pipe "Pet Shop" to DuMont Saturdays as well as the Friday night "Down You Go," being picked up next week by Carter Products.

CBS has "Quiz Kids" coming from here on both radio and TV.

On the AM side, Chi's trio of daytime kingpins continues to roll merrily along—ABC's "Breakfast Club"; NBC's "Welcome Travelers," and Mutual's "Ladies' Fair." Latter chain is also adding to its morning lineup "The Cliff Johnson Family" next month. But that's about all, outside of an occasional sustaining filler and a few news shows.

TV Ratings

switched to Hooper because, on the basis of the higher rating payoff, they figured they were getting more per thousand. Then came the Nielsen era and even bigger audiences.

Today not only Nielsen, but all the rating outfits, are shooting for the stratosphere in sizing up the shows. The cautious boys keep saying: "They better get some realism into their ratings or one day TV will stop believing its research."

Everybody Loves Football in K.C.

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

After what was forecast as a moderate season on the air, football now is in there for probably its most extensive radio-TV coverage here. "Big Seven Game of the Week" is now a weekly feature on WDAF-TV, show being a half-hour condensed version of top conference game of the week. It's filmed on Saturday, edited and gets back here for showing on Wednesday nights for Phillips Petroleum Co.

KCKN, Arthur Capper pop music station, got into the picture by taking the Notre Dame games via wire. Kleb Distributing Co., Stewart-Warner distrib, and Mission Laundry are picking up the tab. KCKN also has football finals on Saturday at 6:30 with the Automobile Club of Missouri as the sponsor and George Stump at the mike for the fifth straight year.

KCMO, AM outlet, is doing Big Seven games with Sports Director Tony Williams at the mike, station generally picking games for coverage not taken by other stations here or concentrating on Univ. of Missouri games. KCMO carried the Missouri-California tussle with Williams recreating by telegraph, and will use similar setup on other games if occasion arises.

Macy's Department Store, which formerly had a chatter-interview show on radio, this season has jumped into football with "Pigskin Pix," a quarter hour prediction stint on WDAF-TV. Jo Hodges, of the Macy's staff, produces with Jay Barrington, WDAF-TV sports director, and Bob Busby, assistant editor of the Kansas City Star, as m.c. and prognosticator respectively. Show represents a switch of purpose for Macy's which is trying to garner new interest for its men's department.

KMBC and WHB, as announced earlier are carrying their full schedule of Big Seven games. KMBC is doing the sked with Sam Molen at the mike and participating spots by Jenkins Music Co. WHB has John G. Gaines Hallicrafters distrib underwriting a 10-game schedule.

Missouri sports net of 15 stations is carrying games of the Univ. of Missouri weekly with Mahlon Aldridge, general manager of KFRU, Columbia, and Wilbur Stalcup, Missouri basketball coach, airing the games. Available here through KIMO, Independence, Mo.

All this in addition to the NCAA game of the week on WDAF-TV.

Death of Eva Peron, J. Yankelevich Brings Big Changes in Arg. Radio

Montevideo, Sept. 30.

Death in Argentina has caused big changes in the Argentine broadcasting landscape since beginning of the year. First phase of this transformation began when Broadcastng Assn. prexy Jame Yankelevich, radio's strong man for more than 23 years, died last February. His domination of the radio picture was so strong that his passing left a gap which there has been no one big enough or ruthless enough to fill.

The second phase must inevitably follow the passing of Eva Peron, who as a former radio actress (Eva Duarte), was particularly radio conscious, and through collaboration from Yankelevich, managed to keep a firm hold on all matters connected with radio.

These two had been the dominant personalities in Argentine radio since 1943, when Evita Duarte's close association with the then Minister of Labor, Colonel Peron, began. From then on every detail of radio management had to pass her scrutiny before it could be approved.

The vital job of Minister of Telecommunications is still held by Oscar Nicolini, for many years a close friend of the Duarte family, who formed the apex of the Duarte-Yankelevich triangle for supervision of all broadcasting matters. Nicolini has held this key post since the first Peron presidential term.

Another key job is held by Raul Apold, former newspaper man and script writer for Argentina Sono Film, who heads the Presidential Press Bureau, with semi-cabinet rank, and edits some of Eva Peron's newspapers. He press-agented Eva Peron during her lifetime, and surrounded her passing with a crescendo of mourning eulogies for 16 days, abating these only slightly since the funeral Aug. 10. Both the Communications and Press toppers were Eva Peron appointees and there is a spate of conjecture in the River Plate as to probable eventual cabinet changes.

Cossio Succeeds to Post

What more immediately concerns Argentine radio is that Juan Cossio is taking over Jaime Yankelevich's sceptre as president of the Broadcasters Assn. As a partner of Yankelevich for many years, he is well versed in the complexities of radio management, and is respected by advertisers, who find him congenial. The governing Board of the association now includes Antonio G. Devoto, another veteran of Argentine radio and Splendid Network's chief exec; Dante Aloe, who is a younger brother of Major Aloe, now governor of the Province of Buenos Aires, and is nominally manager of Radio Mundo; Ignacio Firmat Lamas of Radio Excelsior, and Jose A. Zatzkin of Radio Portena.

Pedro A. Gagliardo, a civil service employee of long standing, who has held key posts in the Radio Control Board for the past six years, has been transferred to Radio Belgrano as manager. Since he was installed, advertisers have noted some sapolio trends in Argentine radio; they are no longer pressured to place their accounts through brokers masquerading as agencies, mostly relatives of station managers, who collected hefty commissions but gave no service in return.

Some of the talent, which was exiled from radio by Eva Peron's order, is hopeful of recovering former licenses now that her influence is removed. This is unlikely as long as Nicolini and Apold have any say in the matter, as they have sworn to be guided by all her policies and directives.

Certainly at the present time radio is being used extensively to perpetuate her memory. A special news broadcast goes out on the national hook-up every day at 8:25 p.m., the hour of her death, and her speeches and sayings are quoted extensively in most broadcasts. Recently the Mundo network started carrying broadcasts by Fanny Navarro, dramatizing the Eva Peron book, "The Reason of My Life." These have been on the air for four broadcasts at peak listening time, 9:15 to 9:45 p.m.

61 for Intermountain

Salt Lake City, Oct. 7.

Intermountain Network has absorbed the Columbine Network in Colorado to bring its total of affiliate stations to 61.

Record '51 Take less than 1%, but web time sales declined 10%.

Biz Concentration

Concentration of business in metropolitan centers was again emphasized by national and regional advertisers. They spent four out of every five of their advertising dollars in the approximately 900 stations located in 168 metropolitan areas. These stations also reported 60% of the time sales to local advertisers.

The 1,300 non-metropolitan area stations received 77% of their time sales income from local advertisers.

One-half of all the stations had gross income of less than $100,000. Network affiliates in this group netted only $5,000 and non-net stations cleared a bare $3,000 last year.

Another 44% of the stations grossed between $100,000 and $500,000 each. In this group, web affiliates netted an average of $28,000, while the non-net stations made a little over $17,000 each.

Only 116 (6%) of the more than 2,000 radio stations grossed more than $500,000 last year. They were on top of the world. The network affiliates among them netted an average of $216,000 each. The non-affiliated outlets reported an average profit of $159,000.

All net figures are before taxes.

For the first time, the proportion of AM stations losing money was higher in TV markets than in areas without TV. Non-network affiliates in TV markets were the hardest hit among the stations.

will be made to bring the viewer into each show as an active participant.

Femme actress' segment will be titled "One Woman's Experience." For the initialer, the story will be "Never Let Me Go," starring Mildred Clinton and scripted by Virginia Radcliffe. Actor's segment, titled "One Man's Experience," will have "Two Young Lovers" as the original story, with John Griggs starred and Chris Riland scripting. Each week will spotlight a different story.

DuMont's initial entry into daytime programming occurred Nov. 1, 1947, when the web took the air at 7 a.m. cross-the-board and remained on through the day. It operated on that basis for almost a year before cutting back to its present schedule.

is talking in terms of a 39-week renewal, if NBC can open up a time segment.

J. Walter Thompson, which was involved in the "Peepers" show as the agency on the Ford account, has also fallen heir to two other "summertime properties" that are now integrated into the regular fall programming rosters. These are Patti Page and Frank Fontaine, now the major headliners on the new JWT-produced musical, "Scott Music Hall," which preems next week for Scott Tissue Co., a Thompson client. Miss Page won her TV chevrons during the summer with a two-a-week song stint for Chlorodent, while Fontaine revealed his potential in the summer fill-in spot for Jack Benny on CBS Radio.

for additional 13-week periods unless the announcer goes back on non-exclusive status after four-weeks' notice before the end of any 13-week cycle.

Trend toward co-op shows, especially in radio, comes in for attention with AFTRA seeking to establish the point that announcer doing the local cut-ins shall be paid the commercial network rate. Local participating shows which carry a single blurb are to be considered commercial shows.

Stations involved in the negotiations are WMAQ and WNBQ (NBC); WENR and WENR-TV (ABC); WGN and WGN-TV (Mutual-Dumont); WBBM (CBS-AM); WBKB (CBS-TV), and WLS (ABC). Negotiating for AFTRA are Ray Jones and Sanford (Bud) Wolff.

'Forced Listening' Fight Still On in D.C.; Court Rule Asked on License

Washington, Oct. 7.

Still battling transit radio as "forced listening," Transit Riders Assn. yesterday (Mon.) asked the U. S. Court of Appeals to overrule an FCC order, dismissing the association's protest against license renewal for station WWDC-FM.

WWDC-FM feeds programs to the radio receivers placed in D. C. buses and trolleys. Transit Riders Assn. originally sought to block radio in public transit vehicles on the ground that "captive audiences" were being deprived of their right not to listen. Case was fought up to the Supreme Court and lost there by the association, which earlier had won a victory in the circuit court.

Association then asked the FCC to hold up the license of WWDC and its FM affiliate. This was turned down by the commission and yesterday's step followed. Association wants the court to rule that a public hearing must be conducted to determine the license renewal. This was granted, without such hearing, on July 10 last.

Claude Palmer, TRA prexy, said "our action is but one phase of a continuous and vigorous drive to free the captive audience. We know that more people than ever resent forced listening. It denies them the right to choose their own radio programs or to ride in peace. We have received many pledges of support, and we intend to fight this public nuisance with every weapon at our command—and they are considerable."

FCC Spurs Ruling In WJZ-KOB Case

Washington, Oct. 7.

FCC last week extended the authorization of KOB, Albuquerque, to operate on 770 kc. at 50 kw daytime and 25 kw nighttime for six months. Commission also removed 12-year-old case, involving KOB and WJZ, N.Y., from the clear channel file and will act on it separately.

That means long-standing litigation may be wrapped up before year's end.

PHILLY AREA PROFS BOW 3D 'COLLEGE' YEAR

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

"WFIL-TV University of the Air," award-winning series of adult education programs, launched its third year yesterday (6) with a full schedule of telecast courses conducted by faculty members of colleges and universities in this area.

Series is presented Monday through Friday, 11:10 a.m. to 12 noon, and is divided into 20 and 30-minute periods. Dr. Roy K. Marshall, educational director of the Philadelphia Inquirer stations, is the producer, and works closely with a special administrative committee comprised of representatives picked by the cooperating institutions.

Schools taking part in the first of the two 15-week semesters include Ursinus College, Lincoln U., Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and Science, Drexel Institute of Technology, Franklin Institute, Temple U., Franklin & Marshall College, Pennsylvania Military College, Philadelphia Board of Education, Muhlenberg College and Rider College.

Standard Transcription Changes Mind, Selling Library to Stations

Standard Radio Transcription Service, which had been planning dissolution several months ago because costs were climbing too rapidly and business was slumping, has now reversed its decision. Outfit instead has started to sell its library outright to radio stations around the country, and reports the move has been so successful that it will continue in business on that basis. Standard is believed to be the only radio transcription firm to sell, rather than lease, its product.

Standard's library now includes 561 separate disks, embracing more than 5,000 musical selections, voice tracks, theme and occasional music, sound effects, etc. Stations are permitted to buy the library either in whole or in part, with prices ranging downwards from a $5 charge for a double-faced disk containing 10 selections. Standard's move to sell to stations outright was originally contested by the Music Publishers Protective Assn., which ruled that stations buying in that way would be forced to pay mechanical fees. MPPA exec Harry Fox has since okayed the deal, agreeing to derive all such fees from standard alone.

In addition to its library, Standard also has two package shows on ETs, which it will continue selling to stations or advertisers on a per-play basis. These include the Leo Durocher-Laraine Day show and "World's Best Seller," a series of human interest stories taking place in modern times but based on biblical themes. Standard is under the same management as United TV Programs, indie vidfilm syndication outfit.

WDTV Pacts Cohens For Pitt's Mr. & Mrs. TVer

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Pittsburgh's first hometown Mr. and Mrs. program tees off over WDTV next week when Harold V. Cohen, drama-movie editor and columnist of the morning Post-Gazette and VARIETY mugg here, and his wife, Stephanie Diamond, radio and teevee actress, launch a twice-weekly series labeled "Conversation Piece." They'll discuss legit, films, books and other topics of interest.

Cohens will be on for 15 minutes every Tuesday and Thursday at 2 o'clock, with programs being packaged by DuMont station for participation sponsorship. Format is to be similar to a radio quarter-hour they did last year on KDKA for Duquesne Brewing Co.

Daytime Indie for Sale

Memphis, Oct. 7.

WFAK, Memphis' newest daytime indie, which went on the air here last December, is up for sale. Several w.k. Memphis businessmen including former U. S. Open golf champion Dr. Cary Middlecoff are dickering with Frank Keegan, owner and operator of the station.

In addition to Dr. Middlecoff, the group includes E. C. Krausnick, Jr., veepee of the Tennessee Brewing Co., of this city; Dr. George A. Coors, Attorney Dunlap Cannon and advertising exec Tom O'Ryan.

GRIESEDIECK TO BACK CARDINALS IN 9TH YEAR

St. Louis, Oct. 7.

For the ninth consecutive season, the Griesedieck Bros. Brewing Co. will sponsor the radio broadcasting of all games played by the St. Louis Cardinals during 1953. Announcement of the deal, engineered by Ruthrauff & Ryan, was made during the last game of the 1952 season, during which the Cardinal club finished in third place.

Although the local paid attendance during the 1952 season dropped from 1,013,429 to 913,222, a loss of 100,207, the club is trying to expend its midwest web that includes about 60 stations in seven states. Harry Carey, who does the play-by-play, will return to the mike for his ninth season, and Gus Mancuso, who does the analyzing, will start his third year.

No announcement has been made whether the Falstaff Brewing Co., another local sudsmaker, will bankroll the games of the St. Louis Browns next season. Although finishing seventh in the American League, the Browns' 1952 paid attendance was 224,966 better than during the previous season.

Framer's 19 a Week

With the debut of "Double or Nothing" on CBS-TV Monday afternoon (6), indie packager Walt Framer became probably the busiest producer in radio or TV. He now has 19 different editions a week of three packages airing on NBC and CBS.

In addition to "Double," which goes Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, Framer also produces Big Payoff," aired five afternoons a week on NBC-TV. His "Strike It Rich" is aired cross-the-board on CBS-TV and on the same web Wednesday nights in a separate half-hour version. And the audio portion of the daytime "Strike It" is played back the following morning on NBC radio, for the total of 19 shows.

La.'s New AM Station

New Orleans, Oct. 7.

Permit for a new AM radio station in Baton Rouge, La., was granted to Capital City Broadcasting Co. by FCC last week. Stanley W. Ray, general manager, said. Station will operate with 1,000 watts power on 1,250 kilocycles, and is third operated by Ray and partner, Jules J. Paglin.

Call letters of new station will be WXOK.

Chi Stations, Agencies Relax After Five-Day Elevator Strike Snafu

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Operations are back to normal today (Tues.) at the Chi radio and TV stations and the upper story ad agencies hit by the five-day elevator strike that ended yesterday (Mon.).

All the skyscraper radio-TV plants affected by the walkout were able to maintain regular operating schedules under a ruling by the Elevator Operators Union that provided service for engineering and technical personnel. But regular office work was cut to the bone with the resultant logjam of paper work.

Hardest hit were the upstairs agencies, many of them housed in the top levels of the Civic Opera House, Field Bldg., Wrigley Bldg. and Palmolive Bldg. Several of the ad shops set up emergency headquarters in Loop hotels to handle the essential work. With bulk of the major agencies' staffs down to the bare minimum, time buying was practically at a standstill.

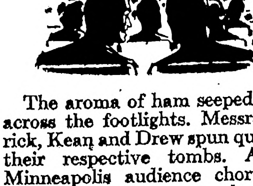
ABC's Central Division with its 16th floor offices and its 42nd floor studios in the Civic Opera House was put on an emergency basis the first day of the strike, but was able to program without interruption. CBS, in the Wrigley Bldg., got by okay, since its offices and studios are only three flights up. The Merchandise Mart, home of NBC, was one of the few major buildings that wasn't struck. WGN's Tribune Tower was also unaffected.

Indie tele station WBKB, occupying the 11th and 12th floors of the State-Lake Bldg., as well as the various indie AM stations, limped through with only minor irritations.

WCFL, owned and operated by the Chi Federation of Labor, parent body for the striking elevator operators, was saved from some possible embarrassment had the strike not been called off. Indie is housed on the 20th floor of the Furniture Mart, which was due to be shut down yesterday (Mon.). To avoid any possible violation of picket line protocol, the labor station rented an emergency studio from the nearby United Broadcasting plant.

Albany—George Miller, sports director of WPTR since the station went on the air in 1948, has been given the additional post of production manager. Naomi Rector, traffic supervisor has been made assistant program director, and Bob Austin, announcer, night program supervisor.

Nat (McCue) Finney disinfects John (Bensinger) Sherman in pre-curtain horseplay at a performance of "The Front Page."



"OF COURSE HE'S NO BARRYMORE ...BUT THEN COULD BARRYMORE EDIT A NEWSPAPER?"

What makes a newspaper great?

The aroma of ham seeped gently across the footlights. Messrs. Garrick, Kean and Drew spun quietly in their respective tombs. Another Minneapolis audience chortled in anticipation, then sat enchanted as the curtain rose in the Old Log Repertory Theatre. For the third time in Upper Midwest drama history Ben Hecht's and Charles MacArthur's "The Front Page" came to life with an amateur cast of genuine professional newspaper people recruited from the staffs of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune.

There were Nat Finney, Pulitzer Prize-winning editorial editor of the Star, barking staccato commands with side-of-the-mouth proficiency in the part of the veteran city hall reporter . . . John Sherman, drama critic of the Star, employing the built-in wince common to his calling in the role of Bensinger, the neurotic newsman . . . Virginia Safford, Star and Tribune society columnist, reveling in the suds-slopped character of a mop-toting scrubwoman. In all, fifteen Star and Tribune staffers strode the boards, swapping some of the stage's fastest and funniest dialogue. The audience loved it. It was the greatest triumph of type casting since Mergenthaler.

This year's Old Log production of "The Front Page" is the third since 1948, when John Sherman persuaded a little group of stage-struck reporters to sign on for the original busman's holiday. Rehearsals were conducted in the Star and Tribune's newsrooms where the actors brushed up on cues and threw lines to each other between stories. Graduates of the MS and T School of the Drama are now numerous enough to populate a stage for "South Pacific" (and probably would at the drop of a fedora).

Whenever fun's a-popping in the Upper Midwest, from amateur theatricals to parades and celebrations . . . or whenever worthwhile civic enterprises need support or leadership . . . Minneapolis Star and Tribune staff members are invariably found in the vanguard of volunteers —another reason why these best-read newspapers hold the appreciation, warm regard and respect of the great region which they serve.

PITT'S TWO-STATION CONFLICT ON N.D. GAME

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Town's No. 1 indie station, WWSW, has just closed a deal with the Irish Football Network to air all of the remaining Notre Dame games this season, and that brings up an unusual situation here this Saturday (11). That's when University of Pittsburgh plays the Irish at South Bend.

Pitt's clashes, both at home and abroad are aired commercially over KDKA, which means that the meeting between the Panthers and Notre Dame will be carried here by not just one but two stations.

WWSW is again carrying play-by-play accounts of all of the Pittsburgh Steelers pro games, with veteran sportscaster Joe Tucker calling them direct from the field of play. Tucker has just chalked up 17 years of service at the station.

Boerst to Expand Spot Radio Report

James M. Boerst, publisher of Executives Radio-TV Service, plans expansion of the Rorabaugh Report on Spot Radio Advertising which he bought last week from N. Charles Rorabaugh.

Boerst, whose firm puts out a semi-annual time buyers directory and the AM-TV FACTuary, a quarterly, has changed the name of the Rorabaugh AM report to Spot Radio Report. Reason is that Rorabaugh will continue to publish his TV spot report separately.

Since March, Boerst has been associate publisher of the Rorabaugh AM report. Because TV spot biz is expanding as new stations come on the air, Rorabaugh decided to devote full efforts to the video bulletin. Info on TV spot is collected from stations themselves, while data on AM comes from the ad agencies.

Boerst told Variety that he has added 11 agencies to the list reporting and picked up 54 new subscribers in the past month. He said that spot radio is in a healthy, growing state and that even in TV areas it is developing.

Kovacs' SRO

"Kovacs Unlimited," one of several daytime strips on WCBS-TV, the CBS video web's N. Y. flagship, will have 45 commercial spots aired weekly for the two weeks starting Monday (13). Jackpot makes the show SRO, giving it a maximum of nine spots daily for five days.

Ernie Kovacs, star of the show, is currently trying to line up a system to squeeze a few more sponsors in, so that all he'll have to do is open and close the proceedings each day.

Candidate Pull

a major campaign speech could easily determine the size of the audience. If Gov. Adlai Stevenson's backers bought time on the full NBC video web, he might play to some 60 stations, whereas if Dwight Eisenhower's forces utilized the ABC or DuMont TV webs, they could clear a much fewer number of markets.

By the same token, the competition confronted on radio or TV by the candidates would also have to be taken into account, and thus could confuse any attempt to measure their popularity. If one of the two nominees bought time opposite a top-rated show such as "I Love Lucy," for example, it would be expected that his ratings wouldn't match. And if his opponent aired a speech opposite a lower-rated network program, he might get higher ratings but actually might not be as popular to the voters.

Also to be taken into account is the time preempted for a major speech. If either candidate were able to buy the time on CBS video usually occupied by "Lucy," it would be expected that he would automatically pick up most of the 10,000,000-odd viewers usually tuned into "Lucy," which would give an unfair picture of his popularity. Any rating, consequently, would bear no relation to voters' sentiments or to the context of his speech.

Because of these factors, the major rating services are holding off until the campaign swings into the week preceding the election, when public excitement is expected to be at a key pitch so that most of the confusing points will be ruled out. American Research Bureau, for one, expects to start rating the two candidates during the first week in November.

L. A. Hearings

inflicting "tremendous suffering" on himself and his family as a result of the "conspiracy between the committee and the producers association." Jackson and Doyle in shouted retorts denied various allegations by the witnesses. One of the latter charged there was no evidence of espionage and sabotage in the film industry, to which Jackson snapped: "There is ample evidence that a great deal of funds for espionage and sabotage came out of the motion picture industry."

All witnesses declined to answer on constitutional grounds and barraged the committee with criticism, most of it based on previous Jackson statements, including his expressed hope of "no reprisals" to the wife of a friendly witness last week.

Those testifying Monday, in addition to Max and Perlin, included performers Dorothy Comingore, Lynn Witney, Annette Harper, Stanley Waxman, Herman Waldman and David Ellis; writers Gene Stone, Harmon Alexander, William Wolff, Dr. Oner Barker, and Attorney Lion Turret.

Burrows Cited

At Thursday's session Paul Marion, a screen and radio writer, told of a Commy meeting at the home of Alvin Hammer attended by Ben Margolis, Karen Morley, Lloyd Gough and Marc Lawrence.

Owen Vinson, writer and radio director, pointed the finger at 27 names, including Abe Burrows, although the latter had testified before the committee in 1951 that he had never been a member of the party and had expressed his hatred of Communism.

Others named by Vinson were Louis and Jeanette Schofield, and Louis and Ida Turkel, all of Chicago; Ken Pettus, Billy Wolff, Harmon Alexander, Gene Stone, Jack Robinson and Mary Robinson, writers; Stanley Waxman, David Ellis, Lynn Whitney, Annette Harper, Ed Max, Nina Klowden, Herman Waldman, Georgia Backus and Lee Barrie, performers; Irving White and Margaret Gruen, screenwriters; Art Shapiro, publicist; Ben Polin, photographer; Mitchell Lindemann, director; Naomi Robeson, an executive, and Elaine Gonda, affiliated with a transcription firm.

Margolis, meanwhile, announced that a conspiracy suit would be filed soon against eight major studios, charging a blacklist of 15 people. They include Anne Revere, Gale Sondergaard, Michael Wilson, Howard Da Silva, Paul Perlin, Don Gordon, Herta Uerkvitz, Edward Huebsch, Paul Jarrico, Robert Lees, Alfred L. Levitt, Abraham Polonsky, Robert L. Richards, Louise Rousseau and Waldo Salt.

demonstrated at the 20th home-office screening room earlier in the year.

Equipment has now been taken out and reassembled to the Fox-Movietone labs. Technicians are at work designing a scanner to permit transmission of color pix as well as "live" stuff. Demonstrations of any of the color TV systems shown so far never included film pickups.

Spokesman at 20th reveals that exhibs are showing lively interest in Eidophor but that the company is taking no orders pending determination of price. He added that, on a mass production basis, the Eidophor projector would be competitive with other theatre TV systems. Original plans to install Eidophor at the Roxy, N. Y., have been abandoned for the moment pending availability of additional units.

TV-LESS NEVADA GETS 'PIPED IN' SERIES

Reno, Oct. 7.

Television made its first appearance in Nevada last week when the Riverside Hotel of Reno made special arrangements for a closed circuit telecast of the World Series, viewed on 33 sets in the hotel, casino and theatre-restaurant.

About 3,000 persons daily saw the Series in an extremely clear picture as beamed from the microwave station atop Mount Rose, about 35 miles away. The cost for installing the operation was $8,500. Before the operation is completed, the bill is expected to reach between $20,000 and $25,000.

L'ville Beer Coin For Churchill Downs Meet

Louisville, Oct. 7.

WHAS-TV, with the same crew which last spring originated the coast-to-coast televising of the Kentucky Ferby for CBS-TV, will cover the fall race meeting at Churchill Downs. In addition to the same four-camera, live-coverage of the meeting's four stage races, WHAS-TV film cameramen will cover the 18 feature races to be shown at 5:55 p.m. (CST) the same afternoon as the running.

Falls City Brewing Co., Inc., Louisville, will bankroll the extensive coverage, which runs from Oct. 27 through Nov. 15.

D. C. Female B'casters Elect Nancy Osgood

Washington, Oct. 7.

Nancy Osgood, director of femme activities and top woman radio-TV personality for WRC and WNBW, NBC affiliates, was named president of the D.C. chapter of American Women in Radio and Television at group's first meeting of the season.

Other officers elected to head group for the year are: first v.p., Capt. Pat Griffith Mowrer, radio branch of Public Information Office, Dept. of Defense; 2d v.p., Florence S. Lowe, Washington bureau of Variety; secretary, Betty Doolittle, NARTB; treasurer, Dorothy Carr, WMAL-ABC.

WHB'S FREE-FOR-ALL FOR TYRO DISK JOCKS

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

WHB is opening its mikes to amateur disk jockeys in a promotion program which will continue through the fall and winter. John Schilling, manager, has designated Saturday night as pop music night, and Sunday for longhair jocks.

Applicants provide a list of 30 records to be played, then tape their air stint in advance. This allows the guest jock to stay at home or invite in friends or neighbors to hear the show.

Series has been kicked off with several prominent localities handling the shows, among them Leo Barry, president of the Kansas City Blues Fan Club, Frankie Trumbauer, former trombonist with pop orchs, Sam Martin, dairy products magnate, on the pop music sessions.

Longhair series have been done by Richard Wangerin, business manager, and Hans Schweiger, conductor, of the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra.

Memphis' WMCT Set For 1953 Spending Spree

Memphis, Oct. 7.

WMCT, Memphis' only TV outlet, has mapped plans for a spending spree of its television operation next year. Henry Slavick, who manages the TV and AM operations, announced that $300,000 will be spent in WMCT's expansion program early in 1953.

The FCC has already granted the Memphis NBC outlet permission to add 300 feet to its tower, which will raise it to 1,050 feet.

Teamsters Union TV's Confab for Public

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

In a novel pub-relations experiment, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, holding its annual convention here next week, is investing approximately $10,000 in video coverage of the event, to show the public a union convention at work. Altogether 5½ hours will be telecast over KTTV, three and one-half on Monday, and two on Oct. 17 when officers are elected.

On Monday's program will be union prexy Dan Tobin, exec veepee Dave Beck, Governor Warren and Edward Arnold. Because of the video influence, conclave moves to the Boulevard Theatre during the teeveed portion, so that cameras can better cover the event. Other sessions are planned at the Statler Hotel. Kine will be made for various chapters of IBT in the U. S.

BUILD NEW DISKERS FOR P.A.'S

Philharmonic '51-'52 Deficit at 165G; 150G Drive Set; B'cast Gain Only 35G

Despite a couple of unexepected financial windfalls, which will help offset its increased operating costs, the N.Y. Philharmonic-Symphony will open its 111th season Oct. 16 with its problem of annual deficits still unsolved.

Symph had an estimated deficit of $165,000 last season ('51-52), as against a loss of $110,000 the year before. Deficit for the '52-'53 season is expected to go higher than last year's 165G, due to some special costs. With this in mind, management is counting strongly on success of the Friends of the Philharmonic drive, which opens Nov. 13. In its second annual campaign, Friends hopes to raise $150,000 for the orch.

Symph has scheduled some unusual choral and operatic works in concert form this season, to account for the extra costs anticipated. The Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" will cost $3,000 to $4,000 extra to do; the "Boris Godunov" excerpts, the same. When director D'mitri Mitropoulos originally planned the U.S. preem of Darius Milhaud's opera, "Christopher Columbus," extra cost was figured at about $2,000 or $3,000.

Since then, the orch and American Guild of Musical Artists made a pact by which one of the three choruses used by the Philharmonic this season would be a unionized AGMA group, so that the Milhaud work will cost the orch an extra $12,000 to stage. It will be one of the most expensive things the Philharmonic has ever done; the chorus alone will cost $4,000 to $5,000.

Other special works are skedded, and these, plus extra rehearsals involved, increases in printing costs, etc., will hike the symph's '52-'53 budget.

Orch's first unexpected windfall was the lifting last season of the Federal 20% amusement tax, which sum the Philharmonic has since retained. Orch, however, didn't get the benefit of the tax gain until last Nov. 1, while some subscribers refused to let them re-

5 OUT OF 7 TOP TUNES ON 'PARADE' ARE BMI

Broadcast Music, Inc., which has surged to the forefront of the hit lists over the past two years, currently has five out of the seven top tunes making the Lucky Strike "Hit Parade" radio and video editions. Current standing of BMI-licensed tunes is the strongest to date on the show, although BMI firms have been riding with three or four numbers on the "Hit Parade" in recent months.

Top BMI entries are "You Belong To Me" (Ridgeway), "Auf Wiederseh'n" (Hill & Range), "I Went To Your Wedding" (St. Louis), "Half As Much" (Acuff-Rose) and "Jambalaya" (Acuff-Rose). Both of the latter tunes, incidentally, were penned by country cleffer Hank Williams, who was also responsible for last year's click "Cold Cold Heart."

Two of the seven tunes on the "Hit Parade" licensed by the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers are "Somewhere Along the Way" (United) and "Wish You Were Here" (Chappell).

Disk Publicist Joins Progressive as Pro Mgr.

Nat Shapiro, N. Y. disk flack, has stepped into the music publishing field as professional manager of Progressive Music, in which he's a partner with Herb Abramson and Ahmet Ertegun. Latter two are the owners of Atlantic Records, an indie diskery which has been clicking consistently in the blues and rhythm field.

Progressive Music has been a b&r operation under Atlantic's aegis but will be activated in the pop field with the addition of Shapiro.

Ph.D. Platters

Columbus, Oct. 7.

The wax business is getting into college yearbooks. Ohio State University's Makio to be issued next June is being plugged as "the Talking Makio," since it will include a 7-inch 45 rpm recording of highlights of the school year. The OSU yearbook is the first in the nation to try the stunt.

Record will include voices of persons figuring in the year's main events on the campus, such as Howard L. Bevis, OSU president; Wood Hayes, OSU Buckeyes' coach, and visiting VIPs.

Tooters Union Nixes Aid As 2 Toronto Symph Execs Resign Over 'Red' Ousters

Toronto, Oct. 7.

Though two longtime board directors of the Toronto Symphony resigned because of decision of John Elton, general manager, to fire six members of the orchestra who were refused entry into the United States for a Detroit engagement, the Canadian Musicians Assn. have refused to come to the aid of the ousted sextet.

While a vociferous minority, with the usual letter-heads and prominent advertisements in newspapers, is currently protesting the firing of the six as "American dictatorship of Canadian and breach of civil liberties," the appeal to the Canadian Musicians Union has been turned down, with the union refusing any intervention. They have also appealed to Caesar Petrillo, with decision pending. Other 79 members of the Toronto Symphony refuse any comment or sympathetic action on their colleagues' dismissal.

Meanwhile, the Canadian Congress of Labor (of which the Musicians Union is an affiliate), in convention here, also has turned down a minority proposal that the six musicians be reinstated. Lester Pearson, Secretary of State for Canada, says that his "formal enquiries," as presented in Washington to the U. S. State Department, had brought the declaration that the U. S. decision must stand; that "there has to be some way of preventing the admission of known Communists," this presumably under the McCarran Act covering denied entry to America.

Decca Limits Edition On Beethoven Sonatas

Marking the second anni of its longhair Gold Label series, Decca Records has prepped a special merchandise plan for its release of the complete Beethoven Sonatas for Violin and Piano. Album was waxed by Joseph Fuchs, violin, and Arthur Balsam, piano.

In a move to hypo the Gold Label series as well as the Beethoven album, Decca has packaged the platters with copies of original edition of the text. Package also will contain photos and drawings of the composer as well as a special commentary by musicologist Donald W. MacArdle. The material has been bound into a 52-page brochure.

Album and brochure, which has been limited to 2,500 copies, will be peddled at $25 per set, containing six platters. Single platters will be put on the market at a later date.

Miller's Coast Sessions

Mitch Miller, Columbia Records artists and repertoire chief, is heading for Hollywood next weekend for extensive recording sessions with Col's Coast artists. He'll be gone two weeks.

UNKNOWNS GET AGENCY PUSH

The disk industry, which steadily has been topping all other show biz media in introducing new names to the public, is continuing at a clicko pace in unearthing tyro talent. Wax showcasing for the young singers is now being done predominately by the indie labels. Agency men have been alerted to keep tabs on all new releases so that they can pact the artist as soon as the disk's impact on the market can be ascertained.

Music Corp. of America and General Artists Corp., especially, have been pacting the newcomers as soon as they hit the wax market. Both MCA and GAC have been lining up small nitery bookings for these artists and bide their time until the diskings break them into the big coin class a la Johnnie Ray and Al Martino. The agencies work closely with the artist's diskery, getting latter to push the platters in territories in which the singer is playing. The diskeries get the local disk jockeys to lay on the platter and the area distrib generally works with the artist on a concentrated promotion drive.

Some of the newcomers who are being pushed into the upper money brackets are Alan Dean, who's currently riding high with his etching of "Luna Rossa," on the M-G-M label; Sunny Gale, who scored with "Wheel of Fortune" on BBS and is now etching for Victor, and Tommy Edwards who's building steadily via his M-G-M releases.

Among the flock of young disk artists who currently are being developed by GAC are Buddy Costa (Pyramid), Cliff Ayres (Emerald), Sandy Solo (Abbey), Frank Stevens (Gramercy), Danny Sutton (Federal), Vinni Di Campo (Coral), and Jackie Jocko (Mercury). Diskers in the MCA stable are Bob Anthony (Derby), Jilla Webb (M-G-M), Joe Costa (Victor), Herb George (Top Ten), and Dick Lee (Essex).

Most of the singers listed already have made some noise in the disk field and have developed a solid partisan following. Although they're not yet in the top coin brackets, the agencies have been lining up a steady string of small nitery bookings and the cafe operators are all eager to get one of the newer disk names for one or two-week bookings. The agencies also have been able to pick up extra coin for the young diskers via tele guest shots.

BOB WEISS JOINS CAP AS EXEC EUROPEAN REP

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Bob Weiss is selling his publicity biz here to join Capitol Records Oct. 27 as exec European rep. Weiss inked a two-year pact with Cap prexy Glenn Wallichs, one feature providing Weiss' pay on a tax-free basis. Headquartering in Paris, Weiss will prowl Continental capitals searching tunes and talent for Capitol and will also try to hypo Cap's European sales via various releasing deals.

He will report to Sandor Porges, director of Cap's international department, in New York. Weiss, 30, becomes one of waxdom's youngest execs. He will report to Hal Cook in N. Y. before going to Paris.

Sarah Vaughan Booked For 1st European Tour

Sarah Vaughan will head out on her first European tour next year. She will tee off her European trek with a February date at the London Palladium and follow with a series of bookings in the British Provinces. She also is slated for a flock of concert appearances on the Continent. Tour will run about 12 weeks.

Miss Vaughan currently is costarred with Nat (King) Cole and the Stan Kenton Orch in the "Biggest Show of 1952."

Hartford Fete Establishes Industry Co-op Pattern; Study Impact on Sales

Hartford, Oct. 7.

The Greater Hartford Record Festival, which last week concluded a series of four varied concerts and several promotional endeavors, proved one thing if nothing else. That one thing is that the members of the recording industry can work together in unison for the common good.

Some 43 companies are members of the Record Industry Assn. of America. It was also the first time in the history of local record sales that all seven record distribs here had ever acted in unison. Oddly enough, it was the first time they got to know each other. Through the efforts of Joe Martin, promotion manager for RIAA, the seven distribs were brought together and introed to each other.

What will happen as a result of the festival is a matter of conjecture. There is a lot of evaluating to be done, with a summary of the results of the Hartford experiment to be brought before the board of directors of the RIAA sometime this month. Martin is due back here within a week for a series of confabs with distribs and retailers, plus other surveying, to determine the effects of the festival on record sales. Will also seek to determine the effect of this promotional endeavor on the public, whether it incited an interest toward future purchase of turntables and records.

The future of some 20 proposed nationwide festivals hinges on the results of the evaluation. In the meantime, the records boys are referring to the fete as the "Great Hartford Experiment."

The festival week was split up into four concerts, each representing a segment of the record business. They were classical, folk, popular and kiddies. Weakest one in the matter of drawing power was folk music night. This one got the greatest amount of promotion. First night, featuring classical music, and third night, featuring pops, drew the heaviest.

Opening show was tabbed as "Artists Night" and featured some

Disk Crix As Index

Index to the continuing growth of interest in records is provided by the number of publications regularly running disk review columns and features.

Increase is at the rate of about 10 weekly, according to requests for information received by the RCA Victor.

Future aim of record industry: Record supplements similar to present book supplements featured by N. Y. Times and leading metropolitan Sunday papers.

Capitol Wins Injunction Vs. Mercury on Release Of Telefunken Catalog

Decision in suit brought in Federal Court by Capitol Records against Mercury Records over the distribution of Telefunken disks was handed last week by Judge Vincent L. Leibell in favor of Cap. Cap had asked for an injunction and an accounting of profits on the Telefunken platters peddled by Merc.

According to Cap, they received exclusive rights in the U. S. to the Telefunken platters in a pact inked with the German diskery in 1948. Merc had received its masters through a state-owned firm in Czechoslovakia. The state-owned operation had taken over the platters from the now defunct Czech diskery, Ultrasong, which had pacted with Telefunken before World War II for the distribution of its platters in Czechoslovakia. According to Cap the Czech firm had no right to license its masters for distribution outside their country.

Judge Leibell's decision also awards Cap the payment of legal costs.

Coast Tooters to Vote On Local Unity in Dec.

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Long discussed merger of two Coast American Federation of Musicians' locals comes up for a vote by the larger of the two, Local 47, on Dec. 15. Members will be asked to decide whether they wish to absorb Negro local 767. Latter has been negotiating for a merger for six months but has nixed suggestions that it dissolve before the merger is effected and has asked that members be admitted into 47 without payment of an initiation fee.

On the latter point, 47 has offered to cut the regular fee of $100 to $50, but hasn't indicated any willingness to permit gratis entry.

Bullet's New Diskery

Jim Bullet, operator of the Bullet label several years ago, is opening a new diskery with a J-B label in New York. Bulleit clicked several years ago with the Francis Craig etching of "Near You" and recently has been working as a disk distributor in the Nashville area.

New company will operate in the blues and rhythm field with such artists as Jimmy Mathis, Vivian Verson and Jimmy Smith.

David Rose Up

Santa Anita, Oct. 7.

With the racing season over here the Santa Anita track has been taken over by the David Rose orch for a series of Friday night pop concerts.

Rose, an M-G-M Records protege, brings in a guest conductor weekly to share the podium.

JIM TONEY UPPED TO RCA DISTRIB CHIEF

James M. Toney, RCA Victor's public relations chief, has been promoted to the post of director of distribution for the consumer products division of the company, effective Nov. 1. Toney's new spot follows by two years his appointment as the division's publicity chief in 1950. He has been with Victor since 1943.

It is understood that Julius Haber, now director of sales and advertising for the company's tube department, will step into the top public relations job. Toney's new appointment fills a post in the Victor echelon setup that has been vacant for the past year.

N.Y. Court Dismisses Another Ed Vance Suit

Edward Vance, Missouri songwriter and the most active litigant in the music biz, was thrown for his 11th straight legal loss in N. Y. Federal Court last week when Judge Irving Kaufman dismissed a part of an antitrust suit brought by Vance against numerous publishing firms and the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. The court dismissed Vance's complaint against ASCAP, Edwin H. Morris Music, Duchess Music and Main Street Songs.

In tossing out the suit, Judge Kaufman nevertheless permitted Vance to file an amended complaint. The new papers, the court admonished, must be "simple, concise and direct." Vance had charged monopoly and conspiracy under the antitrust laws, with particular reference to an alleged control of ASCAP by the motion picture publishing subsids. It was the 11th time Vance had filed suit in Federal Court against various segments of the music industry.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Vera Lynn: "Yours"-"The Love of My Life" (London). Vera Lynn, who's been riding high for the past couple of months with "Auf Wiederseh'n Sweetheart," has another winner in "Yours." Tune, adapted from the Latino "Quiereme Mucho," has been identified with Miss Lynn in Great Britain since 1947 and the platter should score in the U.S. market. Miss Lynn gives a standout melodic reading. A group of British sailors, soldiers and airmen supply a stirring choral assist. The London flip is a pleasant item which shows off her fine piping technique. It'll have a tough time, however, bucking its mate for spinning time.

Tony Martin: "Dance of Destiny"-"Sleepy Time Gal" (Victor). This adaptation of "The Habanera" theme from Bizet's opera, "Carmen," gives Tony Martin a clicko slice that'll payoff with plenty of jock and juke spins. It's a class platter handled with top technique by Martin and Henri Rene's orch. Arrangement and vocal blend the exciting melody and a crafty lyric for top commercial appeal. Martin's workover of the oldie, "Sleepy Time Gal," on the reverse rates plays.

Guy Mitchell-Mindy Carson: "That's A-Why"-"Train of Love" (Columbia). Mindy Carson, who recently switched to the Columbia label from Victor, steps out strong on her first coupling on which she's paired with Guy Mitchell. Vocal styles blend easily and platter shows them off to advantage. "That's A-Why," a refreshing item penned by Bob Merrill, has the best chances for hit bracket slotting. Its catchy beat and cute lyric are delivered with an ingratiating zest. Flip side, too, shows them off in appealing form.

Larry Douglas: "Silk 'n Satin"-"You're As Young As You Feel" (Abbey). Larry Douglas looms as a potent entry in the male vocalist sweepstakes with his waxing of "Silk 'n Satin." Douglas has a warm vocal style pegged for the femme trade and this side could take off for him. It's a neat tune with a charming lyric and could be one of those left field items which the disk jockeys like to drive home. Bottom deck is a bouncy item which shows Douglas in a lighter mood.

Ella Fitzgerald: "My Favorite Song"-"Walkin' By The River" (Decca). "My Favorite Song," lilting tune which has been getting a wide diskery coverage, shows off Ella Fitzgerald in top form. Miss Fitzgerald's reading makes for delightful listening but Ames Bros. Coral waxing will be difficult to overtake. Same applies to Gisele MacKenzie's lively workover of "Song" on Capitol. Miss Fitzgerald clicks solidly on the Decca flip with the oldie, "Walkin' By The River."

Alan Dale: "Laugh! Clown! Laugh!"-"Toddling The Todalo" (Coral). "Laugh! Clown! Laugh!" is a slow, moody ballad which permits Alan Dale to display the emotional side of his vocal style. It comes off for okay results and should raise his stock with the teenage disk buyers who've created the vogue for this type of reading. Rates jock spins. Dale changes pace on the flip side with a lively rendition of "Toddling The Todalo," tune which currently is being showcased in the Paramount pic, "Somebody Loves Me." Ray Bloch's orch backing is a sock asset.

Mel Torme: "Casually"-"Anywhere I Wander" (Capitol). Mel Torme gets his best disclick opportunity with this coupling. Blending of standout material and topdrawer vocal treatment should keep both sides moving on the jock and juke level. Torme's treatment of "Casually," a tender song with a slick word pattern, is one of his best jobs in some time. "Anywhere I Wander," Frank Loesser's tune from the Sam Goldwyn pic, "Hans Christian Andersen," is a bigger song which Torme works over for top results.

Jane Froman: "Stay Where You Are"-"Laughing" (Capitol). Jane Froman's rich piping style gets a standout showcasing in "Stay Where You Are." Tune, a slick ballad entry, has been getting lots of diskery coverage and Miss Froman's slice will be hard to top. It'll appeal more to the jocks than the juke trade, however. Miss Froman gives "Laughing," a minor league entry, a major league treatment.

Platter Pointers

Decca has a sock commercial album package in The Four Aces workover of a flock of oldies . . . The Four Knights have a fair slice in "One Way Kisses" (Capitol) . . . Marjane projects plenty of romance into her waxing of "When the World Was Young" (Decca) . . . Percy Faith's instrumental workover of "Amorado" on Columbia rates spins . . . Vaughn Monroe shows up nicely with a timely item tagged "Voters on Parade" (Victor) . . . Ray Bloch has a pleasing side in "The Merry Widow Waltz" (Coral) . . . Pat Cameron works over "Give, Give, Give," another treatment of "The Habanera" theme from "Carmen" for okay results on the indie BBS label . . . Morris Lane has a slick sax solo of "Stairway to the Stars" (Coral) . . . Sauter-Finegan orch scores with a workover of "When Hearts Are Young" (Victor) . . . Dinah Washington has a clicko slice in "Make Believe Dreams" (Mercury) . . . Mantovani's treatment of "Tango Della Luna" should get plenty of spinning time.

Standout folk, western, religious, blues, rhythm, etc.: Dolores Hawkins, "The Key Is In the Door" (Okeh) . . . Roy Acuff, "She Isn't Guaranteed" (Columbia) . . . Merle Travis, "Cannon Ball Rag" (Capitol) . . . Webb Pierce, "Bow Thy Head" (Decca).

Longhair Disk Review

Verdi: "Don Carlo." With Nicola Rossi-Lemeni, Maria Caniglia, Mirto Picchi, Ebe Stignani, Paolo Silveri; Radio Italiana orch and chorus, Fernando Previtali conductor. (Cetra-Soria, 4 LPs, $23.80). First complete recording of the Verdi opera is a stirring rendition of a long-neglected opus. (Manager Rudolph Bing rightfully restored it to the Met Opera repertoire when he took over two years ago, as his season's opener.) The lush, dramatic and melodic score is richly handled by first-rate soloists, aided by fine orchestral and choral backing.

Nicola Rossi-Lemeni, hottest basso of the day (he's appeared this year with the San Francisco Opera and on Ed Sullivan's TV show), is superb as Philip, with his third-act aria, "Dormiro sol nel manto," a terrific rendition. Maria Caniglia, as Elizabeth, is topgrade. So is Ebe Stigmani, as Princess Eboli. Her voice has slipped a bit, but it's still very good, and her "O don fatale" air is richly dramatic. Tenor Mirto Picchi is a stirring Don Carlo, and Paolo Silveri a somewhat metallic but effective Roderigo. Maestro Fernando Previtali has blended them expertly for a first-class album, technically as well as artistically. Bron.

M-G-M Perks With James, Edwards, Mooney Disks

M-G-M Records is moving into its hottest fall-winter season in years with three high riding pop releases. Diskery sales are being sparked by newcomers Joni James and Tommy Edwards and orch leader Art Mooney.

Miss James is topping the stable with her waxing of "Why Don't You Believe Me." Disk, which has been on the market two weeks, is nearing the 55,000 sales mark. Tommy Edwards is running close with his slice of "You Win Again," a pop treatment of Hank Williams' country tune, also on M-G-M, and Art Mooney is moving in fast with "Lazy River." Initial impact of the Mooney slice indicates that it'll be his first big one since "Four Leaf Clover."

Diskery also is pacing the album field with its soundtrack albums of the Metro filmusicals, "The Merry Widow" and "Lovely To Look At."

Tourel, Liberace to K.C.

Kansas City, Oct. 7.

Liberace and Jennie Tourel have been set to play a concert date with the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra in the Municipal Auditorium Oct. 31-Nov. 1.

Event is the free concert sponsored by the Katz Drug Co., which annually stages the two-day show as a gesture of support for the orch and as publicity for its fall sale.

Just a 'Tip' to Ruth

Champ absent-minded recording artist, if legends are true, was the late George Herman (Babe) Ruth.

The "Bambino," who poled 54 home runs to set the nation agog in 1920, was asked to make a Pathe record telling how he clouted 'em. After reading a corny three-minute talk, Bam, so the story goes, was handed check for $8,000, and tucked it in his inside coat pocket.

He changed clothes and, being man of many garments, didn't put same suit on again for a year. And he didn't remember anything about the check until he attired himself again in his recording date ensemble and happened to reach into that coat pocket.

Eight years later Babe and teammate Lou Gehrig teamed in two-part Perfect record, "Babe and Lou."

RCA's Historic Exhibit Of Disking Memorabilia In Rockefeller Center

As part of its promotional activity in connection with the 75th anni of the disk industry, RCA Victor is presenting an historical exhibit of old records and phonographs in the RCA Exhibition Hall, Rockefeller Center, N. Y. By means of original models and replicas of early equipment, the display traces the growth of the disk industry from the first Thomas A. Edison machine in 1877 to present-day standards.

The main exhibit is being staged in the exhibition hall's Johnny Victor Theatre, with additional historic material also in the street-level room. NBC announcer Mel Brandt handles the commentary for the exhibit, which is being shown five times daily this week.

During each show, Brandt spotlights the progressive development in musical fidelity by contrasting the sounds of the old cylinder releases and the mechanically-recorded platters with current disks. Main pitch is made in behalf of Victor's 45 rpm system, culminating in the extended play (EP) disks which is the focal point of the company's fall-winter promotion.

CORAL TO PROMOTE GUION, FIELD ORCHS

Hopping on the orch waxing upbeat, Coral Records is prepping a drive on its two new band pactees, King Guion and Herbie Fields. Both Guion and Fields were pacted to the diskery last week.

Coral also expects to continue a push on its two other orch properties, Les Brown and Lawrence Welk. The orch hypo will follow the same lines as Columbia's Art Lowry drive and Victor's Sauter-Finegan push.

Palitz to Handle Two Sandy Solo Disk Dates

Morty Palitz, ex-Decca Records artists & repertory topper, has been set by Barry Records, new indie label, to head two waxing dates for singer Sandy Solo. Solo previously had been released on the Abbey label.

Palitz had been negotiating with Solo for the Decca stable just before he exited the firm. No permanent tie-up between Palitz and Barry has been set yet.

Harms, Witmark Awarded $500 in Licensing Suit

Youngstown, Oct. 7.

Judgments totaling $500 have been returned against Louis Tiberio, proprietor of the Tropics Night Club, Youngstown, in favor of Harms Music and M. Witmark Music, which claimed their music was performed at the night spot last year without a license.

The companies were awarded $250 damages plus attorney fees and court costs, in the Cleveland Federal Court. Tiberio failed to answer the complaint that he had allowed unlicensed public performances of "Oh, Lady Be Good," published by Harms, and "Don't Take Your Love from Me," published by Witmark.

Satchmo Toots Horn for LP's As Best Jazz Hypo

The introduction of the long play record several years ago has sparked a jazz renaissance that's steadily been paying off in disk sales. The jazz LPs also have been serving an important cultural function by making the jazz product of the 1920s and '30s available to a wider audience. Before the advent of the 33 rpm disk, old jazz waxings were collector items too expensive for the average buyer. Now, however, the major diskeries are digging into their vaults to bring out LPs of classic jazz waxings as well as recordings of past jazz concerts which had been preserved via tapings.

According to Louis Armstrong, who cut his first side about 30 years ago, "Hepsters want something to save and want to get their money's worth when they shell out their loot at a record shop. The LPs are right up their alley."

The record companies have done a great job in reintroducing the best in jazz styles and names to the new generation, but it's too bad, he added, that those names aren't around today to get the advantage of modern recording studio techniques.

"At sessions in the '20s with King Oliver, Fletcher Henderson and Baby Dodds," he said, "I'd have to put my horn right into the megaphone and blow so that the riff could be heard above the rest of the band. Each tooter would have to move in to get near the meg when his riff came up. Now, the mikes in the studio can pick up each solo stint without having to move the musician from one part of the room to another." Armstrong claims that it's also easier to get a pure sound on wax because of the acoustical layout of the new studios.

Armstrong contends, however, that the diskeries are going wild with their new techniques. "The 'new sounds' are being run into the ground and the public's beginning to tire of them. I did a gimmick bit for Decca with 'Because of You' and let me tell you, Pops, I won't go through that again." Armstrong added that the trouble with many of the young wax artists today is that they're in a hurry to get rich quick. "Down in New Orleans we were taught to take our time," and he added, "you get the same results."

Satchmo Nixes Trick Stuff

He admitted that he doesn't like the "new fangled stuff" that's current in the wax market. "The trick style on records was okay for a while but it ain't no good for personol appearances," he said, "and that's what counts." Armstrong hasn't changed his trumpet or singing style since the New Orleans days—"and that's the way I'm gonna keep it."

Armstrong, who headed for his fifth tour of Europe last week since the end of World War II, said "it's just like going back to New Orleans." The tour, which'll run six weeks, will cover the Continent as well as North Africa. "They go to jazz concerts there," he said, "like we go to football games." He attributed the big jazz following in Europe to the American disks that have been going overseas for the past 25 years. "The Europeans are familiar with every riff you play," he stated, "and you can't jive 'em." "Jazz and longhair," he continued, "are treated the same — and if they like your riff, they'll 'bravo' you to death."

Eupropean musicians have taken their cues from American jazz records, Armstrong admitted, "but a note's a note in any language and if you've got the feeling, the jam's the same."

Granz Pulls $3,900 In Columbus, O., Stand

Columbus, Oct. 7.

Norman Granz' Jazz at the Philharmonic, following less than a week on the appearance of "The Biggest Show of '52" grossed a disappointing $3,900 at $3.50 top in 3,000-seat Memorial Hall here last Tuesday (30).

JATP stars Ella Fitzgerald and features Flip Phillips, Buddy Rich, the Gene Krupa Trio and the Oscar Peterson Trio among others.

A.C. Hotel Wins Court Injunction Vs. AFM Try To Hike Tooters' Scale

Atlantic City, Oct. 7.

A temporary injunction has restrained Local 661 of the Musicians' Protective Assn. from enforcing new scales which would boost musicians' wages in beachfront Shelburne Hotel to from $116 to $146 weekly.

Superior Court Judge Vincent S. Haneman will hear the case finally on Dec. 2 after Philip Monheit, counsel for the Kend Co., operators of the hotel, and Emanuel Hurst, attorney for the musicians (26), were unable to agree on a stipulation of the facts.

According to the complaint, the hotel company is seeking to prevent the union from establishing increased wage rates for Eddie Bradd and his band arising from an amendment to its by-laws which reclassified compensation provisions. The orchestra was engaged on Feb. 19, 1951, and continued under successive contracts at wage rates varying from $85 to $95 weekly, dependent on the length of contracts.

The last contract expired on June 15, 1952, but before that the union applied for and was granted wage boosts by the Wage Stabilization Board to from $90 to $107 weekly. Subsequently the union amended its by-laws and reclassified employment standards whereby separate contracts for playing in different rooms in the hotel were required, which had the effect of boosting the wage range to from $116 to $146 weekly.

Tepper-Brodsky Charged With 'Busybody' Piracy

Songwriting team of Sid Tepper and Roy Brodsky as well as Alamo Music, Inc., were named defendants in an infringement suit filed in New York Federal Court last week by Paul Alter. He charges that the tunesmiths and Alamo pirated his number, "Busybody."

Alamo, according to the complaint, published a song titled "Busybody" subsequent to December, 1951. In asking an injunction, accounting and damages, Alter claims that all three defendants had knowledge of his tune before "Busybody" saw publication.

Emory Davis Pacted For Pitt Symph Post

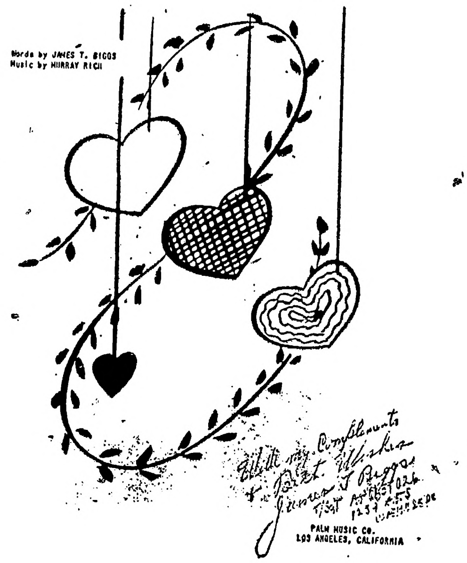
Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Emory Davis, son of bandleader Meyer Davis, has been signed for the Pittsburgh Symphony, as assistant first clarinet and bass clarinet, by William Steinberg, conductor of the symph.

Davis was tied up with his father in N. Y. the past few seasons, fronting and playing in several bands. This will mark his first longhair post.

Joe Heidt doing special promotion for comedienne Anna Russell.

STARVIN' FOR LOVE



This unique titled song has a special universal appeal inside. This has been especially true for some time; while our boys have been continually departing for military bases throughout the world. We know some are being separated from sweethearts, brides to be, yes, even wives.

If time and distance makes the heart grow fonder; then there are certainly a lot of "STARVIN' FOR LOVE" hearts. There are millions with this mutual feeling who would like to share these sentiments together in song.

Now is the time for all good vocalists to come to the aid of these "STARVIN' FOR LOVE" hearts by releasing their sentimental story in song.

Danish Symphony Pacted For 40 Dates in U.S. Bow At Average $4,000 Fee

The Danish National Orchestra, comprising 96 persons, will arrive in N. Y. by air Sunday (12) for its first tour of America. Orch, all Danes, is set for 40 concerts between Oct. 12 and Nov. 25, opening in Norwalk, Conn., closing in Hartford, and going as far west as Chicago in between. Tour will include 10 university dates. Average fee for the orch is $4,000.

Tour, under patronage of King Frederick IX, who occasionally rehearses the orch and conducts it in private, is being booked here by the Coppicus, Schang & Brown division of Columbia Artists Mgt. Norwalk teeoff is in hometown of Columbia's prez, Frederick C. Schang, to mark the 25th anni of Community Concerts in that town, which Schang organized there. Orch will play in N. Y., at Carnegie Hall, Oct. 15.

Tour is not government financed, the orch having raised the needed coin for transportation in a series of benefit concerts at home. There were also some voluntary contributions made. Orch has two conductors, Erik Tuxen and Thomas Jensen, who will alternate on the tour. They'll split the N. Y. concert, however. Orch, in Chi, will be batoned by Nicolai Malko, a former conductor of the group who now resides in the Windy City.

Orch is flying in in two DC's, for what's believed to be the first in toto air mass movement of a symph in history. Group is the orch of the state radio at home, and claims to be the first national radio symph extant. Formed in 1925, it's older than the BBC Symphony or NBC Symphony.

First Femme Player Joins Boston Symph

Boston, Oct. 7.

For the first time in its 72 years existence, the Boston Symphony has inked a femme principal instrumentalist, Miss Doriot Anthony, who takes over as first flutist in place of Georges Laurent, who recently resigned following a 31-year stint with the organization.

Miss Anthony spent the past seven years with the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Toronto Ex-Mayor Succeeds Hughes As CNE Boss, Presaging All-Can. Bill

Toronto, Oct. 7.

After 18 years as general manager of the Canadian National Exhibition, Elwood A. Hughes has been permitted to resign his $15,000 a year job after a persistent campaign headed in recent months by the new mayor of Toronto, Allan Lamport. One of Mayor Lamport's chief election promises was to clean up alleged inefficiency of CNE management and his query of "where is the money going?"

On retirement, Hughes will be paid his full 1953 salary plus a $7,500 pension for life, this immediately arousing the ire of city fathers. Hughes' post will be filled by Hiram E. McCallum, former mayor of Toronto, whom Lamport defeated in the last civic election. No showman, as particularly compared with Hughes' 47 years' association with the CNE (first as sports director and later pressagent, plus the past 18 years as general manager), defeated ex-Mayor McCallum was handed the newly-created job of assistant manager to Hughes, an appointment that brought the general charges of "pork barrel" payoff.

On that extra year's $15,000 salary and the $7,500 pension, Hughes will be called upon for his services as consultant "when available when needed," according to the CNE board's decision. Hughes said he had wanted to resign the CNE managership a couple of years ago and was glad that the board of directors had finally acceded to that request. On final meeting's decision, Hughes left immediately for New York to witness the World Series.

'Nationalistic Aim'

Mayor Lamport and J. A. Northey, CNE president, expressed regret at the parting of the ways and stated that, more than any other individual, Hughes had, in the past four decades, been responsible for bringing the CNE to its present high level. There had been vigorous public criticism of Hughes' actions in his determination to make the expo bigger on the entertainment angles of the 24,000-seat grandstand show and midway, at sacrifice of what some quarters call the fundamental nationalistic aim of the CNE as a mirror of Canadian achievement in agriculture and industry, plus other educational facets.

Hughes was a staunch exponent of the thesis that U. S. headliners would pack the grandstand (at $2.50 top) on such annual draws as Olsen & Johnson, Danny Kaye and Jimmy Durante. (Tony Martin was the '52 topper). On the rising tide of press and public furore demanding an "all-Canadian" motif in the grandstand show, Hughes was finally ousted, particularly on his insistence that Canadian stage talent was incapable of putting on a performance worthy of the CNE's $50,000,000 plant and its heavy tourist draw from states bordering on the Great Lakes.

Satchmo (for Money) SRO In Oslo, So Add 2 Days; European Tour to Follow

Oslo, Oct. 7.

Louis Armstrong's All-Star Concert has been held over for two additional days here following a sellout at yesterday's (Mon.) performance. Show was SRO in advance and deal for an additional two nights was concluded when Satchmo arrived in Oslo.

Holdover will necessitate Negro trumpeter's flying to Brussels for a date on Thursday (9). After Brussels, Armstrong's itinerary calls for stands in Germany and Italy with a windup slated for Lausanne, Nov. 8. There's a possibility that Armstrong will play Paris after his regular tour.

Alan Gale to Keep Going In N.Y. to Jan. 1, Then Fla.

Alan Gale's Celebrity Club, N.Y., will remain open until Jan. 1, when the comedian-boniface will return to Miami Beach to operate the Celebrity Club there.

Last season Gale also closed the N.Y. spot on New Year's Day to return to Florida.

Wash. State Slots Ban Downbeating Bistros

Seattle, Oct. 7.

The recent State Supreme Court ruling kayoing slot machines has affected the talent situation here and in other parts of Washington. Already cafes and private clubs have felt the effects and have cancelled shows.

The China Pheasant here is reported on the verge of closing. The Cougar Quarterback Club, Spokane, is understood ready to give up. Situation, although felt to be temporary, is likely to be costly for acts working in this area.

Some bookers feel that cafes will have to make up losses from the slot machines by bigger shows in order to pull crowds. However, that seems improbable at this time.

Philly Terrace Scrams Talent In Tooter Defy

Philadelphia, Oct. 7.

Garden Terrace Room of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, which has been playing floor-shows for the last decade and a half (and ice revues the last eight years of that time) failed to open a bill this season and so far is continuing summer operations, strictly as a dining room.

Hotel's prexy Joseph Mears is reportedly steamed up over the musicians' union 10% hike this year and refused to negotiate with them to bring back Earl Denny's orch (10), which in recent years has played for the dancing and the skating shows.

Hotel associates said Mears has no immediate intention of resuming entertainment policy at the Terrace, and has been bolstered in attitude by fact that room's September gross topped last September's without music and show and fewer hours of operation.

DANNY THOMAS' $7,500 FOR CHI CHEZ PAREE

Chicago, Oct. 7.

Danny Thomas' date at the Chez Paree, Chicago, starting Oct. 17, will bring him $7,500 per frame.

A tour for the comic is currently being lined up by the William Morris Agency. It's expected that he'll wind up his nitery stand with a Florida date.

Sinatra's Late St. Loo Bow Floors Chase Club's B.O.

St. Louis, Oct. 7.

Frank Sinatra arrived Saturday (4) noon to begin an engagement at the Chase Club here, although date was to have started the previous night. Before Sinatra's arrival, the hotel received a call that the singer would be unable to appear because of illness.

More than 600 reservations had been made for the opening night and a financial loss was suffered as a result.

Covers for the Sinatra run had been upped from $1 to $1.50 weekdays and $1.50 to $2 Saturday and Sunday in the 800-seater.

Sinatra Safari?

Sinatra is slated for a tour of South Africa and will play the Palladium, London, and other Continental stops after. This tour would coincide with his wife's (Ava Gardner) plans since she's to make films abroad. However, there's a rift between Sinatra and Miss Gardner, which may alter his itinerary.

Galveston Balinese Fixup

Galveston, Oct. 7.

The swank Balinese Room here has been shuttered for repairs for an indefinite period. Spot has been operated by the Maceo interests.

It's hoped that work will be completed for reopening around Christmas.

Columbus (O.) Discovers Hildegarde's Boffo B. O.

Columbus, Oct. 7.

This city's crix reacted favorably to introduction of bigtime nitery policy at the Ionian Room of the Deshler Wallick Hotel, here, with the preem of Hildegarde.

Chantoosey, who plays a two-week stand at this spot, incited the newspapermen to dust off some rarely used superlatives after the opening night (3).

'Mr. & Mrs. Rodeo' (Rogers & Evans) Heading for 850G

Heavy advance and strong grosses at the Madison Square Garden, N. Y., "World Championship Rodeo" point to a $850,000 gross, one of highest scored at the Garden since 1946. Headliners Roy Rogers & Dale Evans, doing their Mr. and Mrs. show, are apparently set to rack up that near-record take since the Garden show dwindled to 26 days. Only grosses over $1,000,000 to be registered for the event were in 1945 and 1946. In those years the shindig ran 32 days.

One of the lowest rodeo draws was hit last season when lack of a top film cowboy headliner hurt the gate.

Optimism for the top pull stems from the fact that last week's business was strong despite opposition on Wednesday, Friday and weekend matinees from the World Series being played in New York. Advance indicate that many days during the event, which runs to Oct. 19 (43 performances), will be sellouts.

Kaye Repeats S.F. With 60G Advance; Mull 3d Wk.; Portland, Seattle Booked

San Francisco, Oct. 7.

Danny Kaye returned to the Curran Theatre here yesterday (Mon.), backed by a tremendous $60,000 advance. His show appears to be heading for another sellout at $4.80 top. Spectacular aspect of present run is that while advance sale on previous two-week stretch hit $96,000, this was sparked by a Civic Light Opera Assn. mailing list campaign, while the current boxoffice advance is exclusively the result of window sales, word-of-mouth and mail order, with practically no money spent in advance advertising.

If public demand continues, the Curran and Civic Light Opera may be forced to pick up option of a third week, extending closing from Oct. 19 until the 25th, when the house must turn over to Jose Greco and his troupe. Following the Curran, Kaye is set for four days at the Paramount, Portland, then five days at the Par, Seattle, both scaled to $4.80.

This will be the first time for either Paramount house to depart from straight films in some years. The Portland showplace, a 3,400-seater, hasn't had a live one in about 15 years. Kay may follow the Seattle date with a two-day stand in Vancouver.

Comedian opens Christmas Day at the Dallas State Fair and may go on to New York later to play the Palace.

Lineup for show, which includes the Dunhills, Pirro Bros., Carmen Torres, Rex Ramer, is the same with exception of Calgary Bros., replacing Joe Jackson, Jr.

Vivian Smith Named Asst. Choreog, Music Hall, N. Y.

Vivian Smith, who was one of the dancers in "Top Banana" on Broadway last season, has been appointed assistant choreographer of the Radio City Music Hall corps de ballet. She'll assist Margaret Sande, who replaced Florence Rogge recently as the corps' director.

Miss Smith started as a member of the Col. de Basil Ballet Russe, then joined the Music Hall corps de ballet in 1937, dancing with it for 10 years. Lately she's been doubling between tele and legit.

Talent Reps Making Last-Ditch Appeal To AGVA on Franchise Status Quo

Talent agency reps will make one last appeal in an effort to save Artists Representatives Assn. in its present state. Appeal will be addressed to the American Guild of Variety Artists, whose national board is currently meeting at the Taft Hotel, N. Y., and will be made by Bill Kent, ARA president, representing indie agents; Nat Lefkowitz, William Morris Agency; Morris Schrier, Music Corp. of America, and Jack Katz, counsel for General Artists Corp.

Agreement between the union and ARA expires next Wednesday (15), and AGVA has indicated that no further extension will be granted. New union rules call for issuance of free franchises to all agents who qualify. Under present ARA agreement, all percenters coming in through the organization get their union license through ARA. Indie agents pay their $50 fee direct to the union, while those applying through ARA pay $50 dues to the organization and obtain their franchises free. ARA is attempting to seek extension of the same pact. It's felt that the agency org will lose considerable strength under the system to be put into effect by the union.

There's considerable opposition within the union to extension of Rule B, the present agreement covering union-agency agreements. As a matter of fact, opposition is so adamant that it was made clear that agency reps would speak to the board not as ARA representatives, but as spokesmen for their particular office.

Because of the lengthy discussion on the insurance question, no time had been selected by the board for the agency org appeal. It was expected that ARA spokesman would be permitted to speak to the board by either late yesterday (Tues.) or today.

Meanwhile, ARA is preparing for its annual elections. Nominating committee has named for the board of governors Nick Agneta, Willard Alexander, Hattie Althoff, Milton Berger, Eddie Elkort, Dick Henry, Jack Kalcheim, William Kent, Ben Kutchuk, Harry Lawrence, Nat Lefkowitz, Leon Newman, Harry Romm and Art Weems. Election will take place Nov. 10. Board subsequently elects ARA officers.

Mpls. Nitery Ops Fight AFM 10% Hike Demand

Minneapolis, Oct. 7.

Nitery owners here are engaged in negotiations with the musicians' union in an effort to avert a boost in scale at a time when, they say, "business is dragging rock bottom and the outlook is bleak."

For their new contract, the musicians, who earn up to $100 a week in some instances, at first demanded a 20% increase. They've offered to compromise at 10%, but the bistro owners insist that no raise of any amount is justified.

Henie Extends Indpls. Run To Overlap Wirtz

Indianapdlis, Oct. 7.

Another shot was fired by Sonja Henie in her hot ice war with Arthur M. Wirtz when she extended the closing date of her show at the Butler Fieldhouse here from Oct. 11 to the 18th.

Wirtz's "Hollywood Ice Revue" opens at the Coliseum Thursday night (9) to remain through Oct. 26.

Henie's announcement of the extra week was made by her press rep a few minutes before the curtain went up on her opening night last Friday (3). Rumors that she would stick around were heard as soon as her original dates were revealed, however.

The two shows, meeting in a direct competitive situation for the first time, now will have 10 overlapping dates instead of three. Henie has put on a personal exploitation campaign unprecedented, for her, in more than 10 years of appearances here. Barbara Ann Scott and other members of Wirtz's troupe arrived Sunday afternoon (5) to get in their promotion licks before their double premiere, for RCA Employees Assn. officials and critics Wednesday night and the public Thursday night.

Near-capacity audience estimated at 7,000 turned up for Miss Henie's preem. Coliseum reports advance sale for Wirtz show is heavier than last year.

SAN ANTONIO 7 OAKS SETS MAESTRO NAMES

San Antonio, Oct. 7.

Col. B. F. Chadwick, owner-operator of Club Sevenoaks, has pacted several name orchs. Clyde plays a one-nighter on Friday (10) and Russ Morgan is booked for two nights, Oct. 17-18. Wayne King is set for Oct. 24-25.

One-nighters to follow include the Ink Spots, Nov. 1; Jan Garber, Nov. 3, and Tex Beneke, Nov. 17.

Wrightson, Morrow Teamed for 2 Dates

Earl Wrightson, tele singing star, launches his first personal appearance tour in more than three years at the Thunderbird Hotel, Las Vegas, Nov. 13 for a week's engagement.

Wrightson will be teamed with songstress Doretta Morrow for the Thunderbird and also set for a one-week date at the Capitol Theatre, Washington, beginning Nov. 27.

Cafes' OPS Break

Washington, Oct. 7.

Night spots in Alaska, Guam, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands that want to install a cover charge or boost the present one, to pay for entertainment, may now apply for permission to the territorial director of the Office of Price Stabilization, OPS has announced.

Heretofore, there was no way which territorial niteries could do this legally under price stabilization.

That Keaton Fellow, His Silence Is Golden Nugget For Paris' Cirque Medrano

Paris, Sept. 30.

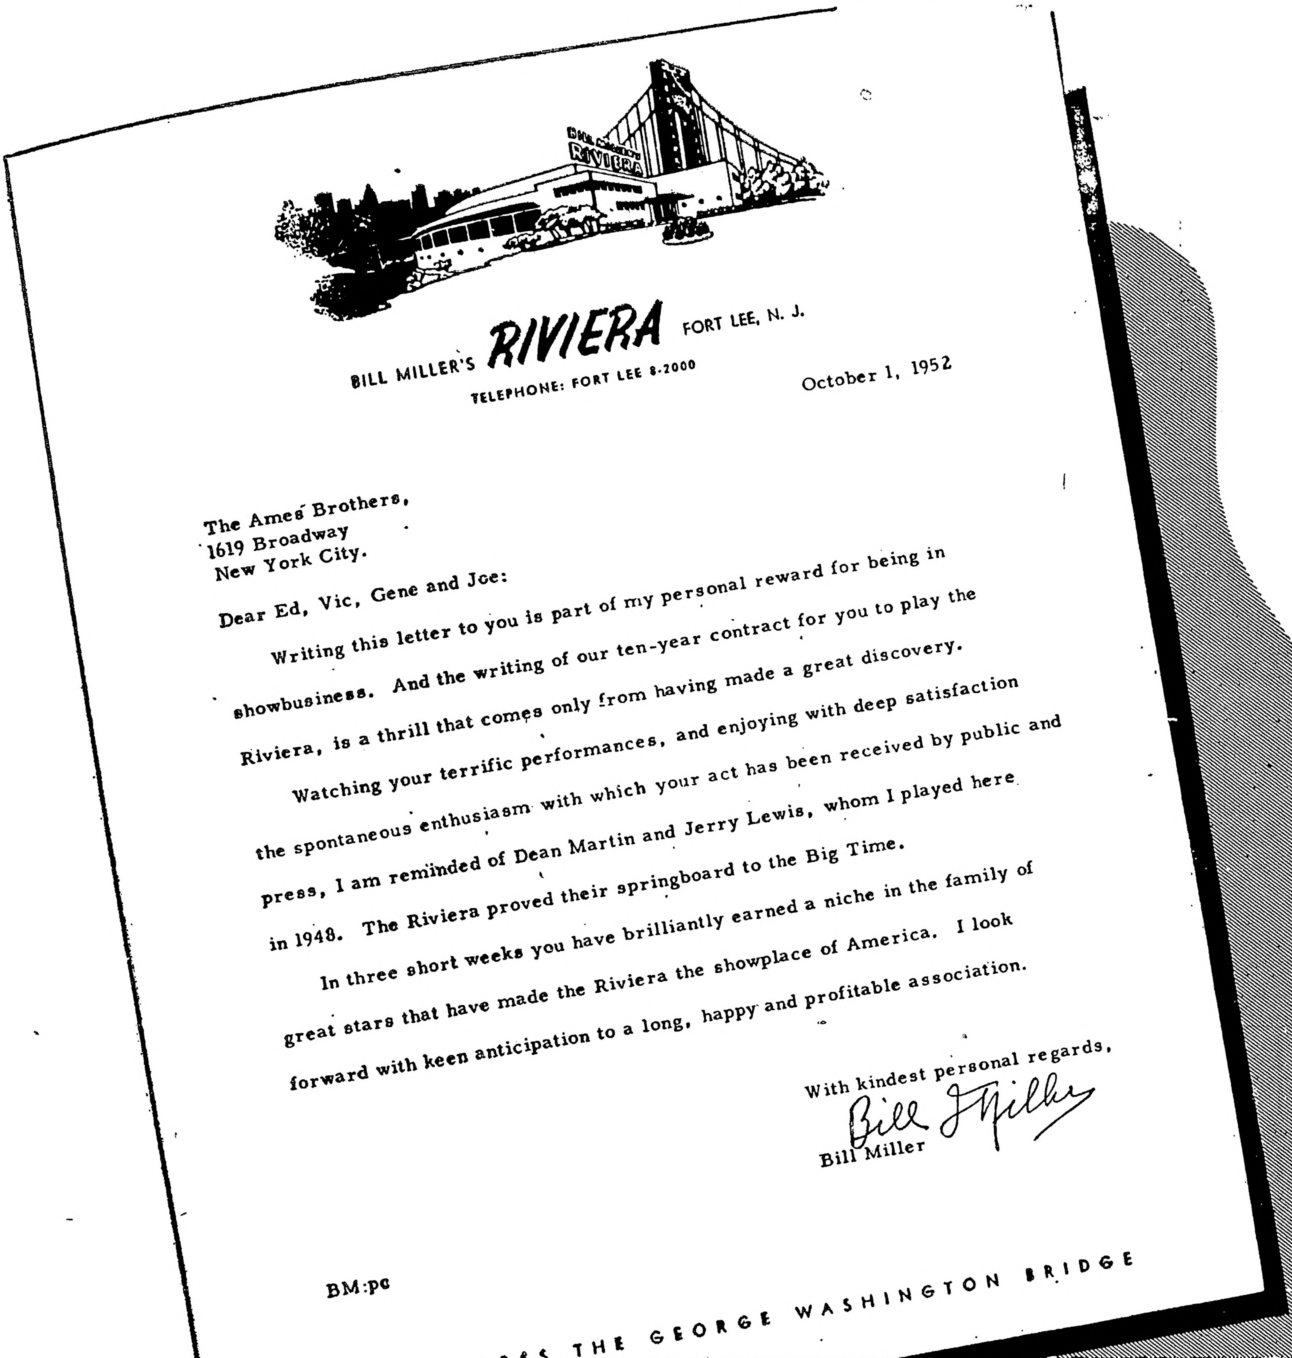
Buster Keaton walked out of the silent past and into the ring of Cirque Medrano to socko reception by public and press last Saturday (27). Comedian performed act based on scene in one of his old flickers, "Spite Marriage." Keaton and his wife, Eleanor, appear as tipsy couple returning home from a night out. Keaton goes through routine of trying to get wife to bed and, this failing, attempts various complicated methods of landing himself in the hay. When he has done so, the alarm clock sounds and he must get up again.

Keaton hasn't changed. He still wears a desperate, determined expression and the old, voiceless film clothes—the flat hat, the big, black bowtie and misfit pants and coat. He is still a great pantomime artist and never breaks the magic silence.

Rest of Medrano bill is good. Three sets of clowns, Alex & Beby, Nino & Charly and Boulivot & Loriot perform. There is an expert English juggler, Peter Woodrow, and a hep American tapper. Bobby Brandt. An elastic acrobatic trio, Les Whisky, do well. Ernest Schumann with his horse teams and trick equestrians, Les Ricono, fill in rest of evening. In all, a well-balanced program.

Keaton is at Medrano for three weeks. Present act has been done on American TV and when present engagement is completed he goes back to the U. S. for more video. Cirque Medrano, 1,750-seater, is doing capacity biz nightly, Keaton being big draw. Curt.

The Outskirts, San Antonio nitery, is slated to tee off this week. Spot is owned and operated by Dave McCurdy and a western band will be featured in a new policy.



BILL MILLER'S RIVIERA FORT LEE, N. J.
TELEPHONE: FORT LEE 8-2000

October 1, 1952

The Ames Brothers,
1619 Broadway
New York City.

Dear Ed, Vic, Gene and Joe:

Writing this letter to you is part of my personal reward for being in showbusiness. And the writing of our ten-year contract for you to play the Riviera, is a thrill that comes only from having made a great discovery.

Watching your terrific performances, and enjoying with deep satisfaction the spontaneous enthusiasm with which your act has been received by public and press, I am reminded of Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, whom I played here in 1948. The Riviera proved their springboard to the Big Time.

In three short weeks you have brilliantly earned a niche in the family of great stars that have made the Riviera the showplace of America. I look forward with keen anticipation to a long, happy and profitable association.

With kindest personal regards,

Bill Miller

New Acts

SLIM GAILLARD
Comedy-Song
15 Mins.
Apollo, N. Y.

Slim Gaillard, who generally makes the rounds of the jazz cellar clubs and Negro vauders with an instrumental trio, remains a winner in his solo turn. His songalog is pegged for the hepsters, which limits his appeal. Gaillard strikes out with those who don't savvy his patter but is a rib-tickling click with those who do.

In deadpan style, he offers such items as "Groove Juice Special," "Besame Bourbon," "Laughing In Rhythm," "Cement Mixer" and a parody of "Come On-A My House." The special Gaillard gab is interspersed before and during each number. It's madcap stuff and if it bears any resemblance to anything it's purely coincidental.

He accomps his patter with some class guitar work and displays an interesting keyboard technique toward the end of the act by playing the 88 with his palms upward. Closes to big mitt with a frenzied instrumental on the bongo.

With or without the trio, Gaillard will have to continue in the cellar club and small vaude house routing. Gros.

LOIS ANDREWS
Songs
10 Mins.
Cafe Society, N. Y.

Lois Andrews, once the bride of George Jessel, must show more than she did on her first show at this spot, though this is her first cafe date in some time.

Miss Andrews' primary fault is her selection of tunes. She makes a smart appearance and her voice suggests she would be more effective in the sophisticated vein. Selections such as "Botch-a-Me" and "Can't Take It With You When You Go" are not in her groove. Another tune, a special-material bit depicting the woes of a wife whose husband is a tele addict, had some comedic force several years ago.

As for grooming and personality, Miss Andrews can hold up in the majority of situations, but needs some fresh, pointed material to meet requirements of most rooms. Jose.

JOHN DUBOIS
Songs
14 Mins.
Alpine Village, Cleveland

Hailing from Louisiana's bayous, John DuBois comes off with surprisingly good effect and promise in a singing jump from operetta stage to nitery field. Young baritone recently made cafe bow at Moe's Main Street Club, after summer in strawhat tuneshows here, but appears to much better advantage in the Alpine Village's larger revues on hydraulic rising stage.

Newcomer is a 26-year-old good-looker with excellently trained, flexible, resonant pipes that can handle any sort of song. Without imitating anybody in the pop-singer school, he has a dramatic style of coloring a fast rhythm item via high-ringing vocalistics. They're generally legit, stemming from his light opera experience, but he's a hotter natural bet as a ballad stylist.

DuBois works in some flashy Mario Lanza flourishes in neatly arranged medleys around "Lady Be Good" and "Show Boat." From these he segues into a punchy version of "Because You're Mine," followed by several pop bestsellers. Knowing value of change of pace, he sandwiches in a humorously gusty version of "Chili Sauce" with another high-geared jump tune. When it comes to Cajun folk songs, he does them with fine feeling and haunting beauty. DuBois' gestures with hands are still too extravagant in operatic fashion but they can be toned down easily. Pull.

ETTA MOTEN
Songs
20 Mins.
Gotham Club, Chicago

Etta Moten, a former Bess of "Porgy and Bess," has invaded the nightclub scene. It's all to the advantage of the Gotham, newest intimate nitery in the Windy City.

Miss Moten sells—in French, Spanish and English. Her fine voice, plus her charm, all add up to a slick performance. Her well-balanced program ranges from a sexy "My Man" through sambas, spirituals, native songs which she brought back from Africa, to a superb "Summertime" and a begoff "Gotta Go Now."

She's a natural for better-class spots. Accompanist Leigh Barron does an outstanding job at the piano. Don.

TOMMY JOVER
With Raf, Pat and Julian
Comedy
15 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Crazy comedy of this family act is of high standard, making it a natural for video and vaude. Clowning predominates, so there are no linguistic barriers. Act is English, anyway, though of Continental descent.

Tommy Jover is the father of the act, with Pat being his brunet daughter, a pleasant looker. Raf and Julian are the two good-looking sons. Jover, Sr. makes much useful play of comedy props, wearing a wooden coat-hanger in his coat shoulders, unzipping a prop banana, and telling the time by a giant-size alarm clock strapped to his wrist. He wears cod braces, runs on with a mammoth set of false teeth and, generally, employs comic tricks in much laff-raising business. In addition, he offers a commendable dame study in comedy with his family.

Finale is a surprise, with act exiting to a chase across stage by a bulldog, released from the wings at breakneck speed. Gord.

FIVE SKYLINERS
Songs
14 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Five men, all on smallish side, provide harmony act with verve and personality. They add touches of comedy, play musical instruments and dress brightly in blue suits with red bow ties.

At show caught, act scored strongly to warm mitting. Their numbers have wide range, varying from a Latin-American medley to "Mississippi" and the pop tunes, "I'm Yours" and "Live Till I Die." Comedy slant includes one member of the quintet making much play of piano.

Act has much enthusiasm and would be okay for general run of vaude dates. Gord.

HARRISON & PATRICIA MULLER
Dance
8 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

Team's opening is standard tap and soft-shoe that's impaired by the femme's poor costume in which one side is abbreviated for offish effect. Technical and physical improvement is displayed in the followup.

Male does dance while drum-beating in sailor's garb and his partner counters in Calypso-like terp and wardrobe with a prop fruit basket on her noggin. Girl is barefooted in this and a good derriere-shaker.

Duo is okay but can be hypoed by revision in routining. Trau.

TOKAYER TROUPE (7)
Teeterboard
7 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

This Danish teeterboard troupe, six boys and a girl, is razzle-dazzle in execution of the seesaw stuff and displays some rarely seen tricks. Triples to chair are handled with graceful ease and their midway boffo has four of them in succession being catapulted to the lofty seat, all members remaining in position. At show caught, the final man had two near-misses, a fact which drew a hefty mitt for the difficult tries. Outfit betweens with rapid-fire acrobatics.

Top trick is plugged as the world's highest somersault to the basket chair, given as 18 feet. It isn't that high, but even at 12 or 14 aloft, it's a wrapup stunt. Trau.

Queen to Attend Dec. Variety Circus Gala

London, Oct. 7.

A special gala show of the Bertram Mills circus at the Olympia Dec. 18, sponsored by the London tent of the Variety Club, will be attended by the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh. Proceeds will be divided between the Central Council of Physical Recreation and the National Playing Fields Assn. The Duke, who is an honorary member of the London tent, is prez of the last-named organization.

The London Variety Club meantime is prepping a special Coronation Gala since a large contingent from the U. S. is expected to visit Britain. Plans are still in embryo stage, but according to present intentions it is intended to stage the event during the Coronation week celebrations.

Ft. Wayne Bookings

Fort Wayne, Oct. 7.

"Holiday on Ice" was the first major production booked into the new War Memorial Coliseum here, and not the Billy Eckstine-Count Basie-George Shearing show, as previously reported. Latter plays one-nighter here Oct. 15. It's the first one-nighter booked, but "Holiday" opened Wednesday (1) and runs through Thursday (9) for 10 performances including a Sunday matinee (5).

"Holiday" previously appeared here outdoors at the smaller Zollner Stadium.

"Skating Vanities," with Olsen (native of Fort Wayne) & Johnson, will play the Coliseum, Nov. 11-16, the second major show at the $3,000,000 hall.

Roy Acuff and his "Grand Ole Opry" has been booked for the Coliseum for two shows on Sunday (12) under the promotion of Johnny Apt, who is also ballying the Eckstein-Basie-Shearing package.

Robt. Maxwell's Dallaser

"Witty songs, a neat dead-pan delivery, some good stories deftly told—these make Fredd Wayne at the Berkeley an acquisition to the weary ranks of nighterie entertainers."

SUNDAY GRAPHIC

"West End night life is really in full swing again. The man who opened the season's programme—Fredd Wayne, from "South Pacific." Also there to see Fredd Wayne succeeding in this new sphere was Jose Ferrer."

THE EVENING NEWS

"I'm consistently staggered at the ease with which American cabaret acts conquer London—by their polish, verve, wit and sheer presence. The latest of them to score is Fredd Wayne, already known to theatregoers for his comedy work as Luther Billis in South Pacific, who opened in cabaret at the Berkeley last week and soon had the smart set laughing their tiaras off. Worth a visit."

WHAT'S ON IN LONDON

"At the Berkeley Restaurant, Fredd Wayne (from "South Pacific") scores a marked success with original patter, catchy songs, and crispy lyrics."

THE STAGE.

"Fredd Wayne has a fund of witty new songs and can put them over. I liked his comment on the Liberals: "You're in politics—but only just."

DAILY MAIL

"Any comedian who places the letters S.P.N.T. after his name and explains in a programme note that they stand for Songs, Patter and New Tuxedo has hit upon an ingratiating approach. Fredd Wayne, who is currently with the Berkeley for their cabaret, carries this a stage further by using lyrics with splendid off-centre rhymes such as Vestibule and Indigestibule."

New Orleans Finally Gets Set on '53 La. Purchase Sesqui; U. S. Nods Fete

New Orleans, Oct. 7.

E. V. Richards, Jr., theatre executive, has been named general chairman of a world's fair planned here in 1953 to celebrate the 150th anni of the Louisiana Purchase.

Richard immediately called on some 450 of the city's leading businessmen and civic leaders to give the sesquicentennial fete their financial support and asked for a budget of $500,000 to work with. He said that the state already has appropriated $100,000 for the event.

William G. Zetzmann, temporary chairman of the fete until Richards' appointment, said the celebration will extend over a year because the "city doesn't have the kind of facilities to entertain the crowds we're going to attract to this mammoth event." He also declared that officials of those states formed in whole, or in part, by the Louisiana Purchase already have written him to pledge their cooperation.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee in Washington has approved a resolution that would place the influence of the Government behind the Louisiana Purchase sesquicentennial. Under a bill by Rep. Hale Boggs of New Orleans, the president of the U.S. would, by proclamation or in other ways, be authorized to invite foreign nations to send duty-free products, exhibitions and delegations to the exposition. The Boggs resolution also gives the endorsement of Congress to the exposition.

It was the New Orleans Item, leading afternoon sheet, that first suggested, back in 1938, the desirability of New Orleans embarking on a world's fair. The war soon stopped plans, but before the conflict was over, the subject was again taken up.

Brig. Gen. Raymond F. Hufft (Ret.) was named executive director of the sesqui. He is former adjutant general of Louisiana, one of the most decorated soldiers in the state, and one of the owners of WTIX. "His job will be to drive home the ideas and coordinate the committees," Richards said.

Theatre Marquee Light Ban in London Lifted

London, Oct. 7.

For the first time since the war, all restrictions on front-of-house display lighting for cinemas and other theatres are to be lifted this winter. Hitherto, when there has not been a total bar, lights could only be switched on after 7 p.m.

Decision to relax the restriction was made last Thursday (2) by the Minister of Fuel, Geoffrey Lloyd, following a promise from electric sign manufacturers that lights would not be turned on in the West End before 5:30.

N.Y. Versailles' Xmas'er

Versailles, N. Y., is slated to preem another revue around Christmas. Show will be styled along lines of "All for Love" which ran for 38 weeks.

Georgie Hale will produce and George Axelrod, Max Wilk and Irving Graham will do the writing and songs. Same group did "Love."

AGVA to Set Up Lower Insurance

Cheaper accident insurance will come to the American Guild of Variety Artists after Nov. 23 when present policy underwritten by the Insurance Co. of North America expires. Union's national executive board, currently meeting at the Taft Hotel, N. Y., started hearing new plans Monday (6), opening day of the session.

At the present time, two major plans are under consideration. The first, offered by Griffith Tate, Ltd., of London, an affiliate of Lloyds of London, calls for a setup which will cost 40c a day on club-dates and $2.50 per week, with an annual premium of $100. Tate's U. S. headquarters are in Chicago.

Other major plan is being submitted on behalf of the American Casualty Co. This calls for a daily premium rate of 60c and a weekly cut of $1.59, with an annual nick of $47.25 on engagements lasting that long.

Whichever plan is accepted, the premium will be considerably less than that currently in effect. Daily club-date rate is now $1 and weekly cut is $2.50.

Benefits will be virtually the same. Accidental deal or total disability is $7,500, with $50 in weekly benefits plus payment of medical bills by the underwriters.

The union's insurance plan now in effect has been one of its most controversial innovations. Premiums are paid by the employers, who objected to the additional nick. At one time, employers offered to substitute another insurance plan, but AGVA refused to go along. Rate was deemed to be unusually high.

AGVA to Quiz Jerry Lewis Next Month on Cuffolas; Duo's Troy Date at $4.80

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Jerry (Martin &) Lewis, whose cuffo cafe shows has caused him to be fined several times up to $1,000, comes before the exec board of the American Guild of Variety Artists Nov. 19, again charged with violating union's rule against such performances. Lewis, it is charged, performed at Ciro's several weeks ago when he got into the act with Sammy Davis, Jr. (Will Mastin Trio).

Since Lewis is now on suspension of a $250 fine for a previous violation, he'll probably be facing a double fine if found guilty, Coast AGVA rep Eddie Rio said. A guilty verdict would mean he'd lose the waived $250 fine plus a larger one which would be slapped on for the latest.

Dean Martin, Lewis' partner, has been fined several times, but Rio concedes Lewis is AGVA's real headache.

Troy Gets 'Em

Troy, N. Y., Oct. 7.

An appearance by Martin & Lewis, long sought by Capitol District promoters, has been set for the RPI Field House here, night of Oct. 29. Scale will be $1.80 to $4.80.

The comics will play the 6,500-seat arena two weeks after Stan Kenton's Orch, Nat "King" Cole and Sarah Vaughan appear with the "Biggest Show" company.

H. L. (Jack) Garren, managing director, arranged both bookings. The Field House is also presenting a series of symphony orch dates, concerts and musicals.

Toledo Sports Arena Dates

Toledo, Oct. 7.

The Toledo Sports Arena has booked the Mills Bros., Jan Garber's orchestra, and Danny Crystal, comedian, for Oct. 11. The King Cole-Stan Kenton-Sarah Vaughan revue will come to the Arena on Oct. 25.

This season's "Holiday on Ice" will be shown for nine days beginning Nov. 22. The Grotto Circus will be here from Feb. 2 to 8.

Vesta Tilley & Ella Shields

By JOE LAURIE, Jr.

Show biz lost one of its real greats in the passing of Vesta Tilley (Sept 16). She was the greatest of all male impersonators, a headliner both in England and America for many years. She first played Tony Pastor's in 1894 and also the title role in "Algy" (in Chicago) in 1903. In 1904 she was at Daly's in the title role of "My Lady Molly" and also played with Weber & Fields. She started in show biz at the age of three and retired in 1920. She was married to Walter De Frece, famed music hall producer who later was knighted and became an M.P.

Her hit as a male impersonator opened a flood of male-imps. The men's tailor shops were jammed with "would-be Tilleys," and many dropped out when they found it took more than just a well-fitted suit to become a Tilley. It also took a load of talent! Miss Tilley's mail had many letters from male fans asking her "who's your tailor." American audiences went big for Miss Tilley when she sang "Algy" ("The Piccadilly Johnnie With the Little Glass-Eye"), "Only A Chapple," "Dear Boy, Tata," "The Eaton Boy" and many more great songs.

To repay England for a Vesta Tilley, the U. S. sent a little Baltimore born gal to London. Her name was Ella Shields, who has also gone "Upstairs" just a little over a month ago (Aug. 5). She first appeared in England in 1904 singing "coon songs" and made her first appearance as a "male impersonator" on the opening bill at the Palladium in 1910. For many years she headlined all over the world. When vaude died in America she played nightclubs and a few years ago returned to England (where they never forget a favorite) and made a great comeback. On Aug. 3, while appearing at a Sunday Variety concert at a Lancashire seacoast resort, she just finished singing her famous "Burlington Bertie" and collapsed with a heart attack. Her last words were, "Thank God, I didn't let them down, I got through with 'Burlington Bertie.'" She never regained consciousness and died two days later.

(A third English music hall great, Lily Morris, died in London, Oct. 3, aged 68, but she was not in the same male impersonators idiom as these two.)

Wouldn't 'Fool' Aud

Unlike female impersonators, the male imp never started out to "fool" an audience. You could tell they were women who dressed in male attire to put "novelty" into the competitive ranks of the single women acts. England had girls playing "boy parts" in Pantomime long before us. We had a sort of male impersonator in our early burly shows, if you can call a gal who wore a man's coat tightly buttoned over her bosom and, instead of wearing trousers, wore tights. These "boy parts" were usually played by the primas and was an excuse to show the gams without really being in tights all the way up—and the majority of the gals had two beautifully looking excuses.

In the early '90s a gal by the name of Lillian Western did a musical act, dressed as a man, but played the instruments like a woman. There was no excuse for the male attire except to add novelty to the act. Another in those days, Ella Wesner, sang English Hall ditties with a monolog between (English-style) and headlined in Tony Pastor's first show. She did a drunk falling asleep in a barbershop. Kitty Bingham, daughter of Prof. Bingham, noted ventriloquist was an improper Bostonian, dressed in full evening clothes, topper, etc., and also sang music hall ditties and was a very big hit. There were a few more, but it was Vesta Tilley who really did the first honest male impersonation.

Others, Too

There were a number of real swell male imps beside Ella Shields, such as Della Fox, Kath-

Copacabana, N. Y.

Joe E. Lewis (with Austin Mack), Tony Bennett, Consuelo & Melba, Ray Steele, Carol Lee; 8 Copagirls; Michael Durso and Frank Marti orchs; staged by Douglas Coudy; songs, Joan Edwards & Lyn Duddy; costumes, Billy Livingston; $5 minimum.

Dan Arnstein, the taxicab tycoon who supervised the "Burma Road" supply lines' traffic flow during World War II in the CBI (China-Burma-India) belt, fittingly enough was at Joe E. Lewis second "opening" Thursday night and saw another "Burma Road" doing a lot of traffic. That's the far-reaches of the Copacabasement, as Lewis calls it, which is really left-field and divided by a scrim cutoff which is only opened to accommodate the turnaway trade. On the second four weeks of his two-month stay the waiters attest to the comedian's boff "Burma" biz.

Tony Bennett's nitery debut, succeeding Gloria DeHaven in the substarred singing spot, was the occasion of the second premiere. There are other new furbelows, all adding up to Jules Podell's desire to keep the Copa the high spot that it is in the nitery circuit. This has been successfully achieved for over a decade by a combination of excellent taste, top standards and surefire talent. Lewis' nth repeat is part of the same pattern as the Martin & Lewis, Jimmy Durante, Lena Horne, Danny Thomas and kindred outstanders of standard quality, along with the surprise clicks that come with a Johnnie Ray and, for that matter, also Martin & Lewis who were showcased here.

There are again new customers and the girls look even more beautiful. Producer Doug Coudy knows what to do with them, and Joan Edwards & Lyn Duddy always manage to whip up sprightly show tunes that bespeak of vaster potentials, such as the "Carnival In Rio" and "Widow From Amarillo" numbers.

Bennett made it a tour de force and obviously accounted for some of the draw. His Columbia Records appeal was evidenced by audience knowledgeability of his repertoire. "Taking a Chance on Love," "Have a Good Time," "Since My Love Has Gone," "Sing You Sinners," 'I Won't Cry Anymore," "Blues In the Night" and "Because of You" made for generous sampling. Bennett has achieved poise and authority to match his disk rep; he's OK for the boite belt as on the rostrum.

An unbilled cute terp specialist, Carol Lee, almost silently stole much of the proceedings. An adorable sprite, in her early teens, she's a cutie who holds her own albeit surrounded by that bevy of boffo beauts that comprise the Copa line. Ray Steele continues extending his scope as juve vocal lead, and a new terp team, Consuelo & Melba, with a startling soap bubble effect for one of their numbers, give Lewis a good laugh situation later on. Their samba, foxtrot and polka pyramid to the unique "Forever Blowing Bubbles" climax.

Joe E. continues the zany madcap with the pixie personality which permits him alone to get away with those good-humored leers and sometimes not too subtle lyrics and asides. As with Beatrice Lillie, who is always a lady while singing her ribaldry, so goes it for Lewis. Eli Basse, his lyrical Boswell, keeps him fortified with ribald parodies like "Three Lousy Beers," "The Mink Coat's Becomin'," and the like, and his other special repertoire remains in high.

The World Series only aggravated the capacity problems of the Copa's solid business. Abel.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 1.

Larry Parks & Betty Garrett, Joel Grey, Joy Walker, El Rancho Girls (8), Ted Fio Rito Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Built solidly on top entertainment values, this frame of new faces at El Rancho will bring in excellent biz for the fortnight. Marquee blazons with names of Larry Parks & Betty Garrett, both fine lures for gaming sect, particularly Parks because of his Jolson pix.

Engaging quality of the pair is clearly felt as they cavort through songs and terps. Parks swings on first with switch patter about what's going on in the casino, building into entrance for Mrs. Parks.

Light husband-wife jousts back and forth leads into flashback of courting days and "Can I Come In for a Second?" which scores well. Segue into autograph book sequence and more nostalgia brings on "Down By the Old Mill Stream," with early-day gestures and delivery. In a medley of Vincent Youman's tunes, pair work out light terps within warbles for neat segment.

Parks moves over to the 88 for accomping of her folk-styled "Foggy Foggy Dew," and hokum based on some so-so standard jokes. More folkway is woven in when pair duet "Wish I Was." Return is sight stuff "Temperance," when Miss Garrett dons funny hat and he bongs cymbals for street corner bawling. "Side by Side" is brief duet with soft-shoe terping to take them off for rousing mitts.

Joel Grey, the young fireball, will be a comedy fixture for one month here. That he'll become the talk of the resort belt can easily be predicted. Fresh, prep school appearance, coupled with good material and terrif vitality smacks tablers from the start. Tears into "Zip Doo Da" to get underway, then socks over best routine of his yock-loaded term. Based on "Do You Remember," he chants a teenager's hunk of nostalgia about the "good old days," inserting his clever mimicry on "that grand old man of comedy,"—Jerry Lewis; Frankie Laine, Johnnie Ray, and switch of theme into Cantor. In "Honeybun," trots out more impressions to include Billy Daniels, Durante, and Bette Davis.

Taking in scope of "What is Show Biz?", Grey kids TV's "Dragnet," calling it "Hairnet"; treads legit boards with lampoon on Noel Coward; terps old vaude styles and winds up in serioso vein. Latter doesn't become the young comic, however, being too schmaltzy and out of character somewhat. With each setup out of the way, Grey whips around in lightning terps—altogether a highly versatile display.

El Rancho Girls come on with "King Porter Stomp" swing-ding starter, and return at the half with hip-switching tango. Gals are used mostly for background effects while cute Joy Walker bounces her solos over. Ted Fio Rito orch makes standout backgrounding. Will.

Coconut Grove, London

London, Sept. 23.

Lou Jacobi, Jack Nathan Orch, Edmundo Ros Rhumba Band; $2.80 cover.

The Coconut Grove is one of the West End's ultra late night spots which usually comes to life around midnight and stays open until 4. Under the rigid British licensing laws, the sale of liquor ceases two hours before the closure, but the service of soft drinks as well as food continues without restriction.

About two years ago, the club was taken over by bandleader Edmundo Ros and more recently he put a second combo of his own on the stand. He wields the baton there after he has finished his nightly stint at the Bagatelle where he is still under contract.

The current feature is Lou Jacobi, a Canadian comic who has spent the last year or so in Europe. He is a smooth raconteur whose fund of yarns has a pronounced indigo streak well suited to the dimly lit, decorative atmosphere of this room. His patter rolls smoothly and gets plenty yocks. He is also a competent vocalist and does two or three numbers well rigged to his exuberant personality.

Act demands a minimum of backgrounding and this is admirably done by Jack Nathan's combo. The Ros aggregation provides the alternate rhythm music for the terpers. Myro.

Angelo's, Omaha

Omaha, Oct. 2.

Only Omaha nitery regularly booking name attractions has another winner in Page Cavanaugh Trio. Fresh-appearing kids feature their diskings, a fine hillbilly piece and hit high spots with "Pennies from Heaven" and "Maybe."

Husky-voiced Cavanaugh does most of the ball-carrying, of course, with his chanting, terrif 88ing and chatter. Also handles the clever lighting system boniface Angelo has rigged for the small stage.

Dave Povaro, guitar; Jack Smalley, bass, and thrush Rona Rae round out group. Gal switches gowns for each of four half-hour shows nightly. At show caught (1), Cavanaugh bucked fight TV (Willie Pep vs. Armand Savoie) at back bar. But he turned this into an asset by having customers turn around and watch the fracas while the trio sang "You Belong to Me." Tempo was switched to same speed pugs were travelling and gimmick drew plenty of guffaws.

Angelo (DiGiacomo), hosting again after breakdown last summer, has set the Weavers (Oct. 24), Rose Murphy (31), Milt Herth Trio (Nov. 7) and Ella Fitzgerald (Dec. 9). Trump.

Pierre Hotel, N. Y.

(COTILLION ROOM)

Doretta Morrow, Pierre D'Angelo & Ana, Stanley Melba and Chico-Relli orchs; $1.50-$2 cover.

Stanley Melba, in the supervision of the Cotillion Room, is sometimes forced to make fast decisions. With Morton Downey asking out after two weeks as the preem attraction, Melba has lined up a two-act bill which should excite the carriage trade.

The Pierre's entertainment director checked in Doretta Morrow and Pierre D'Angelo & Ana. The former, in her preem at this hospice indicated that she should be a name for the smart rooms. This is Miss Morrow's second cafe engagement, first having been a short time ago at the Thunderbird, Las Vegas, where she is scheduled to return shortly. When she gets the feel of the smart spots, she'll be one of the more solid entertainers for this medium.

Miss Morrow is current on the Radio City Music Hall screen opposite Mario Lanza, in "Because You're Mine," a fact which should give her name wide circulation. Again, she's no stranger to uppercrust audiences. She played Tuptim in "The King and I," was in "Where's Charley?" and other Broadway musicals.

Miss Morrow's preem stint indicated her staying powers on the floor. She had the foresight to equip herself with some of the top songs of the era. Aside from a "King & I" medley, she negotiates a tuneful French series, an Irving Berlin group and "Can't Take That Away from Me." Her sole departure from the evergreens, "Give The Oo La La," doesn't measure up to the standard of the other numbers.

During this recital, Miss Morrow evidences ease and charm and radiates a wholesome personality. The audience had no difficult in discerning these values. Miss Morrow could have done more time than she did.

Pierre D'Angelo and any partner he brings in have been staples on the east side. His current vis-a-vis, Ana, is not only a looker with charm but a capable dancer. She's been around with him in New York previously. Their hoofing has variety, pace and elegance. Their tricks are used merely as a hypo. Duo's concentration on dancing rather than acrobatics pays off handsomely.

Melba's orch gives a lift to the proceedings, while Chico-Relli's Latins provide a hip-swinging incentive. Jose.

Continental, Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 4.

Irene Hilda (with Roger Joubert), Ross Wyse, Jr., & June Mann, Lee Marx & Co., Latin Lovelies (7), Leon Lachance, Johnny Di Mario Orch (6); 85c admission.

Starting her eighth appearance in Montreal, Irene Hilda shows greatest potentialities to date. Blonde chantootsie from the cafes of Paris and London brings a much more finished product to the local boites than ever before. This time she has a guy (Roger Joubert) to back her songs as part of the showcase; a better songalog (all her French numbers carry an English translation) an much evidence of the heavy variety and saloon schedule she has been working in the last 18 months. A new hairdo and an appealing collection of gowns also boost Miss Hilda for the better intimeries.

A breezy opener in French gets Miss Hilda off to a good start followed by a hoked-up, rhumba-rigged "Comme Cici Comme Caca" which draws hefty mitting. Instead of the mirror number she used for quite a while, she has switched to a flashlight in a darkened room to pick out various males and warble a special ditty to them. Number is a novelty, as is her satire on an Egyptian theme, and both score.

Breaking into English, she does an item called "Nothing" which is special enough to please but not too safe a tune when the ringsiders are on the vino side. A bit of business tried out successfully in London, that of recruiting three men from the aud and getting them to participate in a diaper-making contest with three model babies, seems out of line despite the hefty yocking it produces. A performer of this calibre hardly needs this sort of gimmick to boost overall impact and this, together with the hand-clapping number, could easily be dropped without impairing gal's socko showmanship.

Lee Marx juggles the Indian clubs with class and speed and gets biggest ovation for his balancing stint on the large rubber ball. A trim-looking helper adds visual moments to his solid offering

Ross Wyse, Jr., & June Mann reprise a straight burley routine that picks up a fair reception even though most of their better bits are lost in their efforts to get laughs at the expense of their talent.

The Latin Lovelies show great improvement since last viewing. Johnny Di Mario's orch gives Miss Hilda special attention and does well during dance sets. Newt.

Mocambo, H'wood

Hollywood, Oct. 1.

Jackie Miles, Chuy Reyes Orch (5); $2 cover.

After a five-year absence, Jackie Miles is back on the Coast's bistro circuit and the stint is a cinch to win back old customers and develop new ones. One of the better comedians now operating out of the nation's plushy saloons, Miles should provide the lure boniface Charlie Morrison needs to offset the Coast bow of son-in-law Johnnie Ray down the street at Ciro's.

Miles, an animated beanpole, has a droll sense of humor that provides a constant stream of chuckles. Some of his stuff rises above mere comedy to qualify as genuine humor, and whether he's explaining the economic realities of Miami or the gastronomic formulae in the Catskills, he's a very funny gent. There are only a few bellylaughs in the routine, Miles preferring to maintain a steady pace rather than reach an occasional peak and fall off. Slick timing, relaxed delivery and mild manner all combine to make the most of the material.

Chuy Reyes has taken over dance and showbacking chores for the vacationing Eddie Oliver and does a good job. Kap.

Thunderbird, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 2.

Henny Youngman, Harry Belafonte, Les Dassie (2), Millard Thomas, Johnny O'Brien, Christina Carson, Normandie Boys (3), Kathryn Duffy Dansations (7), Al Jahns Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Henny Youngman's room in Vegas has been established at the Thunderbird. After hitting several other niteries, the vet comedian finds his greatest appreciation comes from within this Navajo. Current two frames is his second booking here this year, and should equal his earlier capacity biz mark.

The Youngman style of bouncing over one-liners intersliced with well-framed batches of story-jokes, and heightened by his deadpanning, captures yocks throughout. He has refurbished many of his w.k. gags, and strikes into new paths with some fresh material. One of these is a Jolson-mannered parody of "Rosie's Nose," using many tunes to quicken the effect. Chucks his fiddle under chin for sawing "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," while weaving in some sharp quips. "My Life Story" contains his "Sally" with rib-tickling terps and plentiful ad libbing. As a quickie tag, brings back warbler Harry Belafonte and guitarist Millard Thomas, and as Belafonte essays "The Fox," clowns story line for laughs.

Belafonte takes the room by storm, turning out his folktunes for sock salvos. The Dave Kapp discovery and RCA Victor piper should hit top brackets before too long, judging by reception accorded here. Style is highly kinetic as he weaves strong spell with keen perception of drama within his songs. Simple folk items are transformed into artful vignettes—and all are from the heart.

Vocally, Belafonte has the haunting quality, the ability to surge and ebb volume, plus requirements of humor necessary for the depicting of such wares. From fully noduled "Jerry" to begin his setup, Belafonte turns to softer measures for "Shenandoah." Explanation of Mississippi lore is woven into a highly visual "Mark Twain." Carbon of his big platter, the Calypso "Woman is Smarter," pulls peak mitts, and followup in lullaby form, "Scarlet Ribbons," is another whammo. Saga of "John Henry" picks up mood into lusty interpretation, and Calypso, "Hold 'im Joe," is a fine foot-tapper for bowoff.

Les Dassie prime with razzle-dazzle flash act. Gallic due, garbed as gobs, whip through applause-tickling, expert timing of best tricks, and comedy spice. Pair never let up an instant, to retire with heavy palms.

Kathryn Duffy Dansations hold over "Lucky Pierre," and "Blues," from "American in Paris." Johnny O'Brien with Normandie Boys trio furnish vocalistics, O'Brien making his mark as "Pierre." Christina Carson ropes orbs and mitts with her toeterps. The Al Jahns orch backstops smoothly, aided during the Belafonte section by close accomping on guitar by Millard Thomas. Will.

Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

(EMPIRE ROOM)

Les Compagnons de la Chanson (9), Alex Alstone Orch (12), Mischa Borr Orch; $2 cover after 9:30.

The French nine-man singing troupe, Les Compagnons de la Chanson (The Companions of Song), are back at the Waldorf as the lone divertissement (aside from the orchs), and they still supply a good measure of entertainment in the Gallic vein. Attired uniformly in blue trousers and white open-at-the-neck shirts, the group is doing more English than before as it goes through a routine that is mostly in its native idiom.

While Les Compagnons still lack that single sock that can classify them as exciting entertainment, they have style, have been nicely staged and their Gallic numbers have an undeniable authenticity. Originally the singing background for Edith Piaf when she made her American debut some years ago, Compagnons could be a more exciting act with a take-charge personality such as that of Miss Piaf. There is no one in the current troupe who fits that category.

They open with "Dreams Never Grow Old," in English and French, followed by an assortment of ballads and novelties. The sailors' song, "The Eyes of My Mother," doesn't have the distinction that Miss Piaf gives it, while the comedy operatic piece is much too broad and not so funny.

Alex Alstone, the composer, is doing a neat job playing pop and Continental melodies with his new 12-piece orch. With the maestro at the piano, it's inevitable that the unit stress what is probably his best-known composition, "Symphonie." And whether it's for the straight dansapation or just listening, the group is clicko.

Mischa Borr's orch is the alternate combo, a longtime standby here and still sock for the Latin terps. Kahn.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 2.

Jack Smith, Smith & Dale, Herb Flemington, Flamingo Starlets (8), Ike Carpenter Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Jack Smith leaves off his kilocycling for a fortnight of warbling in the vast Flamingo room, with moderate biz resulting. Ebullient style gets okay nod from tablers, as Smith makes his initial stand in Vegas.

He is placed in position of having to lift audience out of a long, plodding production prance by Flamingo Starlets. With characteristic grin and smile in his voice, Smith accomplishes the job during his first tune, "I Want to Be Happy." Ballads "Auf Wiedersehn," then rollicks a special "Check Your Coat and Check Your Hat," using toppers and songstylings of Lauder, Chevalier, Gaelic piper, and Miranda. Bright "Just One of Those Things," is sequeled by "I'll Walk Alone." Best novelty warble is clever switch of the ubiquitous Johnnie Ray parody, with Smith burbling a typical Ray weep, and vice versa. Gallic quickie yields "Ca Va," before period of requests. Gracious handling of dialog between tunes, plus routining of songware brings good harvest of applause throughout. He has the excellent accomping and conducting of Buddy Pepper for vital support.

Smith & Dale attempt to toss over a special sketch used in recent video appearance, but room is against them. Premise of both going to heaven and becoming angels might project along the cathodes, but misses fire here. Result is long, talky session with few laughs. Wind up by gabbing about their tenure in showbiz, which brings a big mitt.

Flamingo Starlets drop their modern terps in opener for a jiggly swing fling of "Sweet Georgia Brown." Midway "Deep Purple" is a yawn. Ike Carpenter orch keeps steadfast temps all the way. Will.

Cafe Society, N. Y.

Arthur Blake, Lois Andrews, Erskine Butterfield, Georgie James Orch (4); $3.50, $4 minimum.

Cafe Society Downtown has set a couple of names that should spell boxoffice. It's remembered that Arthur Blake in his previous appearance at this spot was a jackpot booking, while Lois Andrews is best remembered as George Jessel's child bride. Since appearing here some years ago, she's become a big girl who has to make good on her own (see New Acts).

Blake is one of the most talented mimics around. He can show delicacy that belies his large frame, and can be impudent or reverent as befits the character at hand. Probably his most important asset is his ability to create the illusion of reality. He can assume facial characteristics that provide a strong suggestion of Bette Davis, Gloria Swanson, Mrs. FDR, George Arliss and others. He has similar talent in portraying vocal characteristics.

Cafe Society, N. Y.

Blake's work is enhanced by a well-written script. He's has some changes made in most of the standard speeches, which help him infuse a sense of humor into the proceedings. Some of the stuff he gives out with in this engagement is of concert variety. Alteration in routines and additional portraits in his gallery would enable him to crash that medium.

Miss Andrews should be a good lure for the Hollywood elements in New York. Her turn precedes that of Blake and she gets the customers oriented. In a two-act bill with Blake, the opening spot is the only once that she could assume. Ordinarily, it's not a good groove for her.

Between-show entertainment is by Erskine Butterfield, who does well at the voice and ivories. The Georgie James orch backstops capably. Jose.

Hotel Roosevelt, N. Y.

(ROOSEVELT GRILL)

Guy Lombardo Orch (16) with Carmen, Lebert and Victor Lombardo, Kenny Gardner, Bill Flannagan, Cliff Grass, Kenny Martin; Twin Pianos, Hank D'Amico Orch; $1.50, $2 covers.

Guy Lombardo keeps rolling along. Returning to this hotel for his 23d consecutive year, he is once again pulling the kind of socko biz which has virtually identified this room with his name. (There have been recurrent reports that the Grill would be renamed the Lombardo Room but the closest the hotel management has come to this so far is to paint Lombardo's name in goldleaf at the room's entrance.)

In Lombardo's case, class not only tells but it lasts. The bandleader has been at the top for over two decades and his consistency becomes all the more phenomenal in light of the vicissitudes of boxoffice fortune which have befallen other top orchs. Of all the name bands both current and defunct, Lombardo alone has kept a steadily high altitude over the past 20 years.

Probably one of the chief factors in the Lombardo saga is that he has never deviated from the formula which led the original success of his organization. Lombardo not only has ridden out crises, depressions and wars; he's come through unscarred and unchanged from the sundry battles over swing versus sweet and corn versus "progressivism" in music.

Lombardo was obviously on the right track in not being derailed into a dead-end musical style. His "sweetest music this side of heaven" is still selling while the detractors and innovators have usually faded after the vogue was over. Lombardo's music has those permanent ingredients of simplicity, listenability and danceability. That Lombardo trademarked reeds-on-top styling with that easy dance beat, moreover, is surefire with the older customers even though the juve set may be more sympatico with the modernists.

For his current stand, of course, Lombardo has not tampered with the time-tested format. He's giving out with a solid book of standards, novelties, showtunes and current pops in his usual smooth dansapation tempos that jam the large floor for every set.

Another important asset for this band is the roster of excellent vocalists. Kenny Gardner is a first-rate ballad handler along with Bill Flannagan and Kenny Martin, while Cliff Grass registers solidly on the rhythm and novelty items. Also featured to good effect is the twin piano team of Buddy Brennan & Fritz Kreitzer. Hank D'Amico's small combo ably fills the relief spot. Herm.

Edgewater Beach, Chi

(MARINE ROOM)

Chicago, Oct. 4.

The Continentals (4), Ralph & Lorraine, Dorothy Hild Dancers (8) & Yvette, Griff Williams Orch (12); $2.86 admission.

It's a nicely balanced bundle that producer Dorothy Hild has assembled for the formal opening of the fall and winter season at this far north hostelry and it should keep the family trade happy. Edge is blunted somewhat, however, by the fact that the current offering is programmed along basically the same lines as previous bill.

This time it's the Continentals moving in to take over from the Wiere Bros., and Ralph & Lorraine bring on their terp antics in place of Eileen & Carter. Griff Williams band and the finale "Autumn Leaves" by the Hild Dancers are stayovers.

Just the same, the four lads traveling as the Continentals reap a bumper harvest of attention and applause from the diners as they shake out their bag of vocal tricks. They play some of their ditties straight for a good change of pace, but it's the comedy versions that win the acclaim. They move in strong with a hokey western medley and keep right on gaining momentum until their "Casey at the Bat" climax. Handsome lads are classy all the way.

Overall display gets a big assist from Ralph & Lorraine who make their Windy City bow a good one. Their boy and the mannequin skit with the lass tying herself in knots is a surefire interest magnet and they trip off to lots of mitt noise.

Session is launched by the Hild gals with an eye-catching "Petite Ballet." Yvette warbles off to the side as the prancers go through their paces. Dave.

Billy Gray's, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 2.

Buddy Hackett, The Sportsmen (4), Karen Chandler, Charlie Bagby, Bill Howe; $2.50 minimum.

It's a rare day when someone steals the spotlight from a comic at this off-Hollywood bellylaugh bistro. That the Sportsmen manage the trick in this layout is a tribute both to their ability and to some of the best quartet special material heard in these parts in a long time.

Not that top-billed Buddy Hackett disappoints, he doesn't, albeit he got off to a slow start opening night. It's just that the Sportsmen have assembled a turn that earns constant mitt-pounding. It's a trifle long and some of the individual routines might be shortened, but their "No, No Roulette" number, aided by an offstage voice gimmick, is a sure show-stopper and they've got a walloping finish in "United We Sing," the saga of how the quartet was formed. It's all sold with savvy and the harmonics, as expected, are strictly top-drawer.

Hackett, a trifle bluer than when he first showed here several months ago, still impresses as a very funny man. His discourses about his family and his babyhood and his seeming ad lib wanderings away from the particular subject at hand provide added laughs. He has cagily reclothed some of his more familiar material with a sock throwaway line here and there to heighten the impact. Additionally, he tosses off some impressions of James Cagney, Akim Tamiroff, Peter Lorre and Sydney Greenstreet for added returns.

Karen Chandler (New Acts) takes care of the vocal chores and there's some excellent pianistic backstopping by Charlie Bagby with Bill Howe again on hand for song-and-piano stuff between shows. Kap.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, Oct. 2.

Oliver Wakefield, Jerry Cooper, Guili Guili, Russ & Joy, Conner's Models (6), Harry Pozy Orch (8), Yvonne Lanauze; 75c admission, $1 Sat.

Socko gabbing of Oliver Wakefield has this week's Gatineau customers bellylaughing from teeoff to begoff. Minimum of business and maximum of smart, clicko nonsense via microphone make Wakefield's sharp humor a pleasant contrast to this room's previous comedy bookings which, though plenty okay, were closer to slapstick. His type of gabbing—along Churchillian lines—grabs happy kudos from inhabitants of this national capital who hear a lot of it straight every day. Wakefield seems solid for any medium.

Jerry Cooper, longtime holdover, effectively handles a solo spot besides his usual emcee chores, giving okay voice to "Long Long While," "Black Magic" and similar w.k. items. Experience through association allows for smooth cooperation between Cooper and the Harry Pozy orch in the singer's stanza, and the brief but welcome act is clicko.

Guili Guili, magician from Egypt, works in fez and robes through a routine that is a little stodgy through length. Material is okay; cutting it short might help. Magician's specialty is producing baby chicks from his and customer's clothing.

Show is bolstered by smart taps and semi-acro terping of Russ and Joy, capable youngsters with a high-paced routine. Harry Pozy band for dancing and show is its usual capable self. Yvonne Lanauze sings and pianos nicely in the cocktail lounge. Gorm.

Ciro's, Hollywood

Hollywood, Oct. 3.

Johnnie Ray, Clark Bros. (2), Joe Stabile Orch (10), Bobby Ramos Orch (5).

The rains came—in the person of Johnnie Ray—to this spot Friday night (3) and washed in the sort of lode from which Ciro's can pan a lot of nuggets. Not in a long, long time has an opening here attracted such a name-loaded turnout as jampacked the place for the dinner show. About 400-500 teenagers thronged the sidewalk outside and used the section of bleachers the management provided—a good publicity stroke. Some of this youthful exuberance obviously was fermented by the nitery, but a good deal wasn't.

To put it simply, Ray scores. Some of the cynics are converted and many of the neutrals are visibly impressed. A lot of others resoundingly applaud his antics for their proved showmanship. Understood Ray is getting $4,750 weekly guarantee against an involved percentage. Off the publicity, word-of-mouth and curiosity the two-week engagement will generate, it's a safe bet he will go into p.c. Singer's "gone" followers, whom he "stones" with his Columbia disks, aren't normal habitues of Ciro's, but he'll draw some though they aren't the spenders the spot seeks.

Ray works frenetically over "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," "Little White Cloud," "All of Me," "A Sinner Am I," "Give Me Time," "Cry" and "Whiskey and Gin." "Whiskey" is an oldtime blues (Ray cut it on his very first Okeh Records date, but it escaped notice) which reveals that when he goes legit, blues-shouting is his forte. Stringing all his weepers end on end isn't wise; he should have inserted "Whiskey" midway and closed with "Cry" or "Cloud."

Act ran 30 minutes at show caught. His intros and comment on songs were too long and contrived, as were his observations on opening at Ciro's. However, it can be understood the emotions under which he worked. This is his first fling on the Pacific slope since hitting bigtime. Two years ago, after wending his way here from his native Oregon, via San Francisco, Ray tried vainly to sell his songs up and down Vine St.'s music row. During that time he was working—at best, for scale—at a nabe cocktailery, the Little New Yorker. He made no dent here whatsoever at that time.

Working both at and afront the piano, Ray's grimaces and gesticulations are as unfettered as his lachrymosal larking. Now that he's established, he need not be so grim; at no time is his act relieved by the slightest suggestion of humor or even light observation, even in his extended patter.

Clark Bros., pair of fast-stepping colored lads, start show with zippy five minutes of unison and challenge tapping for a good opener. Joe Stabile crew and the Bobby Ramos Latin rhythm combo alternate dansapation. Stabile batons the show in smart style, flawlessly handling the intricate cues involved in the sometimes grotesque Ray arrangements. Incidentally, Ray carries only one accompanist with him on the road, a drummer. That thumbnails the oddity of his style. Bert.

Hotel Jefferson, St. L.

(BOULEVARD ROOM)

Although the line of shapely lookers is missing from the setup, the 1952-53 season at this sole major nitery in the downtown sector teed off with variety and quantity. A continuation of that policy may become a serious challenge for the heavy trade now enjoyed at the two west and class spots. The auburn-haired, blue-eyed Estelle Loring, in a lush sequin gown, making her first start in this room, dives up to the top billing with a repertoire of ditties that range from "You Are My Lucky Star" to "Play Me A Hurtin' Tune," the latter delivered with plenty of sock. Her other numbers, "Kiss of Fire," "The Nearness Of You" and "Eventually," a newie, cop heavy and well-merited mitts from a mob that was just short of SRO. Miss Loring has swell pipes, showmanship and her diction leaves nothing to be desired.

Proceedings open with the Chandra Kaly Dancers, three gals and two males with youth on their side. They present barefoot Oriental terps enhanced by their agility plus strong support of the tooters. Their individual and collective routines are clicko with the customers. After their initial chore, they return for another to wind up the 60-minute bill.

The Belmont duo, the gal a dimpled blonde looker in a white satin gown, are ballroomologists who in addition to their twists and spins score solidly with a bucolic interp of the rhumba and some soft-shoe stuff.

Al & Carl Martin dish out the comedy on the show with their marionets. The one in which the clown doll unsuccessfully attempts to scale the raised lid of a suitcase and giving up in despair is second only to the stanza in which the dummy blows up a balloon only to have it burst in his kisser. The mob eats it up. Les Elgart and his crew are in action throughout the session to back up the acts neatly. Maestro also emcees. Sahu.

Ruby Foo's, Montreal

Montreal, Oct. 4.

Rudy Vallee, Joska de Barbary, Len Berger, Fred Toldy; no cover or minimum.

The Starlight Room at Ruby Foo's never saw such business as that currently packing the place nightly for a nostalgic look and listen to Rudy Vallee.

Garbed in a flame-red dinner jacket, Vallee teed off with "My Time Is Your Time" and for the next 50 minutes whammed over a collection of gags and songs that are often hoary but always timeless if the patron response meant anything at show caught.

Vallee has lost none of his smooth savvy over the decades, and although guy trades heavily on the "remember" theme, he wisely updates during patter to bring everyone into the party. Following his opener, he goes into a long discourse on his age, injecting just enough blue jabs to keep interest going, and then tells about how he got the name Rudy which cues in a sax solo for plaudits.

An overlong parody to the music of "Laura" about the physical appearance of his girl drops him right into the average cafe comic groove. Aud appreciation returns with "Wiffenpoof Song" and "Vagabond Lover." His inevitable "Stein Song" gets him off to plaudits seldom heard in this room.

Instead of the younger fry who sit through a show nursing a single drink, Vallee is drawing the more mature types who have the dough and are spending it because they are listening to tunes and anecdotes that may be corny, but memorywise they loosen the pursestrings.

House pianist Len Berger backs the Vallee production handily and later splits music sets with violinist Joska de Barbary. Fred Toldy does the interim pianology with style. Newt.

Village Barn, N. Y.

Jimmy Casanova, Penny Copper, Norton & Patricia, Zeb Carver Band (4), Arthur Warren Orch (6); $2.50 minimum.

Meyer Horowitz's cellar silo in Greenwich Village, celebrating its 24th anni this month, continues to blend alfalfa and urban nitery techniques for steady draw. Pulling tourists as well as locals, spot packs appeal for all tastes.

Current layout, one of its best, headlines comedian Jimmy Casanova. A mobile-faced funster, he cavorts through a zany song parody, "Prisoner of Love," a carefree condensation of the legit musical, "South Pacific," and an impresh of an old codger reminiscing on sex and sundry other items. Latter bit gets too raw for family consumption, especially in a meditation of the sexual urge. It's tasteless and could be easily omitted.

Casanova's parodies of "Prisoner of Love" and "South Pacific," however, show a good comedic sense and an expert mugging capacity. Garners plenty of solid, uninhibited yocks here, while the a.k. sequence only results in embarrassed titters.

Penny Copper clicks in her warbling stint. Miss Copper, a blonde looker, has a strong set of pipes and knows just what to do with them. Thrush is of the legituner school, but projects solidly on the nitery floor. Neatly paced songalog includes "It's A Most Unusual Day," "Never Leave Me," "Great Day" and change of mood windup, "Molly Malone." Turn, which was staged by her husband, producer Harry Delmar, displays topdrawer savvy.

Norton & Patricia, terp duo, are graceful spinners who build lots of interest and excitement in their nine-minute turn. It's an eye-appealing act that moves at a brisk and delightful pace. Zeb Carver, who emcees the show, appeals to the country clientele in a western-folk stint with the Dixie Doodlers. All the tunes are right off the cob and are delivered in zestful, twangy groove. Arthur Warren's orch backs and supplies expert dansapation. Gros.

Copa, Pitt

Pittsburgh, Oct. 4.

Eileen Wilson, Catron Bros. (2), Tanzarettes (7), Hy Edwards Orch (5); $1.75 minimum.

Hitting the cafe belt after regular stints on Lucky Strike's "Hit Parade," Eileen Wilson should be able to snare plenty of nitery work. Gal sells like a performer who's been microphoning them out to the ringsiders all her life.

It's a tough, noisy audience at the Copa, but Miss Wilson has them hushed and eating out of her hand. She makes a striking appearance and has the authority to establish contact pronto. These are no puny set of pipes but a full-throated voice skillfully administered. She's on for nearly 20 minutes and doesn't lose the crowd for a split second.

Miss Wilson wraps them up with her intro. "Another Opening, Another Show," makes it a pushover with her clicko arrangement of "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart" and then sails home in clover with a medley of "Hit Parade" faves, including "I'm In Love With a Wonderful Guy," "People Will Say We're In Love" and "How High the Moon." Copa may have had bigger name singers in the past but no classier ones.

Tanzarettes, dancing line of seven gals, get in two flashy routines, particularly one in which the kids are dressed up like crazy-house goons and go through some weird motions. It's different for a nitery ensemble and a relief as well.

Catron Bros. are a couple of okay mimics and hoofers who look good and make a brief session count. The Hy Edwards band continues its long run at the Copa, for obvious reasons when the dance stanzas open up. Cohen.

Fairmount, Ottawa

Ottawa, Oct. 2.

King Odom Four (with Glenn Burgess), Montez D'Oca (2), Heywoods (2), Norman Jensen, Jimmy Lytle Orch (6), Margo Davis; 75c admission.

None of this week's acts at the Fairmount rings any carillons, but they're all more than capable and add up to a balanced, leisurely-paced offering that satisfies the boff biz the spot has been doing. Manager Gilles Trahan heads his current bill with the King Odom Four, Glenn Burgess at the 88s. Smart dressing and okay warbling make the foursome play to mild but definite begoffs, with help from pop tunes including "World Is Waiting for the Sunrise," "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," "Lazy River" and a unique arrangement of "Without A Song."

Here before with an indoor circus, the Montez D'Oca pair are better on a nitery floor. Femme half bounces off dressed-up trampoline onto male podner's hands, shoulders, head and other anatomy. The act is clicko, working close to tables and using this intimacy for added effect, with slickness and showmanship to make performance move along capably.

Heywoods, comedy ballroom terpers, work hard for fair effect. Act needs reorganizing. Norman Jensen spices his emcee chores with tidy bits of magic and keeps his solo stint to a minimum, hypoing the show's general pace. Jimmy Lytle orch and canary Margo Davis are on the stand. Gorm.

Clover, Portland, Ore.

Portland, Ore., Oct. 2.

Paul Gilbert, Harriette Blake, Herman Jobelman Orch (5); no minimum, $1.20 cover, $1.50 Sat.

This is Paul Gilbert's third return to the Clover Club this season and he is in for three weeks. He works fast with a glib tongue and is quick on the uptake. With sock timing and a natural flair for comedy, he has the customers roaring.

Small fellow combines good material, acro and drama background for a good 50-minute sesh. After intro talk, he goes into a forward somersault sans hands into a pratfall that starts the ball rolling. Best bits are "Doctor's Operation," "High Noon," and a drunk. Some of the suggestive stuff is too fast and obtuse. Lad demonstrates a set of good pipes and a talent for trumpet, vibes and piano in a smart act.

Harriette Blake opens the show with some nifty singing. After that she goes into an original bit about "I Want To Be A Pretzel" and then wows with some terrific control contortion. Orb filler is not a small femme by any means, but does stuff that smaller gals can't. Best trick is standing on backs of two chairs and going into a split thereon for plenty of palms.

Herman Jobelman orch did a good job of backing the show and setting tempo for customer dancing. Feves.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, Oct. 3.

"Diamond Jim Brady Revue," with Edward Arnold, Buddy Lester, Joy Lane, Tulara Lee, Sid Marion, Riverside Starlets (8), Bill Clifford Orch; no cover or minimum.

The name of this show is a little misleading and would be better called "Edward Arnold Revue." There's not even a diamond, as Arnold himself points out, to account for the title. Regardless, it's fine entertainment for the 85 minutes it's on deck.

Arnold, making his second cafe appearance, having only begun the tour in Las Vegas a few weeks ago, seems perfectly at ease in his administrative duties. A Starlets opener in colorful parasols and bonnets to a melange of old tunes brings on Arnold in tails. His presence is given proper acknowledgement and he stays only a moment with a few jokes before introducing Tulara Lee.

Miss Lee, after a few bars of a song, whips off her skirt and goes male-hunting in the aud. She finds a likely participant, and in a hilarious schooling sequence attempts to teach the shy little man acrobatics. She balances him awkwardly as she lies on the floor, and he manages to look pitiful and freightened during a very convincing role as an actual member of the ringside. Not until he bows off with Tulara does the audience suspect. It's wonderful comedy and very unusual.

Joy Lane is a willowy redhead with a little-girl voice who has another gimmick for the show. After an opening song, "You Could Be Here As Easily as Me," she gets into an argument with her conscience —on a tape recording. Perfect synchronization and quality create rare effect as she sings and talks to herself. Best bit is "Good Mornin' Mr. Echo" in which she harmonizes with herself in multiple recording style as the echo trails off. "Conscience" also sings "When You And I Were Young, Maggie" while the flesh Lane bounces it up with the old-fashioned melody gimmick, "Maggie Blues." "Conscience" even walks on stage—recorded footsteps—to join her.

Arnold has a brief solo bit talking about the way different people laugh and is interrupted midway by an obnoxious waiter. Sid Marion heckles Arnold for good yocks and finally joins him on the stage. Arnold then slips into an intro to his dramology from "The Devil and Daniel Webster." Payees are respectfully silent for his fine thesping and he gets top plaudits. Although the bit is well done, Arnold could make a bigger impresh by choosing something perhaps a little more w.k. for this unusual nitery act. And Webster's plea to the jury does not give Arnold enough opportunity to get his teeth into something powerful; too short and without enough guts.

Highpoint of show is Buddy Lester's comedy. Although on the heels of drama, he has the room back in laughs in a few minutes. Unceasing chatter punctuated by his trademarks keep the air crackling with humor.

In one strange bit, Lester drags out a box of odds and ends and announces he will imitate Harry Richman. Before he ever finds the right props, however, he has romped through the whole box to extract every possible chuckle. A trumpet exchange with a member of the orch, an operatic demonstration and a striptease give an idea of the gamut which this comic runs.

Starlets start the finale in sexy pink and black lace and are joined by the cast for a "Diamond Jim For President" chorus. Mark.

Blinstrub's, Boston

Boston, Oct. 4.

Alan Carney, Ted Cole, Roby & Dells, Rudenko Bros. (2), Oliveras (2) Michael Gaylord Orch (7); $1.50 minimum weekdays, $2.50 Sat.

Following several medium lineups this fall, boniface Stanley Blinstrub is again veering toward the name policy tested so successfully late last spring when spot was enlarged to accommodate nearly 1,800. Teeing off that policy was Patti Page who scored tremendously, but since her stint, shows have reverted to sight acts, which with exception of vocalist Ted Cole, have been normal fare here over the years.

Topping current bill is Alan Carney, which marks the first time a comic has been headlined in this vast bistro. Guy works hard to crash through with his best material, from aud reaction standpoint, being his soapbox oratory in various lingos. Room is tough for comics, but Carney adds enough visual stuff to his gab to hold attention throughout. In addition, comic emcees layout in okay fashion.

Ted Cole, longtime fave hereabouts, always sells nicely, handling such pops as "Somewhere Along the Way," "Wish You Were Here," "You Belong to Me" and "I Went to Your Wedding." He's one of the better baritones and with aid of a disclick could easily hit top coin.

Balance of show is standard Blinstrub fare, getting off to fast start with Roby & Dells, mixed acro duo clicking neatly with series of lifts and handstands. Femme partner is a slick chick which adds to overall impact of tricks. Rudenko Bros. also hit the applause meter with sesh of juggling hats, balls, rings, Indian clubs, etc., winding by exchanging flaming torches. Closing spot is grabbed by the Oliveras, another mixed pair with femme cavorting through acro tricks from partner's shoulder perch.

Backgrounding by Michael Gaylord's crew is on the beam throughout. Elie.

Hotel Radisson, Mpls.

(FLAME ROOM)

Minneapolis, Oct. 3.

Tony & Sally DeMarco, Don McGrane Orch (8); $2.50 minimum.

Dancing takes over here to provide the sole floor entertainment for the season's preem. As presented by the DeMarcos, the terp display proves more than equal to the occasion, leaving the customers with a pleasant feeling of complete satisfaction.

This is the couple's first local nitery appearance and they put on their ballroom artistry and boff charm in a manner which enhances the prestige of this smart supper club. The pair did seven numbers during their 20 or so minutes at show caught and each scored an applause touchdown. Offerings ran the gamut from waltz to rhumba, with some novelty, smooth gliding, a bit of acro and tapping tossed in.

Routined to accomplish a degree of variety and diversity through change of pace, the demonstration of numerous types of steps with an icing of humor never falters. Distinctive treatments, solid musical accompaniments, and the duo's arresting personalities create an impression of importance and magnitude.

DeMarco prefaces each set with apt intros, enlightening the ringsiders, affording breathing spells and preventing terp tedium. Lovely Sally DeMarco's vibrancy, sparkle and animation are winning embellishments. Her own composition, "The Likes of You," is the inspiration for a new number.

The Don McGrane band does a slick background job for the performers and customer dancing, and one of its members, pianist Charles Wullen, hits the jackpot soloing for the DeMarco's Levitsky waltz contribution. Rees.

Berkeley, London

London, Sept. 30.

Fredd Wayne, Ian Stewart Orch, Tommy Rogan Rhumba Band; $4.50 minimum.

With this cabaret engagement Fredd Wayne, who fills the top comedy role in the London edition of "South Pacific," enters a new realm. It is virtually his first time on an intimate nitery floor and there is every indication that he has spent considerable time and energy in studying the technique required.

Wayne likewise has taken the trouble to prep an original act. ~~Vocalizing may not be his strong~~ point, but his lyrics have a sophisticated polish designed to extract the laughs from cafe customers.

He is a versatile youngster, with an assured, easygoing presence. He's an expert raconteur with a happy knack of emulating local dialects. And he throws in a few quick-fire impressions for extra weight.

Sporting a smart Bond St. tuxedo and a frilly dress shirt, the American comic also wears a black derby and carries a cane to give special effect to one of his numbers. Apart from a song from "Texas Li'l Darlin'" in which he appeared in the U. S., the artist has all new material. By a long way the best is a parody on a song in "Call Me Madam" called "The Guest Boy Who's the Best Boy at the Ball." All his stuff is in strong comedy vein and he was called back for a couple of encores at show caught before finally checking out.

Last Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 3.

Carmen Cavallaro, Willie Shore, Dolores Frazzini, Eddie Gallagher, Devlyn Girls (11), Jerry Vaughn, Garwood Van Orch (10); no cover or minimum.

Extra-length exhibit of co-toppers Carmen Cavallaro and Willie Shore runs this casement into 90 minutes —long for a two-act bill. However, tablers seem to be satisfied and pack room to capacity. Casino might forego the usual one-hour time limit placed on shows, if biz keeps up to turnaway point.

Cavallaro's florid keyboard style is exemplified in his concert opener, "Jalousie." From this he weaves a soft spell with "Amour," a French-Canadian tune. Novelty department reveals his humorous "Chopsticks" and a spanking boogie windup. Another multifaceted reading comes up in "Beguine," showing the Cavallaro deftness in all tempi. Takes paraphrase of "Rhapsody in Blue" for well-received highlight, before venturing into request sesh. Runs over the 88s in "Malaguena," "Blue Tango," and his usual finis, "Polonaise."

Willie Shore, with his darting, light-footed capers, his nimble wit and spontaneity, turns the forepart of the show into a circus. He takes 45 minutes to put forth everything in his book, from "Donegal" and song sketches, terp display leading into fast rounds of soft-shoe, and his w.k. pinball routine.

Requests for legmania are answered with a triple-fast "Charleston," a funny Apache, and everlovin' Joe Frisco. Calls for femme from ringside to pound floor in rhumba and to engage in amusing back-and-forth hip-tossing; steps out in completely ad lib soft-shoe to "Blue Danube," and caps with Pat Rooney.

Devlyn Girls completely fill stage and all are lookers. Take it away with whirls of blue bouffant while patterning "In Old Manhattan." Dolores Frazzini steps into the surprise pink spot after chirping duet with Eddie Gallagher for pleasing solo. Finale is a corker, with Shore taking turns with femmes in romping some folk dances.

Garwood Van batons his orch with authority, stepping off the podium for Jerry Vaughn's decisive guidance through Cavallaro's session. Will.

Macayo, Santa Monica

Santa Monica, Cal., Oct. 1.

The Leonards (2), Stuart Rose, Marcia Busson, Macayoettes (4), Chuy Hernandez Orch (5); $2.50 minimum weekends.

Inevitably, the packages built for this Santa Monica food and fun spot lean heavily on dance and song offerings. Boniface Ramon Reachi, a former ballroom dancer himself, produces the shows, which occasionally travel to other niteries in the western area and do well despite the lack of comedy elements.

Current layout, tagged "Mardi Gras Revue," follows the usual Reachi formula. Toppers are the Leonards, whose "poetry in motion" is capable dance stuff although at least one of their routines is overly familiar. They open with a polka that gets immediate attention and have a good audience gimmick in bringing ringsiders into the act to provide accompaniment via a spoon-against-glass meter setting.

Song chores mostly devolve upon Stuart Rose, whose easy singing is best demonstrated on such numbers as "Daybreak" and "Here in My Heart." Chuy Hernandez orch, however, has a tendency to drown him out on occasion. Rose also ~~teams with Marcia Busson on one~~ number and the gal, who also doubles as one of the four Macayoettest, has one solo spot which could be expanded. She's a sultry-voiced chanter but she's wasted as a pony. Kap.

Chase Club. St. Loo

St. Louis, Oct. 3.

Mindy Carson, Mario & Floria, Johnny Long Orch (14); $1-$1.50 cover, no minimum.

Smart booking brings back Mindy Carson to this swank west end spot to tee off the new season. The singer, who scored solidly in her local debut in this room last January, is not only repeating with gusto but is proving a sock draw.

In an eye-filling off-the-shoulder gown, the blonde chirper has the room on her side from the start. She amply deserves the palm-pounding with a repertoire that ranges from "Once In A Lifetime" to "It's De-lovely," the windup ditty. Her interp of "Bouttonniere" themums to the crowd, persuading during which she tosses chrysan- a male at the ringside to waltz with her and then donning a tophat and a cutaway coat over her gown to do an impresh of Bert Williams and his famous "Nobody" are sock.

Sandwiched in are "You Belong To Me," "What Good Is A Gal," "Getting To Know You," and "I've Got A Crush On You." Her pacing made the 25 minutes fly.

Mario & Floria, preceding Miss Carson, are agile ballroomologists who in addition to the twists and spins win the customers with their interp of the Turkey Trot. Charleston, Tango and "Merry Widow" waltz. For good measure they toss in a neat soft-shoe routine. The gal, in a pastel, vari-colored billowing gown enhances the rapid-fire act.

Johnny Long and his tooters not only back the show in fine style but seize the opportunity at opening of the gridiron season to play alma mater songs, for which they are generously rewarded. Sahu.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Oct. 3.

Beachcombers (4), Robert Maxwell, Tony DiPardo Orch (8); $1 cover.

Entertainment for the current session represents a new lineup for this downtown spot, a first time here for both acts. They bring off a moderately good show that's suitable enough, with biz at a pleasant rate for the fortnight.

Orch leader Tony DiPardo handles the m.c. assignment in his customary lively style, and turns floor over to harpist Robert Maxwell. He dishes up a varied repertory swinging through a Gershwin medley, plunks out a nifty "St. Louis Blues" and fingers "Spaghetti Rag" in a pianola arrangement, all for big mitts. Gets into more complicated work with "Malaguena," but handles it for dramatic punch and had to beg off.

Foursome of three men and gal make up the Beachcombers, one of the several musicomedy groups which have proved apropos for this de luxe cafe. They give the spotlight pretty much to diminutive Natalie Shepherd, and back her strongly throughout with a varied vocal presentation. Bill Shepherd, Don MacCloud and Jerry Graff round out the crew.

Beachcombers display their versatility in a roundup of tunes which include a parody on "Million Dollar Baby" introducing Natalie, switching to "Maui Chant" reminiscent of her Hawaiian descent, and go dramatic in "That Lucky Old Sun," giving play to moving voices, strong choral effects and extensive choreography. They cavort in "Too Fat Polka," seque to lively "Hallelujah," and soften up in "Hello Young Lover." Pull all stops for rousing version of "Hawaiian War Chant," with hearty response from the customers. Quin.

Cuckoo Club. San Diego

San Diego, Oct. 2.

Harry the Hipster Trio, Eddie Shu Quartet; no cover or minimum.

In a return to name and seminame policy in jazz, local hot spot has snared a curious attraction in Harry Gibson, known as the Hipster. Piano thumper proves major surprise to local unhepsters who expect Gibson to be sepia instead of a blond, mustached ofay.

Glib pianist talk-sings in lowdown jargon with constant reference to various forms of narcotics, particularly marijuana. Strangely, his patter doesn't offend customers although it has definite shock quality in subject matter. Piano stint is run-of-mill jazz, backed by Dave Bryant, bass, and Jimmy Valentine, drums.

Whether chatter is funny depends on reaction to narcotics as basis for humor. Some of Hipster's material can be regarded as satire, even though unintentional and as such is slyly humorous. Occasionally, however, he crosses border into bad taste. But freight-payers here liked him all the way at show caught.

A good jazz group on bill comprises Eddie Shu, trumpet and sax; Ted Wald, bass; Bruce Paulson, piano, and Paul Valerina, drums and vocals. Outfit blows in the modern idiom, with accent on sax solos. Don.

Herth Trio to Pk. Sheraton

After a 10-month stay at the Piccadilly Hotel, N. Y., the Milt Herth Trio winds Oct. 11 to prep for a Dec. 1 preem at the Mermaid Room of the Park Sheraton Hotel, N. Y. He's booked into latter spot for an indefinite engagement.

Herth expects to take his crew out on a six-week tour before the Park Sheraton date.

leen Clifford, Agnes Mahr (the "American Tommy Atkins"), Eva Mudge (the "Military Maid"), Jean Southern, Florence Tempest, Hetty Urma, Tillie Santoy, Hetty King, Toma Hanlon, Lucile Tilton, Marie Empress and Florrie La Vere who may be the only one in America today still doing male impersonation in an act with her husband, composer Lou Handman.

Claire Romaine ("London's Pet Boy") was a sort of an American relation because she was the stepsister of Dorothy Russell; her father, Ted Solomon, was Lillian Russell's first husband. Few know that Fanny Brice did a male imp act, doing a number in white tie, tails and high hat. Mae West did a "boy" in her act at one time—if you can imagine her as a boy? She didn't do it very long, thank goodness!

We had mixed teams where the female member did a male imp, such as Roy Cummings & Helen Gladding (she did the male) Jack Donahue & Stewart, his wife dressed in eccentric male attire; Ed Fennel & Lena Tyson (she did college boy). Sister acts, where one played the male, were Tempest & Sunshine, Adele Ferguson & Edna Northlane, Mollie & Nellie King, and the Armstrong Sisters. In the Moore & Young act they both changed to male clothes for a finish.

In the last 20 years of Big Time in America, without a doubt the "American Vesta Tilley" was Kitty Doner. She retired and is now a dance stager.

The art of male impersonation ceased to be a novelty when all kinds of silly-shaped dames started walking around in slacks. On the stage you knew it was a gal doing a male impersonation; on the streets you never really knew.

When Vesta Tilley retired in 1920 she was presented with a testimonial signed by hundreds of thousands in England. As I have said so many times, "Actors never die, they just get booked out of town."

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Oct.7.

Variety Clubs hospital flashed one of the grandest floral displays on the lawns this season. A bow to Ted Brenner, N. Y. radio and TV actor, who spent most of his allotted time doing the landscape work.

Birthday greetings to Bob (IATSE) Hall, Jesus Gracia Dominguez, George (Elephants) Powers and Ted Brenner.

Juna J. Payne shot in from Louisville to bedside her daughter, Patricia (Switow circuit), and help celebrate the operation recently mastered by her.

Dr. Edgar Mayer, the first medical director of the old NVA sanatorium during the early '20s until 1933 was here for the medicos' symposium and has a new hobby—collecting antique soda fountains. He recently bought one here that was patented in 1885.

Mary Coleman, former cashier of Lyric Theatre, N. Y., and a new guest here, is elated over her first good report that upped her for one daily meal in main hall.

Max Rosenthal, (Randforce Theatres, N. Y.) rated an ace clinic, ~~his first since he's been on observa-~~ tion, upping him for pictures twice weekly and an occasional downtown pass.

John (IATSE) Streeper off to Atlantic City for a 10-day furlough, his first trip out of the san in a year.

Looked like old times at Camp Intermission last week. Sitting around the table for a snack were Dr. and Mrs. Edgar Mayer, Dr. Homer McCreary, Eddie Vogt, Mr. and Mrs. William White (Ruth Morris), Mrs. Wm. "Mother" Morris, Aunt Ella and Uncle Henry Berlinghoff.

Bob Cosgroves of Columbia Pictures back to his N. Y. desk after a two-month vacation here. He carries added poundage and an Adirondack tan.

Thanks to the many who sent in telegrams, letters and cards expressing good wishes on this mugg's 67th birthday—especially to Sam Roberts, Jack Frazer, Joe Laurie, Jr., Mr. Ballantine and Kathleen Carson.

Paramount, N. Y.

Louis Prima Orch, DeMarco Sisters (5), Los Gatos (3); "Son of Paleface" (Par), reviewed in VARIETY July 16, '52.

Current bill lacks a comic, but nevertheless packs plenty of laughs since Louis Prima orch, the five DeMarco Sisters and Los Gatos all have strong humor elements in their acts. Prima actually is a natural funnyman; he's a hep showman and his down-to-earth personality and solid-sending organization sock home their items. He pleases with his "One Mint Julep" and "The Bigger the Figure (the More I Can Love") vocals, latter a lusty parody on the "Figaro" aria from "Barber of Seville."

Band's chirp, Keely Smith, does okay by a medley of ballads, but scores best when joined by the batoneer in "Begin the Beguine." Bit has Prima coaching her on putting over the tune, with her mimicry of the cliche gestures adding up to a good satire. Prima provides competent backing for the card, and the orch's jivey but listenable numbers are nicely displayed.

DeMarcos have a good selection of tunes with deft arrangements and effective staging. After "I'm Never Satisfied" and "Romance Me," in the ballad groove, they change the pace with "Little Girl from Little Rock," a cutie with Arlene DeMarco, the lead thrush, donning hair bows and doffing her shoes to enact the story of the lass who was "done wrong" and liked it. "Calypso Blues" and "Gal Without a Guy" are also nicely handled.

Bill opens with Los Gatos, whose acro antics are done to a jitterbug beat. They project an appealing personality and their turn, including some Lindy terping while aloft, wins a healthy mitting.

On opening day Wednesday (1) Bob Hope guested to give his pic a shove. Comic put on a longer act than is usual for this kind of stint, gabbing about his European junket, Palladium booking, the World Series, Bing Crosby, Jack Benny and his new radio chores for Jell-O. At the last show he was gifted with a gavel by a delegation of American Guild of Variety Artists' toppers, marking his ascendency to the AGVA presidency. Hope paid tribute to the large number of film, radio and tele stars who have come out of vaude and added that he himself once had "a hot 15-minute vaude act—10 minutes on stage and five minutes to get out of town."

Palladium, London

London, Sept. 30.

Betty Hutton with the Skylarks (5); Warren, Latona & Sparks, Clifford Guest, Tornedo, Jackie, The 3 Monarchs, Tiller Girls (16), Woolf Phillips Skyrockets Orch.

The Palladium vaudeville season is truly closing with a bang. The dynamic Betty Hutton, who has taken up residence for the final three weeks of variety, is the centre of an act which abounds with energy, vitality, good humor and, above all, first-class showmanship. It was hard to appreciate that just before her London opening the Hollywood star had lost her voice because of a throat ailment. The gal unmistakably makes herself heard, and her voice, when required, handsomely towers over the combined vocals of the Skylarks, who are presented as an integral part of the act. But she also knows when to soft-pedal and proves she can put over a ballad with the best of them.

When Miss Hutton played the Palladium four years ago she held the stage solo. She could have done the same this time and few would have objected. Sensibly, however, a more elaborate routine has been evolved, with the show taking on the appearance of a carefully planned production which was designed by her husband, Charles O'Curran.

Appropriate choice for her opening number is "There's No Business Like Show Business" and from this she segues naturally into "Falling In Love." From there she moves to a generous tribute to Buddy DaSylva with excerpts from some of his outstanding hits, including "April Showers," "Best Things In Life Are Free" and "Birth of the Blues."

Up to this point the turn is as straightforward as a Hutton act can be, but she gets into her zany stride with a whole batch of numbers from her new film, "Somebody Loves Me," in which she plays Blossom Seeley. It is here, where the act demands quick costume changes in full audience view, that Miss Hutton justifies her reputation as America's Jumping Bean. Whether doing the Charleston or singing about New Orleans, she is a hep performer with a bubbling personality that projects throughout the theatre. And to justify her opener, she closes her act with a highly expert bit on the trapeze bar, which sends her off to a tumultuous ovation. This was show biz at its best.

Throughout most of the stint, which fills the entire second half of the program, the Skylarks, making their London debut, are well in evidence. Their highly stylized vocalizing with a precision harmony movement provides more than a background to the star's performance. They can be stooges to Miss Hutton when that is necessary, but they also stand firmly on their own feet when occasion demands. They are more successful with the star than in an earlier spot in which they draw their best reaction for their interpretation of "St. Louis Blues".

Following the standard opening by the Tiller Girls, the dance spot is filled by Jackie, a balancer who has been earning acclaim in recent months. He is a graceful perfectionist and his specialty is playing a miniature harmonica and ukulele while in free head balance. The Three Monarchs, a trio of comedians with harmonicas, register okay with their standard routine. Most laughs result from the effeminate pose of a bearded member.

First-timer on the bill is the Scandinavian magician, Tornedo, who last year won first prize at the Stockholm Magic Congress. He's a facile operator who works without any patter and has a fine range of tricks with playing cards, cigarets, et al. It is an act which would project far more effectively in a more intimate atmosphere such as a nitery since the small objects employed are a strain on the eyes for those sitting way back from the stage.

Clifford Guest again scores a solid click for his smartly fashioned ventriloquial act, and includes some outstanding impressions. The gab is above average and he handles his dummy with an expert touch, particularly in the sequence when the doll is being put away at the end of the show.

Warren, Latona & Sparks (who are soon going to America) have been longtime faves in these parts and never fail to get a boffo reaction. Their knockabout routine is a masterpiece of timing and although their material remains unchanged, it is solid slapstick.

Chicago, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 3.

Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy, Chuck Brown & Rita, Manhattan Rockets (16), Bill Snyder, House Orch; "Monkey Business" (20th).

Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy have brought on their smartly turned hubby and frau routines to pump some plasma into the Chicago Theatre boxoffice. The winning pair is sandwiched in a sturdy supporting layout that pays off in high-level patron satisfaction during most of the 50-minute run.

It points up the basic values of the H&H combination that, despite some of their comedic subtleties which skim over the heads of the daytime shopper audience, shows the handsome pair punching through for maximum response during their generous stay on stage. They warm up easily with Miss Healy's cavorting through a domestic drama takeoff on radio soapers while Hayes goes into his Frankenstein bit. Things really catch fire as they launch into a hilarious ditto of such singing duos as Nelson Eddy-Jeanette MacDonald and Russell Nype-Ethel Merman. Miming is climaxed with their own version of how Judy Holliday and Mario Lanza would sound as a duet, for a very solid closer.

As per usual, the two dish out strictly "washed face" humor which is bright without being blue. Only possible editing might come in Hayes' "Punch Callahan" skit with its punchy pug overtones that smack a bit too much of Red Skelton's character with the same affliction.

Curtain-raiser Chuck Brown and assistant Rita's spins that get things off snappily. Brown also scores with his comedy terping, doing a clever costume switch. Dance department is augmented by Hal Sands' Manhattan Rockets, holdovers. The 16 gals leg a midpoint production number that's okay as a filler and come on for a colorful wrapup.

Pianist Bill Snyder, also h.o. from last offering, continues to click with his keyboard gymnastics and garners a nice salvo with his treatment of "Slaughter on 10th Ave." House band backs the session neatly.

If Bigtime Vaude Is Really Dead, How Come M&L Kill 'Em in Tex.?

State Fair of Texas execs chose this year to stage a variety revue as the expo's prime entertainment lure, in spite of past legit smashes, "South Pacific" and "Guys and Dolls," in State Fair Auditorium. Continuing its name-grabbing policy, fair is offering Martin & Lewis, supported by seven top acts, in a two-hour click show that had a full house of 4,200 at the first performance wondering if bigtime vaude is really dead.

No act could do wrong; each rated and got generous applause that could have meant encores and run the show long overtime. Screaming ovations greeted the headlining daffy duo from walkon to bowoff.

Surprising here is the considerable solo time taken by Dean Martin. After Jerry Lewis uses only a gag-filled minute introing his partner, handsome crooner comes on amid cheers and goes over big with four tunes, "Walkin' My Baby Back Home," "You Belong to Me," "Hominy Grits" and, sitting on the stage apron, remembers Al Jolson with "Rockabye Baby."

From there the team takes over and bedlam is in order. While some set material and proved bits are inserted, they add to the pandemonium with many ad libs and tongue-twisters, such as Lewis' embarrassing reference to Martin's "RCA-Capitol" recordings during the pair's frequent plugs for Capitol and Chesterfield—their radio sponsor, they admit. Madman Lewis berates his partner, the customers, the pianist and Dick Stabile as he directs the orch while Martin tries to sing "Oh, Marie." His frenzied dancing, mugging and falsetto voicing of "Because of You" lyrics add to the hilarity. Zanies engage in a couple of swish bits that were over the heads of the largely provincial crowd at the opening show. However, such antics as Lewis' leaps into Stabile's arms, the smooching, fighting for the mike and running insults between the pair draw continuous audience praise.

Martin & Lewis Revue (STATE FAIR AUD., DALLAS)

Dallas, Oct. 4.

Martin & Lewis, Mayo Bros. (2), Bob Williams, Kitty Kallen, Ben Beri, The Szonys (2), Amazing Mr. Ballantine, Barr & Estes, Dick Stabile Orch (24); $1.20-$4.80 scale.

Buffoons wind their hilarious session with their strawhat and cane vaude bit, soft-shoeing to "Swanee River." It's a sock closer for M&L, who return for begoff speeches.

Three dancing acts are in supporting cast; however, there's no overlap of style. Next-to-closing Mayo Bros. go big in a too-short fast tap session on a raised platform. Bob Williams' dog gets belly laughs. An unscheduled flea-scratching by his lazy cocker spaniel drew an ad libbed, "Wait until after the show and you can get 'em all!"

Lovely Kitty Kallen, sole femme singer, socks over her swingy opener, "I Can't Give You Anything But Love." In a sexy scene on the huge stage, clad in a white, strapless gown, thrush switches mood with "Please Take Me Home This Moment," before her boff job with "St. Louis Blues." She draws chuckles with "I Wish I Had a Daddy in the White House." Donning guns and 10-gallon hat, gal wows 'em with the novelty, "You Can Take Me Out of Texas, But You Can't Take Texas Out of Me." Miss Kallen could have stayed on an hour; her bit was a begoff also.

Juggler Ben Beri does a show-stopping turn, tossing balls, Indian clubs and tambourines with ease. Giselle & Francois Szony, do a top terp stint—only act on the bill not geared for some laughter.

Amazing Mr. Ballantine, "world's greatest magician," proves he isn't via a boff comedy stint, with no trick executed. Barr & Estes offer good acro and tap dancing in the opening slot, with Barr's eccentric hoofing starting the comic vein of the M&L revue.

Dick Stabile does a creditable emcee stint throughout. He also clicks as Martin & Lewis' stooge, and in his baton work, conducting a large orch that impresses with two overtures, to which Stabile adds his fine sax tones. Pit band moves to the stage for the closing M&L act, where Peter Wolf's special set for the comic team is impressive, with 20-foot-high red letters reading "Martin & Lewis."

Comic pair is in for 24 performances in 16 days—expo's run—at $100,000 guarantee against percentage.

Apollo, N. Y.

Slim Gaillard, Charlie Barnet Orch (16) with Marillyn Moore; Dyerettes (5), Bunny Briggs, Pigmeat & Co. (4); "Rose of Cimarron" (20th).

Apollo bill this session gets off to a fast start with a rousing medley by the Charlie Barnet orch and the spirited pace continues until the finale 72 minutes later. It's a wellbalanced layout which combines music, dance and comedy turns for clicko response.

Barnet, who heads one of the few ofay orchs to play this Harlem flagship, maintains his fave rating here with a series of standout instrumental renditions. Orch, of three rhythm, seven brass and six reed (maestro switch-toots on sax and clarinet), is a driving crew whose slick arrangements make for easy listening. Standout instrumentals are "Skyliner" and "Durango." Barnet belts out some exciting reed licks on the former while sideman Dick Kenny displays expert tromboning technique on the latter. Band's thrush, Marillyn Moore, scores with "You're Driving Me Crazy" and "Old Black Magic."

The Dyerettes, five-gal terp unit spotted in the opener and the wind, display top technique in a Latino sequence (opening number) and a ballet-tap routine (closer). Gals are eye-fillers and each scores separately in the closing number in which they get across some nifty acrotaps.

Pigmeat and aides (two guys and a gal) get plenty of mileage out of an old burlesque sketch which they don't bother to clean up.

Bunny Briggs, Negro tapster, packs a lot of power in his fast-paced stint. His facile cleat work draws top aud response and his vivid body gyrations keeps turn in high gear. He hits sock payoff with a windup tap routine that's fashioned in the bop groove.

Slim Gaillard, who's appearing without his familiar trio, is reviewed under New Acts.

Earle, Philly

Philadelphia, Oct. 4.

Erskine Hawkins Orch (14), Orioles (5), Jackie (Moms) Mabley, Bette McLaurin, Leonard & Leonard, Lou Elliot, Jimmy Mitchell; "The Jungle" (Lip).

Coupling of the Erskine Hawkins orch with the Orioles, vocal and instrumental five, seems to be the right combo for drawing them in at the Earle and keeping them happy while there. Hawkins tees off with the fast and jumpy "Perdida" in ensemble playing of high grade that sets the mood for stubholders. Show follows the regular format for Earle band presentations, with the acts interspersed between the orch fare, and the band always ready to pick up whenever there's a lag

In addition to his own fine trumpet, Hawkins features Julian Dash, a remarkably good tenor-man, in "The Man with the Horn," and the exuberant Sonny Payne in "Drummer Man."

Lou Elliott, saxophonist Jimmy Mitchell and the pint-sized Bette McLaurin pipe "I'm Walking by the River" impressively. A little girl with an outsize voice, there is humor as well as vocal interest in Miss McLaurin's "All of Me," and she picks up the aud noticeably with her unusual styling of "The Masquerade is Over." Singer could have come back for more, but the Earle Saturday shows are geared for speed to provide for five-a-day. The little miss was limited to the two solo numbers at show caught.

The acceleration doesn't detract from the show's value, making up in speed of presentation what it might lack quantitatively. This is also evident in the turns of Leonard & Leonard, clever tapsters, and Jackie "Moms" Mabley, a favorite comedienne in these parts who is now conducting a "Moms"-for-President campaign from the stage. Ruling of no encores gets them off with the crowd calling for more.

The Orioles are in the closing spot to offer vocals with their own piano, guitar and bass accompaniment. Very popular via their disks, the Orioles get a terrif reception on appearance, and each of their songs, apparently, has its followers. All four numbers—"Lookin' for Your Baby," "Trust in Me," the unusual arrangement of "You Belong to Me" and "Please Don't Go"—are well received. Saxophonist Dash steps out front to back up the combo. The group has solid rhythm and is highly actional, but diction leaves something to be desired.

Palace, N. Y.

Harrison & Patricia Muller, Senor Cortez, Tommy Hanlon, Jr. (2), Sharkey the Wonder Seal, Frank Richardson, Dolinoff & Raya Sisters (4), Frank Ross & Anita La Pierre, Tokayer Troupe (7), Jo Lombardi House Orch; "Hurricane Smith" (Par), reviewed in VARIETY Sept. 17, '52.

This corking bill diffuses a nice blend of song, dance, comedy and novelty. Most of them are standard turns inclusive of a couple of names known to the regular variety clientele. The pace is even and pleasant.

At show caught, the closing teeterboard septet, Tokayer Troupe of six Danes and a dame, brought the display to its highest point, eliciting stomps and whistles. Group is further described under New Acts. Next-to-closing spot is wrapped up solidly by Frank Ross & Anita La Pierre in his admixture of instrumental impressions via his vocal chords and his statuesque partner's Gallic-accented pipings. The big mitt is for their duet on "St. Louis Blues"—or what passes for pairing in their zany rendition. A good team.

Doniloff & Raya Sisters punch up the sixth slot with their black-light dance illusions preceded by acroterping that encases a wedding as cute fillip. Of course, it's the aerial "tour" jete that builds for the peak score, with a special bow to the Jo Lombardi house orch backing in the whole inning.

Show clicks from teeoff via dance-a-log of Harrison & Patricia Muller (New Acts) and deuces with Senor Cortez. Colorfully garbed Latino is sock on the mandolin, running the course from pops to boogwoog to gypsy, both straight and trick, including a stint while holding the plucker behind his back. He breezes through "Hora Staccato" and other items with authority.

Tommy Hanlon, Jr., treys genially in his patter that's spliced with an offstage bell interruption of his salesman's gag, and wins with his standard guillotine bit that recruits member of aud to undergo slicing. The nice nonsense has gal looker, "Murphy," as poker-faced, irrepressible aide. He's followed by the best in its line, Mark Huling's Sharkey, aptly billed Wonder Seal, paced through terrific carrying and musical tricks.

Veteran singer Frank Richardson, a name of the '20s-'30s, goes back to personalized memory lane for his facile pitch. He can still reach those high whiskey notes characteristic of his era. By the time he gets around to his 1916 participation in Welch's Minstrels with a lusty "Shine" and cane and skimmer cakewalk—and looking mighty youthful besides—he's in. "Birth of the Blues' has too much orch background for full effect. The house sends him off well.

Capitol, Wash.

Washington, Oct. 5.

Mel Torme (with Al Pellegrini), Jay Lawrence, Beverly Dennis, Lewis & Van; "Fearless Fagan" (M-G).

Though lineup, including headliner Mel Torme, seems to be having very little effect on b.o., those who do come stay to cheer current Capitol bill. At show caught, there were show-stopping possibilities in virtually every department of the four-act layout, and enthusiasm was well sustained throughout.

Mel Torme has a much more varied, better-paced act than during his last stint here. His gab is effective and he wraps up his tunes deftly. The foggy-voiced singer shows a flair for comedy and a sense of timing not previously noted here. His crooning is still more style than voice, but he socks across each number for good returns.

Torme tees off—and gets the galleries at once—with a novel version of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," then goes right to the femme heartstrings with "Along the Avenue." Brings out a scattering of squeals with "Do Not Forsake Me," then hits top stride with some takeoffs on pop singers doing his theme tune, "Blue Moon." Runs through styles of Como, Eckstine, Pinza, Sinatra and Ray with some good-humored ribbing and consistent effectiveness. Surprise ending consists of a turn on the drums, with accompanist-arranger Al Pellegrini getting a workout on the clarinet. The drumming is loud, appears to be skillful, and customers gobble it up.

Comic Jay Lawrence, fresh from Hollywood and a role in Paramount's "Stalag 17," clicks with his gentle humor and attractive footlight personality. His act is on the formless side and needs tightening up, but casual delivery and some good material help. Lampoons of changes important enough to become roadblocks to completion," he told the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis.

Levy asserted that much credit must go to distribution for the great effort it expended in the formulation of the plan. "The system could have been evolved only through sacrifice and compromise," he said. "These were brought to the conference table by all segments. It is these same elements that will solve all future problems that may develop as the system functions."

TOA, he added, is looking forward with great anticipation to the acceptance of the arbitration plan. He said its officers will tour the country to explain the system to its membership and to encourage exhibs to use it.

Levy also asserted that it seems certain that the proposed plan of conciliation will be accepted by the industry. "In conciliation and arbitration," he said, "the industry will have the tools to cut the stranglehold which debilitating legislation now has upon it, and, further, can look forward to the beginning of a much-needed era of better exhibitor-distributor relationships."

Capitol, Wash.

Cary Grant, Clark Gable and Gary Cooper are convincing and garner laughs in the right places. His zany whodunit analysis is good, but doesn't quite come across. Best bet is a fight report from the contradictory points of view of referee, commentator, and reporter Clem McCarthy. Builds from slow start to fine walkoff.

Sleeper of show is diminutive Beverly Dennis. Gal has a fast, offbeat kind of singing act, with imitations thrown in. Bouncy personality and fast pace of routine socks her across to show-stopping effect. From her opening song, a hodgepodge of introduction, personal history and takes on Lanza, Ethel Merman and Ray, she's in with the galleries. A narrative tune which might be called "We Went Up," or "The Saga of an Elevator Operator," is rib-tickling and top fare. Winds up with an imitation of a Sophie Tucker gab-song routine. The mob could have taken lots more of the same.

Lewis & Van make good openers with their routine of fast tapping. As usual, precision work on twin pair of miniature steps is best bet.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 3.

Al Martino, Radio Rogues (2), Edwards Bros. (3), The Holidays (3), Cleopatra & Co. (3), Jimmie Cameron, Archie Stone House Orch; "Paula" (Col) and "Marciano vs. Walcott" (RKO).

Backing up his disk successes, Al Martino gets across without difficulty on personality and dramatic delivery that shows plenty of vocal power. Youngster has a rousing voice and knows how to sell a song straight. Opens with "I'm Yours," then into "I Hear a Rhapsody," a tempo comedy switch to "Walkin' My Baby," a moody "Somewhere Along the Way" and a terrific begoff to his all-out "Here In My Heart." On top-note reaches, he was flatting on occasion when caught, but youngster was over big.

Stage bill is notable for its diversity in the vaude tradition, with every act over to top response. The three Holidays, in toppers, tails and walking sticks, commence the brisk proceedings with their "Puttin' on the Ritz" opener, complete with vocals, neat taps and challenges, plus concerted terping, an expert soft-shoe routine, novelty train effects, and a pony girls' burlesque for a finish that has the customers pounding for more.

The Edwards Bros. contribute further diversity with their triple acrobatics, plus four-high chair mounts on the table and daring hand-to-hand and foot catches. The Radio Rogues ditto in expert imitations, with slim Herbie Sells scoring on the vocal impressions of top pop singers and corpulent Jimmie Hollywood on his radio personalities, plus wham impressions of John L. Lewis and President Truman. The team is over to high returns.

Cleopatra & Co., girl magician in full stage with disappearing ducks and geese, hanky and cage tricks, trunk escapes and transformations, is clever on illusion. She should dress up an act that lacks showmanship on visual effect and delivery. Would be improved if the gal wore a simple gown instead of a gleaming and garish silver sheath and headdress intended to suggest a notion of the ancient Nile's top costuming.

Jimmie Cameron, as m.c., expertly knits the proceedings, with fine support to all acts from Archie Stone's house orch.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, Oct. 1.

Anne Shelton, Nat Jackley (assisted by Bill Thomson, Sammy Curtis, Dennis Murray, Tom Boden), Tommy Jover (with Raf, Pat & Julian), 5 Skyliners, Trio Olympiad, Sandow Sisters (2), Granger Bros. (2), Bobby Dowds Orch.

Vaude stanza here is up to good standard. Pleasing feature is that no passengers are carried on the entertaining bill, each act having some appeal that sends the customers out happy.

Headliner is Anne Shelton, British thrush now playing home dates prior to a return to the U.S. Chirper has melodious set of pipes that drone out the pop numbers to socko effect. In addition, she has much confidence at the mike. Stubholders who remember Miss Shelton in her younger days (and she's still a young performer) will have fond memories of a slim blonde gal who would contrast strongly with the matronly-looking femme of today.

Singer gives out with "Somewhere Along the Way" (which she recently waxed), "Kiss of Fire," "High Noon" and "Santa Maria" (another new Shelton etching). She registers well with comedy impersonation of a Scots lassie, a Lancashire (north of England) gal and a Cockney, respectively, singing "Come On-A My House." This is one of her best items.

Star winds up a 22-minute stanza with selections from pops of the past 20-30 years, being backed here by another act on the bill, the Five Skyliners. It's an effective finale to her act.

Nat Jackley, rubber-necked comic, scores solidly in crazy knockabout sketches. He is comedian of undoubted natural talent, having the ability to raise many yocks by the inflection of an eyelash or a series of mutterings. His agility with neck (a long one) and legs is tops, and he shuffles across the stage giraffe-style to clicko effect. Team of stooges assist in two entertaining sketches.

More comedy comes from Tommy Jover and family in another knockabout act that employs much comedy business and many novelty props. Two members of this act, Raf & Julian Jover, provide second-half act on their own. This features aerial antics at which both boys are adept, but their in-between patter is n.s.g.

Dignity of balancing is offered by Hungarian-born Trio Olympiad, who do statuesque posing and balancing in natural skins gilded with paint. Lighting effects are tricky here and add to general effectiveness of a good act.

Exciting work on the trapeze by two gals, the Sandow Sisters, and neat dancing by the two Granger Bros. in an away-from-the-rut opener round off satisfying vaude.

RKO's New Mgt.

released by the Stolkin associates last week, follows: "Problems that have plagued the industry as a whole for a long time, such as the use of television as a film outlet will be approached, analyzed, and determined with unprejudiced minds which will seek solutions looking to the future unbound by any dedication to the past, and such solutions which seem the best answer for the benefit of the corporation will be adopted. Speculation as to ultimate results of such approach is futile."

Exhib Uneasiness

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

Announced plan of the new owners of RKO to study TV as a possible outlet for films has intensified the feeling of uneasiness prevalent in both the picture and telepix industries, as it awaits more word on this from the new syndicate headed by prexy Ralph Stolkin. Both industries are uncomfortably aware that if the new board should decide to release the pix to teevee, the move may create chaos in pix and vidpix, as well as among exhibitors.

When Howard Hughes owned RKO it was reported he was offered as high as $8,000,000 for ~~the backlog from interests which~~ planned to funnel the pix to television, but that Hughes nixed the offer because of exhibitor opposition. Stolkin has said he does not plan to sell the pix to teevee, but this statement was made before the syndicate actually took over control of the plant.

Fear of exhibitor opposition plus free competition in the pix on TV has thus far provided the main barriers preventing release of major pix to video, but it's considered highly possible that if one of the majors paves the way, others may follow.

Another migraine for the filmmakers is the obvious fact that a preponderance of backlogs on the video mart means an automatic lowering in price per pic. Where a good feature film available to TV today is a rarity, and subsequently commands a respectable fee, an onrush of pix, no matter how good, inevitably means far less per pic from TV, which is already offering less than ever for "B" pix, since the video market is swamped with such product.

U. S. 'Pacific' Goes Over $3,250,000 Mark in Latest Pie-Cutting Tally

Operating profits on "South Pacific" for the five-week period ended Aug. 30 were $28,427 on a gross of $201,570 for the Broadway company and $78,210 on a gross of $269,546 for the touring edition. That brought the total earned profit to $1,521,474 for the original production and $1,748,170 for the road troupe.

After deducting $55,000 for contractual payments to Roger Rico, who was dropped last winter as co-star of the N. Y. cast, adding $236,146 income from licensing the title for commerical enterprises and subtracting $34,508 payments to Coast producer Edwin Lester as his stipulated 1% share, that left a total net of $3,416,283 on the overall operation.

As of last July 31, the total distributed profit was $3,195,021. The balance of $221,262 included $10,000 reserve advertising fund, $50,000 sinking fund and $160,554 available for distribution. No assets are tied up in bonds, as that obligation is assumed by co-producers Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, 2d.

The original "South Pacific" is currently in its 182d week at the Majestic, N. Y., and the touring version, currently playing the northwest, is in its 124th week. A London edition will be a year old next Nov. 1, and a fourth production opened Sept. 13 in Melbourne.

Anna Russell Longhair Takeoffs Wow Audience; Barn Package Prepped

Anna Russell, British concert comedienne, who last season in N. Y. smashed over in two appearances with her takeoffs on song styles, mostly longhair, apparently has now carved a definite niche for herself in Manhattan. Giving the first of two Gotham programs this season at Town Hall Sunday (5), she had the audience with her from the start, with every number in a long, varied program scoring heavily and keeping the laughs and howls rolling constantly.

Song satirist has another N. Y. concert booked for Dec. 12, and a tour of 35 cities set for this season. In addition, she's been signed as permanent member of the Fred Waring show on CBS-TV, starting Oct. 19, with the Waring spots set in between tour dates.

Miss Russell's management, Columbia Lecture Bureau, wants to switch the artist from longhair into legit, and is mapping a package for barns for next summer, hoping then to bring the show into a

'SUSPECTS' THRILLER IN PRE-TRYOUT REWRITE

"The Suspects," Agatha Christie thriller being produced by the Shuberts in association with Sherman S. Krellberg, is reportedly being rewritten by Russell Medcraft. The latter, a former Dramatists Guild member, is using the Shubert office to do the work.

The play, recently a hit in London under the title "The Hollow," is being staged by David Kentish. After tuneup engagements Friday-Saturday (10-11) in Princeton; Locust, Philly, Oct. 13-25, and the Plymouth, Boston, Oct. 27-Nov.8, it is due at the Booth, N.Y., week of Nov. 10.

Cast includes Henry Daniell, Nana Bryant, Joan Wetmore, Jeff Morrow and Joan Newell.

B'way's 'Consul' Shifts To Regular Opera Repertory

Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Consul," a Broadway hit two seasons ago, will join an American opera company's regular repertory for the first time, when the N. Y. City Opera Co. presents the opus at City Center tonight (Wed.).

Production will still have several Broadway ties. Menotti, who staged it himself originally, is again directing; Patricia Neway, who played the original lead, and Gloria Lane, who sang the Secretary, are repeating here; John Butler, choreographer for the Broadway show, is duplicating, and Thomas Schippers, who conducted "Consul" on Broadway, will baton tonight.

MITROPOULOS GETS BID FOR 'ELECTRA' PIT STINT

Dimitri Mitropoulos, known in this country as a conductor and pianist, may reveal himself in a third guise shortly, as composer. The Greek-born director of the N. Y. Philharmonic, who composed some incidental music for Sophocles' drama, "Electra," when a young man in Athens, may baton his music when the Greek National Theatre presents the Sophocles work in N. Y., at the Mark Hellinger Theatre, Nov. 19-23.

Katina Paxinou and Alexis Minotis, stars of the Greek legit troupe, are old friends of Mitropoulos, and extended him the batoning invite for their Gotham visit.

Motor 'Show Boat' Preems in Texas

Dallas, Oct. 7.

Premiere of St. John Terrell's Motor Music Circus production of "Show Boat" was staged here Saturday (4) on the State Fair of Texas midway, with 500 payees, at $1.20 top, on hand for the first show. Five shows will be staged on Saturdays and Sundays, with three performances nightly during the week. Show is set for the Texas expo's run, Oct. 4-19.

Special hour-long version of the Kern-Hammerstein classic has been specially adapted for the Motor Music Circus by director Robert C. Jarvis and Terrell, in collaboration with Oscar Hammerstein, 2d. Only one song, "Life Upon the Wicked Stage," has been deleted from the original production. Terrell's production has seven scenes, 15 musical numbers and features John Tyers, Evelyn Wyckoff, George Lipton, Helen Raymond, Eleanor Lutton, William C. Smith, Jack Blair and Robert Glenn.

Motor Music Circus is a canvas tent theatre, arena style, and consists of eight trailer trucks. Designed and patented by Terrell, tent seats 1,781. Majority of seats are folding metal chairs, anchored on sloping steel plates which are bedded by the trucks, parked in a square. This allows four sides for viewers under the umbrella tent, supported by two center poles. Round, raised area stage is bordered by folding canvas chairs at ground level. Overhead baby spots provide lighting, while suspended microphones pick up stage voices.

Ninth trailer truck houses the lighting system and also serves as general office and ticket wagon.

During the Texas expo run, Terrell is barking his show out front and adding his fire-eating act. "Show Boat" is scaled at 60c-$1.20.

Actress Continues to Be The Thing in Surprising Long-Run Village 'Summer'

For the past six months in Greenwich Village's arena theatre, Circle-in-the-Square, in N.Y., the actress instead of the play has been the thing. So much hullabaloo has been centered on Geraldine Page's performance in Tennessee Williams' "Summer and Smoke" that the Village roundhouse has been pulling in a clientele which previously had regarded an off-Broadway theatre as a precinct for semi-pros.

The long run of "Summer and Smoke," which incidentally folded on Broadway during the 1948-49 season despite the pro performance of Margaret Phillips, attests to Miss Page's powerful pull. Word-of-mouth, recent spread in Life mag, several TV dramatic assignments and unusual coverage by the New York dailies' first-stringers have all helped to bring 'em down to the 209-seater. And at a $3 top, too. Show resumed recently after a three-week summer vacation.

In the role of Williams' frustrated heroine, Miss Page makes a trip to the Circle-in-the-Square a

Pitt Playhouse Preps 'Lesson' Musical Preem

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.

Pittsburgh Playhouse has picked an original musical called "The Dancing Lesson," by G. Wood, for its third production of the season. Show will open a four-week run Nov. 13. Author is currently doing a nitery act in New York with Alice Ghostley, of "New Faces," but will come here for rehearsals and the run.

Wood, a graduate of the drama school at Carnegie Tech, where he authored several of the student-produced Scotch & Soda Club tuners, staged the choral arrangements and also played one of the two pianos for the last musical the Playhouse did, "Wonderful Good," in the spring.

Shuberts Drop Snipes in Hub

Boston, Oct. 14.

The Shubert theatres in Boston are abandoning bill-posting after a quarter of a century of maintaining a truck and crew of two men here.

Mike Kavanaugh, general manager for the Shuberts in Boston, says the theatres had an operating deficit of $2,500 for the snipe-truck last year. "None of the shows has any paper any more."

According to Kavanaugh, shows which would have ordered 50 24-sheets, and several hundred

Inside Stuff—Legit

Unannounced substitution of Vincent Price for Charles Laughton in "Don Juan in Hell" apparently burned drama editors in San Francisco, where the Paul Gregory presentation played last week. Price went into the Shaw reading cast for Monday night's (29) local opening, joining Charles Boyer, Cedric Hardwicke and Agnes Moorehead, all of whom continue from the original lineup. There had been no advance publicity and even the ads Sunday (28) listed Laughton, even though the latter had reportedly been set for months to play the role of Henry VIII in Metro's "Young Queen Bess," due to start shooting Oct. 2. The management has announced that Price will sub for Laughton only during the Frisco run, but it's understood he may continue indefinitely, at least for part of the forthcoming tour, during which Laughton has been billed as doing his solo readings from the classics.

Letter to backers of "Moon Is Blue," enclosing the latest accountant's statement on the show, contains the following paragraph: "These financial statements and the information herein contained are confidential and for the use only of the general partners and limited partners of The Moon Is Blue Co. You are, therefore, advised not to reveal the same to unauthorized persons. May we thank you in advance for your cooperation." Letter was signed by Richard Myers, co-producer of the show with Richard Aldrich.

Backers of John Huntington's production of "The Fig Leaf," comedy by John Gerstad and Norman Brooks, include the producer himself, $5,500; actor-director Elliott Nugent, Gerstad's father-in-law, $1,000; ad executive Emerson Foote, $1,000, and theatrical attorney Walter Liebman, representing an undisclosed client, $16,000. The production, capitalized at $25,000 with no provison for overcall, tried out last week at the Empress, St. Louis, then went to Chicago for a run. Huntington tested the play initially last summer at his Spa Theatre, Saratoga, N. Y.

With signing of Marian Burke to be Isabel Bigley's understudy in "Guys and Dolls," a pair of Pittsburghers are now holding down stand-in spots in the long-running Broadway hit. The other one is Sammy Schwartz, who fills for Sam Levene and has already played the Nathan Detroit role 28 times. Miss Burke got a chance to go on for a few performances last week, only a short time after joining the company, when Miss Bigley was ill. Schwartz, a former Pittsburgh Playhouse actor, is now in his second year as Levene's understudy.

Joe Shea, p.a. for touring "Mister Roberts," grabbed a lot of free space for that show in Pittsburgh, where it is now current at the Nixon Theatre, by advertising for a white goat to do a bit in the Joshua Logan-Thomas Heggen comedy. The ad got special coverage on the town's amusement pages and Nixon management was besieged by goat owners who wanted to get their animals up on the stage.

Kirstein Post Will Settle Some City Center Snarls; New Ballet Director Set

Election last week of Lincoln Kirstein, dance authority to the newly created post of managing director of the N. Y. City Center of Music & Drama, is seen solving several problems, as well as being a 10-strike for the Center. Kirstein, who will serve without pay, has been a prime mover in encouraging the development of ballet in America, and has been sparkplug in formation of the N. Y. City Ballet, now regarded generally as No. 1 ballet company in America.

There has been criticism of some Center policies, and some friction due to lack of a single head for the three departments of opera, ballet and legit. Some important directors have pulled out of the setup on this account. Kirstein has the faculty for winning support of other arts-and-civic-minded people, which should help City Center.

Financing remains as the main problem, and Kirstein will work together with Morton Baum, chairman of the executive committee, in this regard. The two have been close associates in the past. Center, though it has a nominal rent from the city, isn't a municipal venture, and has to raise its deficit financing privately. With admissions at a low, popular scale, this fund-raising is a constant endeavor, in which Baum has been the key figure. Kirstein's new position won't affect Baum's responsibilities, with the two likely to work closer on financing matters.

Two other interesting City Center appointments were also made last week. Julius Fleischmann, art patron and legit producer (he's associated in presentation of the current Broadway hit, "Moon Is Blue"), was elected a member of the City Center board. Lew Christensen, director of the San Francisco Ballet, was appointed administrative director of the N. Y. City Ballet, under George Balanchine, troupe's artistic director. Christensen will not only be in direct charge of the troupe but also stage works of his own.

Mgrs. Riled at Stagehands' Rule On Markings; Ups Rehearsal Cost

How steadily increasing union restrictions are progressively raising theatrical production costs was demonstrated last week in the case of an incoming Broadway show, "The Climate of Eden." The Moss Hart play was hit by a stagehand union rule adopted about two years ago, and in this case it boosted one item in the budget from about $30 to over $300.

The regulation requires that a stagehand must be used for marking the stage for rehearsals, a duty formerly handled by the stage manager. The procedure is to mark on the stage floor with chalk the locations of scenery, furniture, etc., so the actors will be accustomed to playing in the proper stage area. Stagehand rules already make it so expensive to rehearse in the full setting with furniture and props, that it's now practically never done.

Under the old setup, with the stage manager marking the stage, the job normally cost about $20-$30. But under the present system of having stagehands do the marking, plus the fact the Joseph M. Hyman-Bernard Hart production is a complicated one, the expense ran to about $315.

Sort of Inflation

This sort of inflation, multiplied time after time in all phases of a production, is regarded as one of the factors that has pushed production and operating costs to an almost prohibitive level. Moreover, managerial circles note, the stage-marking rule is merely a restrictive one that took a job away from one craftsman to make extra work and create employment for stagehands union members.

While the stage-marking rule was added to the last contract with the League of N.Y. Theatres and was thus officially accepted by management, other innovations are frequently a matter of interpretation, and are thus imposed without negotiation or even prior notice to producers. In such cases, it becomes a matter of precedent merely because one producer who cannot risk having his show closed and has no effective course of appeal, is forced to accept the new restriction and pay the added cost involved.

New 'Pay as You Go Plan' On Legit Subscriptions Now Being Tried in New Haven

By NED ARMSTRONG

New Haven, Oct. 7.

The big gimmick in show business these days is the plan to sell tickets by advance subscription. Now the Shubert Theatre in New Haven is trying a new angle—the "Pay As You Go Plan."

An initial mailing of 5,000 launched the effort last week here. The New Haven plan varies widely from all other subscription efforts now current.

No cash is required in advance from the theatre patron. The subscriber to the Shubert season merely indicates choice of seating location—orchestra, first or second balcony—and, according to manager Ben Witkin, agrees to pay for the tickets ordered to each attraction one week in advance of the play date.

"Pay As You Go" subscribers have the privilege of ordering extra tickets by priority rating for all shows before general window sale.

The plan, as outlined by Witkin, is actually one which has taken some years to perfect for the special problems faced by the Shubert Theatre. House is largely a tryout one. The changing schedule each

Carnegie Hall Ex-B.O. Man To Be Sentenced in Fraud

Walter C. Heck, who formerly operated the Carnegie Hall, N. Y., boxoffice as a concession, pleaded guilty in N. Y. Federal Court last week to defrauding the Government of $147,503 in admissions taxes. He'll be sentenced Oct. 16.

Heck was named in a 34-count indictment alleging he filed fraudulent tax returns monthly from February, 1947, to February, 1951, and paid $409,261 in excises instead of $556,764.

Wayne to Do Double-Duty In London Into January

London, Sept. 30.

Fredd Wayne, currently doubling between "South Pacific" and the Berkeley cabaret in London, is set to remain in England at least through next Jan. 12. His stay beyond that is dependent on Ministry of Labor renewal of his visitor permit.

U. S. actor, who succeeded Ray Walston as Luther Billis in the Rodgers-Hammerstein smash, has just been renewed at the Berkeley and will probably move soon to a larger cafe.

'Moon' Pays Off 325G in Profits

With the recent payment of a new $40,000 dividend, the total distributed profit on the original "Moon Is Blue" investment has reached $170,000 so far. That excludes $155,000 profit on the second edition and a break-even on the third.

The original venture was capitalized at $75,000, and it includes the touring version headed by David Niven, Diana Lynn and Murray Hamilton, which folded Saturday (4) in San Francisco. The second company was separately financed for $60,000 and the third for $50,000.

For the six weeks ended Sept. 6, the original company, currently in its 84th week at the Henry Miller, N. Y., had a net operating loss of $882 on a total gross of $48,343. For the same period, the Coast version earned $25,138 profit on a total gross of $124,303. That brought the total profit on the two-company operation to $188,447 as of Sept. 6. After deduction of $2,000 for bonds and $10,000 reserve, and payment of the $40,000 divvy, that left $6,447 available for distribution.

With the return of profitable boxoffice conditions on Broadway after the summer slump, the original "Moon" production will be continued indefinitely at the Henry Miller. However, new leads will presumably have to be brought in this fall, possibly David Niven and others of the Coast edition. That will probably be necessary because Barbara Bel Geddes, due to return soon after an extended vacation, is tentatively set to play the same part in the London edition, accompanied by Broadway co-stars Donald Cook and Barry Nelson.

Otto Preminger, who staged the F. Hugh Herbert comedy, planed to Europe recently with intention of arranging the London production, to be presented by Richard Aldrich and Richard Myers, who did the show in New York in association with Julius Fleischmann. They will be partnered with Gilbert Miller in the West End venture.

Piccadilly 'Show Plane' Prepped for U. S. Tourists

A sort of Piccadilly "show plane" is being offered by British Overseas Airways Corp. to U. S. travelers. The setup, announced in a recent ad in the N. Y. Times and due for repeat in dailies as far as the Coast, provides for a seven-day tour, including hotel rooms, nightly theatre tickets and an auto trip to Stratford-on-Avon, costs $73.

Times ad referred inquiries to the BOAC office in New York, received a number of calls the same day. Announcements in other cities will instruct that queries be mailed to the same spot. Entire project, which frankly seeks to capitalize on the bullish show business activity in London, is aimed to attract visitors to Britain in the off season, tie in with Coronation Year, and improve the dollar exchange situation.

Breen No Longhair

Berlin, Sept. 30.

Robert Breen, director and co-producer of the touring American, "Porgy and Bess" troupe, stunned local opera managers recently. With the Gershwin-Heyward folk opera a critical and popular smash here, Breen was approached about staging a classical opera.

"But I don't even like opera," he replied. "At least," he added, "not in its usual form."

Unusual 'Climate' Letter Lets Backers In On Why 75G Show Costs So Much

"Climate of Eden," new Moss Hart play being produced by Joseph M. Hyman and Bernard Hart, will probably have an operating nut of about $17,000-$18,000 and at a potential $31,500 capacity at the Martin Beck, N.Y., could possibly net around $8,000 a week and pay off in approximately 12 weeks. The venture is capitalized at $75,000 and the 20% overcall proviso will probably be exercised.

In an unusual letter to the backers last week, management outlined setup of the project. "We have made every effort to hold down costs of the show," statement said, "but the physical production is large and today's costs exceedingly high. We also had the unusual expense of a casting trip to England, fares and expenses from London and John Cromwell's transportation from California. In our judgment these steps were necessary in an effort to secure the best possible people for the play.

"Our preliminary estimates would indicate that the show will cost in the neighborhood of $60,000 to open out of town, exclusive of bonds, which will amount to about $15,000. The remainder of the cost will depend on how large a loss we have to take on the preliminary tour. In any event, it seems certain that the 20% overcall will have to be made. You will, of course, be so advised when we find it necessary."

The letter listed the cast, including Cromwell, Isobel, Elsom and three British players, Penelope Munday, Rosemary Harris and Lee Montague, plus Frederick Fox as designer, Jean Rosenthal as lighting director, Kenn Barr as costume designer, Trudi Rittman as composer of the incidental music, Moss Hart as stager, Al Goldin general manager, Bill Doll pressagent and Don Hershey stage manager.

The production tries out Oct. 9-11 at the Playhouse, Wilmington; Oct. 13-25 at the National, Washington; Oct. 27-Nov. 8 at the Forrest, Philly, and opens Nov. 13 on Broadway.

BEN STEIN VICE SMALL AS LEE SHUBERT ASST.

Ben Stein, formerly company manager and general manager for various Broadway shows, has joined the Shubert office as special assistant to Lee Shubert. The assignment, involving general duties, was formerly held by Jack Small. The latter has moved over to share with John Shubert the booking of Shubert theatres on Broadway and the road, both of which chores were until recently held by the late Elias Weinstock.

With Sam Gerson in ill health and reportedly on a part-time advisory basis in Chicago, the Shuberts have been seeking a replacement to head their operations there. No one has been hired as yet, however.

Sarah Lawrence Preps Drama Dept. Expansion

Bronxville, N.Y., Oct. 7.

Sarah Lawrence College is expanding its drama department this year with the opening of the new Sarah Lawrence Theatre, designed by Marcel Breuer. New faculty members on staff will include British actor-director Basil Langton, who will teach acting and directing, and Mrs. Helen Lauterer, teaching acting and costume design. Madalyn O'Shea, a faculty member since 1943, will have a year's leave of absence to do outside production work.

As part of the reorganization of the department, six men have been engaged to work with the students in play production and acting.

Authors League Makes 30G Profit On Two Legit Investment Pools

Authors League of America, beneficiary of two theatrical investment pools, has made nearly $30,000 profit on the arrangement. The two funds have been unusually fortunate in the choice of shows for investment.

Original venture, titled the Authors Investment Pool, had earned $10,440 for the League as of last Feb. 29, with shares in "South Pacific," "Detective Story," "Happy Time" and "Miss Liberty." Second venture, called the League Investment Pool, had netted the organization about $15,000 as of the same date, with shares in "King and I," "Guys and Dolls," "One Bright Day," "Point of No Return" and "Remains to Be Seen." The second pool has new investments in "Wish You Were Here" and "Climate of Eden."

Authors Investment Pool was formed by Arthur Schwartz, who conceived the plan, with Russel Crouse, Howard Lindsay, George S. Kaufman, Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers, Oscar Hammerstein 2d, Robert E. Sherwood, Moss Hart, Lillian Hellman, Edna Ferber, Howard Dietz, Elmer Rice and Laura Hobson. League Investment Pool included the same group plus Irving Brecher and Sidney Sheldon.

Under the setup, members of the pools buy $1,000 shares of selected shows with which they are associated. Although the participants, all ALA members, would gladly have let the organization keep the entire proceeds, they were advised that for tax purposes the split should be 60% to the League and 40% to the member contributing the share. Dividends totalling nearly $20,000 are being distributed in the next week or so. That will bring the profits to individuals to about 155% on their investments.

Strong Y&R Tinge To Spring B'way Prospect

"We Ride a White Donkey," comedy slated for Broadway production next spring, is a project of Young & Rubicam employees and alumni. Play is a dramatization of the novel of the same title by George Panetta, and is being produced by William C. Whitman. Both are commercial writers for the ad agency. Adaptation is by Ethel Gregory, formerly a commercial writer at the same outfit.

Production is budgeted at $60,000, but Whitman expects to capitalize the venture at $75,000. Ralph Alswang will probably design the scenery, but the director isn't set. Play doesn't require stars, but calls for three main leads and three secondary principals. Margo Jones once held the script, but dropped it.

Van Druten Billing Over 'Sixpence'

John van Druten will have billing above the title on his new comedy-drama, "I've Got Sixpence." The listing, the first such in his career, is at the suggestion and urging of the show's producers, Gertrude Macy and Walter Starcke. Idea, of course, is that the author's name is a boxoffice asset and should be played up.

Edmond O'Brien and Viveca Lindfors will get top billing as co-stars. Then will come the authors name, title of the play, names of Patricia Collinge and Vicki Cummings as featured players, then van Druten as director and Boris Aronson as designer.

Van Druten's record, one of the most successful among active author-stagers, goes back to "Young Woodley" in 1928 and includes such hits as "There's Always Juliet," "Distaff Side," "Old Acquaintance," "Voice of the Turtle," "I Remember Mama," 'Bell, Book and Candle," "King and I" (directed only) and last season's "I Am a Camera."

BALLET THEATRE SOCK $58,600 IN 2D N.Y. WEEK

Ballet Theatre looks to come out well in the black in its current N. Y. engagement at the Met Opera House. Last week, in eight performances Tuesday through Sunday (30-5), at a $4 top, troupe grossed a sock $58,600. Week before, in six shows, it took in $41,400. Current and final stanza looks even better.

Friday evening (3), troupe broke the Met house record at a $4 scale, with over $8,700, and the next night, without a guest star, passed its own mark with a $9,000-plus take.

Troupe will offer its annual American Composers Night tomorrow (Thurs.), when for the first time four composers will conduct their own scores as guests, Aaron Copland on "Billy the Kid," Leonard Bernstein for "Fancy Free," Virgil Thomson for "Harvest According" and Morton Gould for "Interplay."

Following Sunday's (12) finale, troupe sets out on its longest tour to date, starting Oct. 14 in White Plains, and hitting possibly 100 cities before end of April. William Fields is booking.

Prep Diaghilev Fest For Venice in 1954

To mark the 25th anni of the death of the noted ballet impresario, Serge Diaghilev, a Diaghilev Festival is being prepped for the summer of 1954 in Venice, where Diaghilev died in 1929.

Constance Hope, N.Y. publicist and manager, was in Venice this summer, and got municipal okay of the idea. Plan calls for various troupes with Diaghilev repertoire or dancers to participate. An international committee will be set up soon to prep details.

Shakespeare Reading Co., With Top Stars, Mulled As Academy Fund-Raiser

A Shakespeare reading company, somewhat similar to Paul Gregory's "Don Juan in Hell" troupe, is planned as a fund-raiser for the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre & Academy to be established at Fairfield, Conn. Idea, suggested by Brian Aherne, would be to have top stars booked for one-night dates in readings of scenes from "Hamlet," "Taming of the Shrew," "Macbeth," "Merchant of Venice," etc.

Scheme was presented to the executive committee of the American Shakespeare Festival Foundation which is planning the Fairfield project, aimed as a U. S. edition of Stratford-on-Avon, and spearheaded by Lawrence Langner, co-director of the Theatre Guild. It's figured that one-nighter readings by guest stars would hold production costs to a minimum and enable top names to make occasional appearances between regular assignments.

"Don Juan in Hell," co-starring Charles Boyer, Cedric Hardwicke, Agnes Moorehead and Vincent Price (the latter succeeded Charles Laughton last week in San Francisco) has been a boxoffice cleanup for two seasons, mostly in one-night dates.

STYNE MULLING NEW 'RILEY' MUSICAL TRY

"The Life of Riley," musical comedy which George Abbott scheduled for production several years ago and then dropped, is being mulled by Jule Styne. The latter supplied the songs for the show, with his collaborator at that time, Sammy Cahn, writing the lyrics and William Roos providing the book.

Styne reportedly is figuring on retaining the Roos story, originally titled "The Umpire's Daughter," but writing some new tunes and bringing in a different lyricist. He'd like to have the show staged by Abbott, who's providing a similar job on "In Any Language," the Edmond Beloin-Henry Garson comedy Styne and Abbott are co-producing, which is trying out on the road. Styne is also partnered with Leonard Key and Anthony B. Farrell in the revival of "Pal Joey," at the Broadhurst, N.Y.

Plays Abroad

Husbands Don't Count

London, Oct. 2.

Murray & Rossin, Ltd., production of comedy in three acts by Patricia Hollender, adapted from the French of Roger Ferdinand. Stars Dennis Price, Betty Paul. Directed by Andre Van Gyseghem. At the Winter Garden Theatre, London, Oct. 1, '52. $2 top.

If plays are to be adapted from the French, they should at least have the originality and the Gallic interest created by an Anouilh or Andre Roussin. The old bedroom farce has more than had its day on this side of the Channel, and this newcomer can scarcely lift itself out of this category. It has some bright lines, saucy situations and, competent players, but the sum total depicts just average entertainment, with a moderate chance of success here and even less in the U. S.

Scene is a barrister's apartment in Paris, where he has just been seduced by his wife's best friend. He is not only conscience stricken, but appalled at the duplicity of women, suspecting that his wife's devotion may be an artful facade to screen similar infidelities. When his confession to both injured parties is only received with incredulous laughter, he becomes moody and withdrawn, sowing the seed of suspicion into the minds of all.

A psychiatrist is finally called in and convinces him that the truth is never believed, and that he must readjust his life accordingly. All this is carried off with some bright quips, being earnestly and commendably delivered by the cast. The play is aided by the spirited direction of Andre Van Gyseghem.

Betty Paul has little opportunity to display her provocative personality as the erring wife, with Dennis Price holding most of the stage as her kiss-and-tell partner in sin, a role that he embroiders with dignified relish. His wife is played with a demure, patronizing air by Winifred Shotter while the other husband is breezily handled by Cyril Chamberlain. Elwyn Brook-Jones gives best performance of the supporting characters as an ebullient "doctor" with a leaning to kleptomania. Clem.

Zoe

Paris, Oct. 1.

Mireille Perrey & Maxime-Fabert production of comedy in three acts by Jean Marson. Staged by Christian-Gerard. Features Jean Marsan, Pierre Trabaud, Nicole Courcel, Paule Emanuele, Micheleine Gary, Jacqueline Jehanneuf. Sets, Blanche Van Parys and Robert Luchaire; costumes, Jeanne La Faurie. At Comedie-Wagram, Paris, Sept. 30, '52; $3 top.

"Zoe" is first hit of the new Paris season. A bright, saucy comedy, it is in for a long run here. French pix prospects are good and play might land on Broadway and London stages. Hollywood version is less likely, as moral censorship would intervene, but "Zoe" could be rearranged for an American pic. Author Jean Marsan, whose "In Four Corners" won the 1951 Tristan Bernard prize, plays a leading role in "Zoe" and registers as a good farce actor.
